READ IT AND WEEP

Longfellow could take a worthless piece of paper, write a poem on it and make it worth $65,000—

That is genius.

There are men who can write a few words on a piece of paper and make it worth a million dollars.—

That is capital.

A mechanic can take $5 worth of steel and make it into watch springs that will sell for $1,000—

That is skill.

Michael Rundaltzoff can take a fifty cent piece of canvas, paint a picture on it and make it worth $1,000—

That is art.

Our merchants can take a piece of goods that cost 75c and sell it for $1—

That is business.

We know a man who is so absent minded that he often thinks he forgot his watch, then takes it out to see if he has time to go back after it.—

That is awful.

There is another man who thinks he can get along without this paper and yet be successful and keep posted on current affairs.

That is just plain foolishness.

GLOOM CHASERS

HAPPILY MARRIED

They were talking about women friends.

"Do you see Emma often?" one inuirqed.

'Oh', yes, quite frequently," the other replied.

"Is she happily married?"

'Is she? I should think she is. Why, that girl is so happily married that she has to go to the theater for a good cry. "

SHORT MEASURE

Mirem Beechnut—Say, yo er the most gosh hanged buzz-bean editor I 'er heard tell of.

Editor Poduck— How so?

Hirem Beechnut—Wa'al, in last week's paper the department entitled " local intelligence" was only about two inchees long!"

HE BREATHED EASIER

Sybil—Father, the music master proposed this morning—

Father—What!

Sybil—That I should have three lessons a week.

QUESTIONS THE PROVERBS

"Pa, a man and his wife are one aren't they?"

"Yes, my son."

"Then it doesn't take two to make a quarrel, does it?"

INCOMPETENT

Dora—Harold isn't the kind of a man a girl wants to take her out motoring.

Flora—Indeed. Why, what does he do?

Dora—Drives, and nothing else but.

REARRANGEMENT NEEDED

In a New Orleans court a man was charged with abusing hs team and using loud and prfoane language. One of the witnesses was an old negro.

"Did the defendent use improper language while he was beating his horses?"

"Well, he talked mighty loud, suh.'

"Did he indulge in profanity?"

The witness seemed puzzled, so the lawyer put the question in another form.

"What I mean, Uncle, is did he use words that would be proper for a minister to use in his sermon?"

"Oh, yes, suh," said the od man with a grin, "but dey'd have to be 'ranged in diff'runt order.' "

CONDITIONS IMPROVED

The young subatern had but newly joined the regiment, and as this was his first experience in military life, he naturally felt awkward and afraid of doing the wrong thing. This was particuary the case in the mess, where he was amost afraid to move for fear of acting contrary to military ettiquette.

At last the major, rough but kindly at heart, took pty on him and, sapping him on the back said jovially:

"I suppose it's the old, old story —what? The fool of the family sent into the army." ?

"Oh, no, sir," replied the young man. "Things have quite altered since your day.

WHAT HE WANTED

He had just comfortably settled himself in the parlor with his arm around his sweetheart when her little brother came into the room and sat down.

"Here's a dime," said he to the boy. "Get yourself some candy."

"Don't want any candy," retorted the brother.

"Then here's a quarter; chase yourself."

"Don't want a quarter, either."

"Well, then, here's a dollar; go to a show."

Don't want to go to the show."

"Well, for cat's sake, what do you want?"

"I want to watch."

INQUISITIVE

"Rastus," began Sambo as the two were swapping war incidents, "wuz you ever sick when you wuz in France?"

"Oh, man!" responded Rastus, "I had the flu so bad Ah used to look in the casualty list every morning for mah own name.

Prominent People

Predict Smuts' Career Is Just Starting

General Jan Christian Smuts, premier of South Africa since 1919, and the most recent of the World war figures to be ousted from office, will not retire from public life, according to those in close touch with the general. Despite the overwhelming defeat of the South African party, predictions are that the man who has been honored by the greatest universities of the British empire is just beginning a new phase in his public career.

General Smuts is only fifty-four years old, and, in addition, is gifted with an iron constitution. His fall was due largely to circumstances over which he held no control. Particularly severe was the post-war slump in South Africa, with the farmers the greatest sufferers. Droughts and locusts added to their troubles, and when the government failed to cope with these there was created considerable discontent.

But the main reason for this fall must be sought in his unsympathetic attitude toward the workers in the strike of 1922. The mine workers honestly believed that the whole future of the white workers would be jeopardized by the chamber of mine's policy of employing colored workers in positions that were formerly held by white men. Their stand was therefore not quite selfish; they stood for maintenance of the color bar.

Mussolini's Iron Hand Loses Grip on Italy

Benito Mussolini no longer is dictator of Italy. Instead he is Benito Mussolini, premier of Italy, subject to the majority conviction of the people and to parliamentary opinion.

To all appearances this is the result of Italy's experiment, begun in October, 1922, when Mussolini entered the Eternal City at the head of 60,000 heavily armed Black Shirts, and ended June 10, 1924, when a group of outlaws in the name of Fascism kidnaped Matteotti, leader of the Moderate Socialists in the Italian chamber, and murdered him.

Mussolini, in the face of outraged public opinion, had two courses presented to him. The first was to put the soft pedal on the scandal, which led to the doors of some of his closest friends, and continue his dictatorship with an iron hand. This, in all probability, would have meant revolution. But with the attempted flight and eventual arrest of such men as Marinelli, secretary of the Fascist party; Rossi, former member of the quadrumvirate and chief of the ministerial press bureau, and Filippelli, editor of the "Corriere Italiano," the party organ, Mussolini faced the alternative of remaining Italy's dictator or becoming Italy's premier.

He chose the latter course. Since the day, when he addressed the senate Mussolini's prestige, which until June 10 had been maintained chiefly by the 300,000 men in the Fascisti militia, became far greater than ever.

Mahogany King Wills All to His "Backer"

When Gen. Clarence R. Edwards was merely Colonel Edwards, on duty in the Philippines, he befriended a civilian employee, one Joseph S. Schwartz. In those early days Schwartz was in great need of the "backing" Colonel Edwards could give.

Times have changed. Joseph Schwartz is now "Mahogany King" Schwartz, with vast holdings of highly valuable timber lands in San Domingo. When he was in Boston recently Mr. Schwartz called on General Edwards, who was awarded the Croix de Guerre with Palm after his ten-months' duty in front line trenches in defensive sectors of Chemin-des-Dames and Toul, Champagne-Marne defensive, Aisne-Marne defensive, St. Mihiel defensive, and Meuse-Argonne defensive—and told him that he (Schwartz) had made his will in his favor, leaving the daddy of the Yankee division all his worldly goods in case of his death.

"It was the least I could do," explained Mr. Schwartz to a reporter. "I haven't a chick or child in the world and I want General Edwards to have, in view of what he has done for me, anything and everything that I have when I pass away."

Mr. Schwartz is reported to be the owner of more than 50,000 acres in San Domingo, located on the seaboard and covered with a dense growth of valuable hardwoods, including mahogany and tobacco wood.

Fights to Save Big Trees of California

Mrs. John Dickinson Sherman, the new president of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, has paid a visit of inspection in northern California to the proposed Redwoods National park, which is believed necessary in order to save this worthy first-cousin of the Big Trees from extinction by lumbermen. Prominent among the many activities of the general federation is the conservation of natural resources, and Mrs. Sherman has long been its "guide, philosopher and friend"—official Washington calls her the "National Park Lady." She is now taking a long vacation in Tahosa House, her summer home at the foot of Longs Peak in Rocky Mountain National park.

The general federation has a nation-wide organization and 2,800,000 members in every nook and cranny of the country. It is nonpartisan and nonsectarian. It is easily the most powerful, both socially and politically, of the organizations of women and it would puzzle anyone to name an organization of men with as much influence. It was, for example, largely instrumental in securing the passage by congress at the last session of the resolution submitting the child labor amendment, the forestry act and the act establishing wild-life and fish reserves along the Upper Mississippi.

Mrs. Sherman is a director in half a dozen national organizations, an authority on parliamentary law and a ninth-generation American.

PICTURESQUE PEASANT GARB; ORNATE WITH HANDICRAFT

AS TO a league of nations fashion does not hesitate to form alliance with any country whose art and costume contributes "ideas" to the cause of modern dress design. Chinese art and colorings, Egyptian, East Indian, Spanish, the stylist plays no favorites, drawing on each or all for inspiration. Just now there is a wave of popularity for gypsy-like colorings, expressed in bandana-like prints and native embroideries.

OF MIDDLE-EUROPE ORIGIN

The peasant blouse, such as forms part of the picturesque country club or afternoon frock in this illustration, is of purely middle-Europe origin. Its embroidery is done by the peasantry itself, these finely-worked blouses having found their way to American fashion centers in great numbers. They are accorded a prominent place among summer modes.

There is a flavor of Spanish influence in the little bolero and the wide gracefully knotted sash. Rumor has it that the bolero is coming back into fashion and it is a fact that some of the advance fall suits show this tendency. Perhaps this is the outcome of the sleeveless vogue for the jacquette without sleeves is prominently featured this season.

Particularly does this costume illustrate the tendency to use two fabrics in the making. Outstanding among midsummer costumes are those which stress white with color. The fact that the broad sash ends are bordered with the same fabric as the bolero, which, by the way, is navy plaided crepe, relates the entire into an ensemble costume.

Bright silk prints are especially selected to combine with white or pongee solid shades. There is always a little coatee, perhaps in mandarin straight lines or sleeveless as some of the three-piece suits include. At any rate the same gay fabric used for the jacquette is repeated on the white one or two-piece dress, in preferably pieces of gay-colored felt in grotesque shapes. By the way, the latest news from Paris confirms the vogue for the felt shape trimmed in contrasting felt. In regard to the felt chapeau shown to the left above: It is very cleverly designed, in that a half circle is cut out from each side of the crown, falling at each side over the brim, forming a sort of wing effect. Novelty silver ribbon is inset so as to fill in the open spaces at each side of the crown, with a finish of ribbon binding. A cravat of the ribbon encircles the crown and colorful wooden beads contribute their share of charm.

Slashing felt is a favorite treatment and its effectiveness is demonstrated in two models here shown. In the one instance rows of ribbon are run in and out in checkerboard design and in the other drapes of soft silk are inter-run through the slashes.

Square nailheads in Oriental shades together with chenille embroidery can be used to advantage in trimming felt hats. Or, if one is clever with the needle, a chrysanthemum pattern in the off-the-face felt shape in lower right-hand corner.

Wee cubes of shiny brown galalith are placed in geometric pattern on the hat to the left.

Notice its high crown, for this foretells the fall millinery tendency.

The pure white felt cloche is much in evidence with summer costumes. Sometimes ornate handwork carried out in the pure white adds to its attractiveness.

Interesting Items Gathered From all Parts of Iowa

A big exhibit, showing the handicraft of inmates of Iowa's 15 institutions and demonstrating how the men, women, boys and girls confined to them, put in their time, will be a feature of the educational department of this year's Iowa state fair.

Melba 15th of Darbalara, a Milking Shorthorn cow, has made on three milkings a day in 365 days, official record, 32,522 pounds of milk and 1,614 pounds of butter fat, announces the Milking Shorthorn society of Independence, Iowa. It makes Melba the champion of the world.

Nearly $140,000 in premiums and prizes fill be awarded winners of various contests at this year's state fair according to the complete list of premiums announced by the fair management. The exact total is $137,962.25. This is $14,847 larger than last year's prize list. The increased amount embraces practically every department in the exposition.

The outstanding purpose of the State Experiment Station is to study important agricultural problems of special interest to Iowa farmers, report the results of these investigations in bulletins, circulars and other publications, and finally to render helpful service to the agriculture of the state by means of written and verbal answers to questions which are submitted to the staff by the thousands, each year.

The Page County Farm bureau is conducting an active campaign to sign up all farmers in the county to use nothing but purebred sires on their farms. Many farmers are signing an agreement with the United States department of agriculture to continue using nothing but purebred sires and in return they are enrolled with the department at Washington, receiving a farm display sign advertising to the public that they use exclusively purebred sires.

Dr. L. H. Pammel, head of the botany department, and Dr. C. J. Drake, head of the entomology department at Iowa State College, will be instructors at the American School of Wild Life Protection, which will be held from August 3 to 15 at McGregor. McGregor is located in the hills along the Mississippi river an dis considered one of the prettiest sections of the state. A bill recently has been placed before congress, providing for the creation of a national park at this place.

With every crop some woman's dream is sown; with every rain some wife's tears fall; with every drought some mothers' hopes are blasted. But through hardship and adversity the women work on; faithful, devoted, untiring, often poor and forgotten, offering their youth and their lives as sacrifice to hard-work, worry and neglect, rarely appreciated, never paid, and seldom praised. The small farmer's wife is the greatest of all heroines. She contributes more and gets less from her country than any other citizen.

Iowa legislators will probably have more to do than adopt the new Iowa code, when they convene to set the final date for adjournment. Here are some of the things likely to take up their time: 1—Ratification or rejection of the child labor amendment to the federal constitution. 2—Approval of Governor Kendall's appointments to the state budget board. 3—Disposition of a number of new prison labor contracts recently entered into. 4—Changed and revisions in the new code and new budget law to make them workable.

The road to the lakes north of Spencer has been treated with a coat of calcium chloride adding greatly to the comfort of the many thousands of people who pass over it. When finished the road will be treated to where the Dickinson county pavement begins. A sample stretch of road was treated last year and proved satisfactory. The chemical attracts the moisture and the road appears to have been freshly sprinkled at all times. Hereafter there will be no dust for tourists after leaving Spencer until passing Milford.

The Iowa mine workers certainly are entitled to a sympathic audience when they make their plea for the purchase of more Iowa coal in the home market. There are many thousands of Iowans who depend for their living upon the coal mining industry. Any shut-down of the mines, due to falling off of the demand for Iowa coal, brings distress to the mining communities. The miners approach the subject from a broad and unselfish standpoint. They offer some suggestions on the use of Iowa coal as a matter of economy and they refer to the importance of keeping money in circulation in the home market.

Des Moines public health nurses are fighting bravely to bring the city's babies to a stage of health that will help them to resist the dangers sure to come when the hot weather breaks upon us, as it must break within a short time.

Iowa wives are more faithful than their husbands or else less bold. The June report for the Humane society shows that in June four husbands deserted their wives while only one wife left her husband. The society in June treated cases involving fifty-seven families, and reported on 346 cases involving animals.

REMARKABLE RECOVERY OF MRS. SPINK

Gives Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Full Credit

Winn. Junc., Wis.—"I was under treatment, but nothing seemed to help me, and I was run-down and so weak that I had to remain in bed much of the time and was like an invalid. I had pains in my abdomen and in the female organs, and my stomach bothered me. My husband saw Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound advertised, thought it must be good, and brought it home to me and advised me to try it. After taking one bottle I was able to eat, and after six bottles I was doing my own work, which I hadn't been able to do for years. I have a new baby who is doing nicely, and I am still taking the Vegetable Compound and feeling better than I have for four years. CHAPTER XVII—Continued.

"Has Texie Colin passed the gate t'day, Uncle Asbury?—you know 'er, don't y'u?"

"Ol' Sime Colin's da'ter—the purty leetle gal wi' the brown hair an' laughin' eyes—well, I reckon I do know 'er. No, she hain't passed the gate t'day, nary way—why?"

"Oh—she rid up this way—"

"Did she?—no, she didn't pass." He hobbled a step closer. "Ol Sime hac t' let loose at last, didn't 'e? Dern shame, though, 'e had t' be bumped off. Reckon they ain't found the feller yit that done it?"

The woodsman made no reply. It is even doubtful if he heard. His mind was flying fast from point to point of every possibility that lay between Black rock and the tollgate. He washed the froth off Graylock's nose; tightened the saddle girth; paid his toll and mounted.

"Thanks f'r the drink, Uncle Asbury."

"I don't make no business o' waterin' hosses," the old man called after him as he rode away, "but a boss like that—he's welcome t' drink the well dry."

The concealed house-boat—the woodsman pondered the significance of it; the possibilities of it; the horrible threat of it as he galloped down the road.

He glanced at the sun—within half an hour of the tree-tops. He had blundered—Hopkins had just undercut him—but maybe the light would hold to redeem the blunder. His jaw tightened and he gave Graylock the rein, closely scanning every inch of the road—and every foot of river—that came into view as he passed.

Two miles above Black rock, just where a by-road, a mere wagon track, led off across the wooded bottoms, he found what he was looking for—a mass of horse tracks, with a print or two of a boot heel that he knew.

His lips twisted into a hard grin; tightened till they squeezed every mite of mirth out of it. He had lost the trail; like a hound at fault, had actually run by it—and here it lay, right where he had crossed it hours before.

He had been bending low in the saddle. He straightened and rode cautiously down the by-road through the dank and dismal bottoms. Where the narrow by-road approached Mud haul he again found what he was looking for—Brownie hitched to a tree, restless and prancing from side to side.

Hiding Graylock in a thicket, he unbuttoned his blouse, loosened his revolver in its holster and crept down the mucky bank toward the hiding-place of the houseboat; crawled close to its lurking place—it was gone.

He came out of the bushes and found where the gangplank had freshly scarred the mud; searched the shore for footprints; found them—the marks of a shapely small shoe, and the print of a stylish boot heel.

A speck of color caught his eye near the scar of the gangplank—a spot of gold on the dank mud. He stepped forward and bent over it. The next moment he had snatched up something and stood gazing at it—a yellow orchid, flattened and faded, in all likelihood the very one he had found for her the Friday before—lady slipper day. Over the man's fine face spread a light that transfigured it.

But there was a task calling—tense; insistent; mayhap horrible. Taking out his pocketbook, he put the flower carefully away; frowned hard down the river shore.

Knowing that the narrow by-road led through the wooded flats almost to Alpine island, angled sharply and crossed to the bluffs something more than a mile above Black rock, he went back to Graylock, left Brownie prancing and pawing the weeds, and rode cautiously on down the river.

Just short of the point where the narrow road angled toward the bluffs, he again hid Graylock, went on afoot some distance farther and stole through the trees to the river bank.

Creeping down to the edge of the water, with a caution so great that a crane wading a rod or two below failed to take the alarm, Jack crawled out among the limbs of a cottonwood that had uprooted and lopped over the stream and peered down the sides of the island, lying less than two hundred yards below.

A short distance down the south side, almost completely hidden among the willows and riding at the end of a rope hitched to a tree on the bank, lay a small houseboat with a skiff tied at its side—unmistakably the same tiny craft that had found concealment at the head of Mud haul.

The woodsman was just stealing back through the limbs of the cottonwood, with the bold intention of creeping farther down the bank and swimming out to the island, when a man came out of the snug little cabin, carefully closed the door, fumbled a while as if locking it and stood on the diminutive forward deck looking guardedly about.

There was no mistaking the somber frock coat, neck stock and high hat—it was Caleb Hopkins. A moment he stood listening at the door; glanced around again in every direction, and slipped over the side of the houseboat into the skiff.

As he rowed up around the head of the island and across the north channel to shore, he passed within less than fifty yards of where the woodsman lay concealed, his eyes hard and dangerous, his fingers betraying an almost irresistible inclination to stray toward the butt of the revolver at his hip.

Drawing the skiff well in among the fringe of scrub willows, Hopkins glanced back in the direction of the houseboat, snarled out an impatient exclamation and set off across the bottoms. The woodsman rose and softly followed; shadowed him through the tangle of bushes and vines and fallen logs out to the River road; watched him cross, pick his way up the bluff and slip away among the trees of the upland.

The unguarded safe, the bundles of money under the floor of the cabin at the homestead, crossed the woodsman's mind. But there was a far higher stake in his tense thought just then than safes and bundles of money. The frock coat and high hat were no sooner well out of sight than he sprang up from where he lay in the thicket at the edge of the bottoms and hurried back to the skiff; slid it out from the willows and crossed the channel to the island. There he hid it again and slipped through the tangle of underbrush and driftwood to where he could get a view of the houseboat.

There reached him the dull sound of footfalls on the cabin floor, and the tiny craft rocked slightly as some one evidently crossed from side to side, but there was no sound of voices; from which he concluded that the unknown tenant was alone.

In the fast gathering shadows he crept to the edge of the island; crawled with extraordinary care under the hand rail to the diminutive forward deck.

The door he had watched Hopkins fumbling over he had locked—padlocked on the outside. He stood still and listened—some one was moving about inside the cabin, and a speck of light showed behind a narrow crack between the door and the jamb.

Very guardedly he crossed the deck and brought his eye close to the crack—it commanded a view of a narrow section of the room. A candle was alight somewhere at the side, and a shadow—one shadow—flitted about the floor. The shadow slid across the section that he could see; deepened; disappeared; and in its place—Texie.

She came to the door on the outside of which he was crouched and tugged at the latch, as she had probably done many times since being left a prisoner, but the stout padlocked hasp held firm. With an exclamation that held just a shade of petulance, she turned away.

He watched her till she passed out of range of the crevice—doubtless to sound the walls for some other means of escape.

But the narrow opening had told him what it heartened him much to know. He took a bullet from his pouch; flattened it between his teeth; with his powerful fingers forced it noiselessly into the keyhole of the padlock in such a way as to make it impossible to insert the key; jammed it so tight with the blade of his pocket knife that nothing short of a locksmith's tools could have dislodged it. Crawling along the gangway to the after deck, he rendered the padlock on the rear door equally useless; listened a moment to the quick restless steps inside; crawled under the hand rail to the bank and, with every precaution known to woodcraft to hide his trail, recrossed the island to the skiff.

He shoved the skiff into the water, rowed up around the head of the island, down the south channel and back to the house-boat. Fastening the skiff to the rail, he unhitched the rope from the willow on the bank; sprang lightly to the forward deck, being careful to keep out of range of the crevice between the door and jamb; picked up one of the two light poles with which such craft are propelled; pushed off; suffered the snug little vessel to catch the drift of the current and, being careful to keep well within the shadow of the willows, let it drift down the channel.

Far down toward the lower point of the island a narrow pocket gashed into the rather steep bank—a place well known to the woodsman. Carefully withdrawing the boat from the current as he approached, he deftly turned the prow; poled the little vessel into the slack water of the pocket and far up under the overhanging vines and branches, where it would likely escape anything short of the very closest scrutiny, either from land or water; hitched it securely to a tree on the bank; went back to the deck and stood listening.

The girl inside the cabin had repeatedly wrenched at the doors as the vessel drifted down the channel. Several times she had called the name of Hopkins, begging him to release her, doubtless believing it was he that set the boat adrift. To all this the woodsman had returned no answer.

She must have known when the boat stopped, must have heard the scrape of the limbs and vines as it was poled up into the pocket, for there followed an interval of silence. He could not resist the longing to steal once more to the narrow crevice where the bar of candle-light escaped. He brought his eye close; peeped within.

She was standing near the middle of the floor, listening intently and apparently in deep thought. As he watched, he saw a sudden light leap to her face and wake the wonder of her eyes. She crossed the floor; came close to the door and, with the caution of a woodcraft almost as fine as his own, softly called:

"Jack—!"

It took the utter sum of the man's resolution to keep still. He watched the wonder of her eyes transform to disappointment and despair; watched her stand clasping and unclasping the slim fingers of her shapely small hands.

One consideration alone restrained him from beating to fragments the disabled padlock and setting her free—right in that stout cabin, with its doors secured by jammed locks that could not be opened without breaking, securely hidden at the end of a covered trail, was the safest place in the Flatwoods for her just then. There would be hard faces and quick fingers in the red-roofed cottage that night.

But even so, it was the most difficult thing the big woodsman had ever tried to do in his life to turn away from that door and go back to the skiff.

With set and serious face he rowed up the channel, around the head of the island, across to the mainland and carefully stepped ashore; dropped both oars into the river; set the boat adrift; stood a moment watching it float away and, with extraordinary pains to hide his trail, hurried back to Graylock.

CHAPTER XVIII

In the Dead Night.

Twilight had long faded into dark, the hazy stars seeming only to intensify the deep gloom of the woods, when Jack Warhope returned to Black rock, coming in by way of the feedpens, and slipping the horses into the barn through the cattle sheds.

He crouched a long time on the kitchen step listening. No unusual sound disturbed the silence. Very carefully he fitted his key—the same that had come so near causing him trouble at the inquest—into the lock; guardedly turned it; worked the door slowly open; entered; softly closed and locked it.

Stealing across the floor, he made his way to the small office room where the papers and safe were kept.

He tiptoed behind the curtains that hung over the entrance to a closet under the stair in the sitting room and stood still, his ears strung for every sound that rode the night.

It couldn't have been short of midnight, and his mind had gone back to the house-boat, riding safe and secure in the pocket at Alpine island, when there came the sound for which his ears were straining—hands outside prying at the window of the west room.

He drew his revolver, cocked it and took a position so that he could see through the curtains without causing them to move.

There came a low sound of crumbling wood; the muffled slither of cracking glass; the soft grate of the sash as it was slowly raised; finally the creak of the window-sill and the faint swish of clothing as somebody crawled through. The sounds were repeated—one—no more.

PROFESSIONAL NURSE SAYS TANLAC HAS NO EQUAL

By reason of the fact that she speaks from her long experience as a professional nurse, the statement of Mrs. J. Clark of 415 Walsworth avenue, Oakland, Calif., will be of interest to all who are in need of an upbuilding tonic.

"In all my fifteen years' experience as a trained nurse," says Mrs. Clark's statement, "I never found the equal of Tanlac as a stomach medicine and tonic. Two years ago an attack of influenza left me without appetite and my stomach in such a bad fix that the little I did eat seemed to do me harm instead of good.

"Stomach pains would make me so weak I would feel right faint. The least exertion would completely exhaust me and six months before taking Tanlac I was so weak I had to hire my housework done. I was in bed most of the time for two months and was getting desperate.

"Tanlac was more than a match for my troubles and eight bottles left me feeling fine. I eat and sleep like a child and have energy and strength that makes life a pleasure. Tanlac is simply grand."

Tanlac is for sale by all good druggists. Accept no substitute. Over 40 million bottles sold.

HERE'S GOOD ONE

Girl Robs Youth Who "Saved" Her Life

Louisville, Ky.,— Ernest Jewell, 23, is advising young men to be very careful about the kind of a girl they rescue from drowning.

Jewell showed up at police headquarters, wearing a blanket and explained that a girl had made off with all his clothing, a $50 watch and $58 in cash.

He said he jumped into the river to rescue her from drowning and that afterwards she insisted he stop behind a fringe of bushes and undress, so that she could dry his clothes for him.

Jewell said he tossed over his clothes, money, watch, and all, and that if the girl had not thrown him a blanket he would probably would be waiting yet for his clothes to dry. —Hampton Chronicle.

OVERHAUL FLOCK NOW

Poultry Expert Tells How to Cull Poor Producers

Poultry raisers should cull out poor producers whenever they are noticed, since some hens will prove themselves to be poor layers nearly every month and the sooner they are removed the greater will be the profit. Toward the last of the summer, however the entire flock should be given a thoro inspection and nothing but the best hens should be left in the flock. W. H. Lapp, poultry extension specialist, Iowa State College, tells what to look for in culling out the poor producers:

Beak: good layer— short, stout, broad, well curver and faded in color; poor layer— long straight, pointed and yellow.

Comb: good layer— red and of good size; poor layer— undeveloped and pale.

Eyes: good layer— bright, alert and prominent; poor layer— dull and sunken.

Body: good layer— broad and uniform in width, especially across the back; poor layer— narrow, especially across the back, lacking in depth.

Breast: good layer—full and well developed; poor layer— undeveloped and sharp.

Legs: good layer— stout, placed directly beneath the bird, knee and hock points wide apadt and faded in color; poor layer— lang and stilt like or bending at the hocks, giving squatty appearance, and yellow in color.

Toes: good layer— straight, and toe nails worn; poor layer— long and toe nails sharp.

Vent: good layer— large, moist and faded; poor layer— yellow, dry and shrunken.

Pelvic Arch: good layer— large bones thin and pliable; poor layer— small bones. thck and course.

Abdomen: good layer— large, soft, smooth and of fine texture; poor layer— small, hard and coarse.

Molt: good layer— late and fast; poor layer— early and slow.

TO MISS FLAPPER

Blessing on thee, little dame,
Bare-back girl with knees the same,
With thy rollen, silken hose,
With thy short transparent clothes
With thy red lips, redden more,
Smeared with lipstick from a store,
And thy make-up on thy face,
And thy bobbed hair's jaunty grace,
From my heart I give thee joy—
Glad that I was born a boy.

THE VILLAGE BLACKSMITH

(1924 Model)

"Under an ad for gasoline
The village smithy stands;
He's agent for the Jinx machine
And several other brands.
He hasn't shod a horse for years,
For fear he'd soil his hands.

"He wears a gold watch on his wrist,
A pearl pin in his tie,
His links are made of amethyst,
The finest he could buy.
There's not a thing the smithy wears
That doesn't please the eye.

"Week in, week out, from morn till night he sees the autos come
With brakes not working right
And axles on the bum.
With gas, repairs and grease & oil
He makes a tidy sum.

"He has a staff of skilled men
That numbers twenty-four,
Who toil from six a. m. till ten
And sometimes even more.
The smithy never does a stroke—
He thinks that work's a bore.

"Oiling—refilling—repairing,
Onward through life he goes,
And never once despairing
So long as his income grows.
Each night the thot of someone done
Augments his sweet repose."

OLD CORN FOR SEED

It Will Be Needed Next Year, Says Expert

"I have seen a number of fine fields of corn in Iowa during the past week," says F. G. Churchill, farm crops specialist, Iowa State College, "but I would advise any farmer with old corn suitable for seed to save the same. At best there will be a good demand for seed corn of quality in the spring of 1925."

The present fair price for corn will tend to put most of the old corn on the market. It would be well to examine the crib corn carefully, and if necessary test a few ears for germination. Crib corn that will guarantee better than 80 per cent can be saved as seed corn with the prospect of realizing a fair profit next spring. By following the procedure the danger of seed corn shortage may be prevented.

CHAUTAQUA SAME CLASS AS CIRCUS OR BALL GAME

According to newspaper reports from towns who have put on chautauqua programs the past year most most of them report the chautauquas a financial failure. In most instances the guarantors have been forced to "dig down" to make up the deficit. Wells, Burt, Swea City Ledyard and Titonka all report this condition. Last week a representative of the Acme Chautauqua Company of Des Moines Ia., called on El more business men with the expectations of securing enough signers to stage a chautauqua here next summer. A chautauqua program is usually educational and has much to commend it to any community. But why should a chautauqua expect a guarantee when every other class of entertainment is made to stand on its own legs? A chautauqua should be in the samec lass with a picture show, a circus, or a baseball game. — Elmore Eye.

TIME TO DIG BULBS NOW

Planting in Fall Privides Flowers In Spring

Flower lovers should plant their bulbs this fall before Jack Frost steps in and puts an end to all planting, for it will be too late in the spring. Hyacinth, tulip, narcissus, daffadil and crocus bulbs will grow satisfactorily in any well drained Well rotted barnyard manure is the best fertizer. A common mistake is to use heavy applications of fresh horse manure. If well roted manure is not available, light applications of bone-meal may be substituted.

Planting depth varies with different bulbs and since this is important E. C. Voltz, floriculturist, Iowa State College, gives the directions for planting: Hyacinths, 5 inches deep and 6 to 8 inches apart; narcissi, 5 inches deep and 8 to 12 inches apart; tulips 4 inches deep and 5 to 6 inches apart; crocus ,scyllas and anemones, 3 inches deep and 2 to 3 inches apart.

If bulbs are to be used another season they should be left undisturbed until mid-summer or until they ripen. After ripening they should be dug and stored in a dry place until planting time in the fall. Most bulbs are perfectely hardy and may be left in place without renewing for several years.

TWO CARS TURN OVER ON NEW GRAVEL ROAD NORTH .. OF TOWN

Sunday afternoon at about 4:00 o'clock Dave Mollock and family of Garner were returning home in their Ford touring car when they met a car coming from the north on the newly graveled stretch of road opposite of the Joe & Aug. Schuldt farm a mile north of Klemme. Mr. Mollock, realizing that the gravel was loose and the road narrow on account of the gravel bank on the left side slowed up and pulled to the outside of the road, but he pulled out too far and his car slid off the high grade and turned up-side-down with the Mollock family pinned underneath. Luckily there were a lot of cars on the road and help arrived in a few minutes and the car was lifted off. Two of Mollock's little girls were injured somewhat as one had a bruised shoulder and the other a bruised knee. Mr. and Mrs. Mollock and their baby escaped uninjured.

The car top and windshield were broken but the car was in running order and Mollock drove it home.

Egg Truck Turns Over

Monday afternoon a Forest City Produce Truck met a similar fate in the same manner as the Mollock car the day before. The driver of the truck also misgaged the width of the road and skidded into the ditch, turning over and spilling a truck-load of eggs and several crates of chicken. The driver was not injured, nor was the truck damaged, but about a half truck load of eggs were nicely scrambled.

Eleven cities have grown into the 100,000 population class during the last year. Estimates of population of the principal cities of the country as of July 1, this year, show there are 79 having 100,000 inhabitants or more as compared with 68 last year. The Census bureau in calculate the population of smoe of the rapidly growing cities, such as Detroit, Los Angeles, Seattle, Denver, Akron, Bridgeport, Houston and Spokane. The population of the country on July 1 is estimated at 112,078,611.

It has been estimated that at least $1,000,000,000 has been added to the agricultural wealth of the United Statee as a result of the sensaional advance in grain values in a little more than a month. This advance has created more optimism among farmers, bankers and all other interests and is reflected in an increase in general business with a cheerful tone everywheere.

GARNER AND KLEMME BANDS TO SWITCH CONCERTS

Garner Band Will Play Concert Here Next Wednesday

As a number of the Klemme band boys are taking their summer vacation next week, it would be a rather difficult matter for the balance of the band to give a concert on the evening of Wednesday, Aug. 6th, so arrangements were made with the Garner Band to give a concert here on that date, next Wednesday night. Everybody come out and give them a hearty welcome.

Then on the 19th of August the Klemme Band will play a concert at Garner and we want all of you to come along.

Double Concerts To Be A Feature

At a later date a double concert will be given at both Garner and Klemme. Both of the Garner and Klemme Bands will play together at these concerts, making about a 35 piece band. This should be quite an attraction. Watch for further announcements of the double header.

RASPBERRIES MAKE GOOD MONEY

In the middle of July an inquisitive stranger was driving near the little village of Hanford, in Cerro Gordo county, Iowa. Noticing a woman picking raspberries in a farm yard he was passing, and remembering that the night before his wife had remarked that she would like some good raspberries, he drove in to see if he could buy some. He could and he did.

Being inquisitive he asked the woman—Mrs. G. S Renshaw, a few questions and learned these interesting facts: Their patch of red and black raspberries covers less than an acre of ground, and the plants are three and four years old. Red raspberries were bringing her thirty eight cents a quart that day. Last season they picked 12 crates of 36 pints, or 18 quarts, a day for over two weeks. Figuring 12 days and 12 crates a day at an avrage price of 30 cents per quart makes the tidy sum of $777 60.

The inquisitive party remarked that that made a very tidy little sum. To this remark Mrs. Renshaw replied that their berry crop brings them in a larger net income than the grain crops from the rest of the farm,—a quarter section of good level Iowa land.

They are enlarging their berry patch—naturally. Having a natural instinct and liking for gardening, they are branching out into other truck crops, as they live near a good sized city with a first class road all the way. In one corner of their farm was a low tract of muck land. They tile drained this tract last year. This season they have a fine patch of potatoes and celery on one part of it, and a good setting of asparagus on another part of it.

This little incident all goes to show that the farm income does not depend so much on how many acres are operated as it does on how much wealth is produced by the labor of the farm family.

The Iowa farmer's income this year is going to be the best since 1920 said Secretary of Agriculture Henry C. Wallace on his arrival in Des Moines for a short stay. "The farmers here ought to look for much better prices for their two main products, corn and hogs," the secretary said. MOB TARS AND FEATHERS GIRL

Maryland Crowd Led by Jealous Wife Beats Young Woman.

Frederick, Md.—Charged with the tarring and feathering of pretty twenty-one-year-old Dorothy Grandon, eight men and one woman have been bound over to the grand jury under bond of $2,000 each.

Dorothy, an unusually attractive girl with brown eyes and bobbed brown hair, was stripped and tarred by a mob of between 50 and 60 persons, most of them men, on the highway near Middletown, Md. The woman who was arrested, Mrs. Mary Shank, boldly admitted that she had led the mob, had beaten the Grandon girl, and had poured on the tar and feathers, because she said the girl had been "going with" her husband.

Dorothy Grandon, her body still covered with tar, was bound over under $500 bond as a material witness.

Fifty more business men, merchants and citizens of Myersville, face arrest as members of the mob. Sheriff Albaugh of Frederick county, after questioning the girl at the home of James Whip, a farmer, announced that warrants would be sworn out.

Whip was threatened with death because he rescued the girl from the mob. With J. O. Shepley, a Myersville merchant, Whip was attracted by the girl's screams. His home is near the scene of the assault. The two men ran up the road, fought their way through the mob and found the girl covered with tar.

Whip secured a sheet, wrapped it around her nude body, and carried her to his home. A doctor found her body covered with bruises. Mr. and Mrs. Whip could only remove part of the tar from the victim's body.

The youth then threw gravel at the occupants of the car.

ELEVATOR MERGER IS OPPOSED BY FARMERS

Say Its Merely Combination of Trade Interests.

Chicago.—That the contemplated merger of five of the largest grain elevator companies in the country is "simply a combination of grain trade interests and not in any sense of the word a co-operative marketing association of farmers" was the opinion voiced by a conference of wheat growers here. The conference, called by Frank O. Lowden, chairman of the national wheat growers' advisory committee, included representatives of the statewide wheat pools of Oklahoma, Texas, Indiana, and North Dakota and a number of leaders in the national co-operative movement.

Representatives of all the pooling associations present stated that in their opinion none of their associations would sell any grain through the proposed merger and that the farmers in their states would not purchase any stock in the undertaking.

A plan for the formation of a central exchange to handle the several pools' output of wheat was prepared at the meeting and was referred to the state associations for approval. Favorable action on the proposed national body which will unify the activities of the state pools and will push the wheat pooling plan into other states than those where it is now supported by the farmers, is expected from many unattached organizations, as well as from the four associations represented.

According to the account given the French Surgical society, the anesthesia is complete, permitting the longest and most serious operation. The patient remains plunged for twenty-four to thirty-six hours afterward in a torpor, from which, however, he can be aroused from time to time for food. Air service officers who have studied reports of the new machines assert that the new type can make a speed of about 120 miles an hour.

New York Drinks Million Bottles of Booze Daily

Washington.—If the present rate of rum running continues, nearly $500,000,000 worth of liquor will have been smuggled into the United States during 1924, it was estimated at the United States coast guard headquarters. Illegal liquor imports jumped from about 200,000 cases in May to over 1,000,000 cases in June. It is estimated that New York city alone consumes a million bottles of smuggled booze a day. This is one bottle to each six persons.

PLANES USED TO UNLOAD LIQUOR

Ships Loaded With Drugs and Aliens Join the Whisky Fleet.

New York.—A letter from a youth on the rum runner Rusk to his parents in Scotland, intercepted by customs authorities when they captured a motor boat loaded with 200 cases of liquor, revealed that ships loaded with drugs and aliens have joined the whisky fleet off the coast. The captured letter also disclosed that a seaplane makes six trips daily out to the rum runner Rusk, bringing in 19 cases of whisky on each trip. The letter will be sent to the authorities at Washington.

Robert Wylie, Jr., was writing to his parents in Glasgow. The letter was found on Captain Mastreet, skipper of the motor launch Bessie B., which was seized after a ten-mile chase off Rockaway beach. Captain Mastreet had been to the Rusk and had purchased the 200 cases found on his boat. He was to mail the letter for young Wylie.

"S. S. Rusk.—Dear Parents: This is a very exciting life out here. There are two boat loads of Chinese, Italians, Greeks, and so forth, all waiting to be smuggled into the states. There are also a couple of steamers loaded with heroin, morphine and cocaine, all of which is being smuggled in every day.

"We have a seaplane which comes out every day and takes 19 cases each trip. It makes an average of six trips a day. I'll have to close now as there are some customers alongside that I must attend to."

There followed the subdued shuffle of feet; the guarded scrape of a match; the flicker of a tardy candle. A dim light fell through the open door in a long splotch of yellow across the sitting room and the knob of the safe was softly turned. By some supersense that marvelously functions at such a moment, he knew when the door opened. Across the silence came the subdued crinkle of paper. The ripe instant had come.

Pushing the curtains aside, he left the closet. A board in the floor creaked as his weight came upon it. He stood perfectly still until the rattle of the paper told him the creaking board had not betrayed him; worked his way around the wall and peered past the door-jamb.

Two men were crouched by a shaded candle in front of the massive safe; on the floor lay several bundles of money and a number of loose bills.

Even in the dim light there was no mistaking them. That powerful figure with the swart face could be but one man in the world—Black Bogus. The pointed beard, the frock coat and neck stock, the tall hat on the floor, disclosed with equal positiveness the far more dangerous identity of the other—the formidable and mysterious man who called himself Caleb Hopkins—the third man of the mountain girl's warning.

Although the man creeping around the door-jamb made far less sound than the rattle of the money, yet Black Bogus caught the alarm; whirled on the instant, his hand at his hip.

Fate figures in split fractions at such a time—and the odds were two to one, with probably a third somewhere outside. The half haunting resemblance that had so puzzled the woodsman never seemed stronger than at that dangerous instant, but it meant death to falter. There was a bright flash in the candle-light; Black Bogus, a hideous grimace upon his truculent face, seemed to shrink together; the revolver that he had not had time to raise fell from his fingers; he pitched forward upon his face; lay still.

Before he struck the floor, almost before the bullet that finished forever his wild career had found its mark, Jack whirled his weapon upon the other man. His head had been deep in the safe—a fact that probably saved the woodsman's life. Like a viper out of his coil the head flew out of the safe, and with it—the ivory-handled six-gun.

But the split fraction of the instant had lost him the advantage. His weapon had hardly left its holster before it was shot out of his hand—pieces of the ivory butt flew about the room, and blood streamed from the shattered fingers that held it.

But Hopkins was not a coward. That, at least, could not be set down against him. Instead of leaping for the still open window, he sprang straight at Jack Warhope. The woodsman could have shot him down; instead, he jammed the revolver back into its holster and met the oncoming rush.

It was a battle the like of which the Flatwoods had never seen. No two such men can clash and come through unscathed. But it is doubtful if Hopkins at his best could have matched the tremendous strength and quickness and skill of the big woodsman. With his right hand shattered by the bullet, it soon became apparent that, for all the wild fury of his onset, he was fighting a losing battle. He realized it, and the despair bereft him of his caution. The woodsman realized it, too, kept his head, tightened his guard and watched for the opening that he knew was bound to come.

It came sooner than he thought. Hopkins, desperate and breathing thick, swung at the woodsman's head, but missed. The attempt had for the instant exposed his stomach, and the woodsman took advantage of it. The blow weakened Hopkins; he tottered, gasped, instinctively lowered his guard. Like lightning the woodsman swung his terrific right to the point of the bearded jaw, and Hopkins went down like a beef under the mallet.

But Loge Belden was still unaccounted for, a circumstance the woodsman had not forgotten that had puzzled him no little. Bruised and panting himself, he dragged Hopkins back of the safe out of range of the window—as it chanced, near the candle on the floor— and stood over him.

His heavy mass of black hair had fallen across his brow—amongst the black, one lock of glaring red. The woodsman snatched up the candle; bent closer and covered the lower part of the bearded face with his hand.

"My God!" he muttered—"the red lock—it's Ken."

He set the candle down; straightened; stood staring at the prostrate figure on the floor, for the moment swept beyond his habitual calm and poise. The transformation that the one lock of red wrought on the bearded face was unbelievable—cruel; sinister; brutal—as if the face of Red Colin, the old sea pirate, had sprung out of a long dead past.

The fallen man stirred, rattled his heels on the floor, moved his arms, sat up and stared about him. Suddenly aware of the hard eyes upon him, he hurriedly raised a hand and hastily brushed the mass of hair back into place.

"It ain't no use, Ken" came from the other side of the candle, "I seen it."

The man on the floor scrambled to his feet; glanced toward the window, at the candle within reach of his foot, as if meditating some desperate move; frowned at the shattered fingers; stiffened, leaned against the safe door.

"Well—?"

The old arrogant haughtiness that the woodsman remembered so well—that used to awe him, dominate him—was in the expressive monosyllable. But it didn't awe him now—it rasped him; crawled up through his blood and struck a spark from his eyes. He was a long time answering; when he did, it was with another question.

"What have y'u got t' say why I oughtn' t' hand y'u over t' Jerry Brown?"

"Not a d—n' thing, though I'd rather be pinched anywhere else in the world than here"—a shade of the haughtiness left his tones—"on account of—Sis."

The big woodsman winced—which the other, with his quick wits, just then strung to keenest pitch, doubtless noticed.

"Live while y'u may; t' h—l when y'u must—it's a game of chance anyhow, with the odds on the man with the quickest fingers. I've seen twenty-seven years of it—a game not worth the candle."

"It is if y'u play it square."

"Square," the other snarled, "a word the devil invented t' throw men off guard. There ain't any such word"—he hesitated, a softer light flitted across his expressive face—"except—in the Flatwoods."

The woodsman caught the transient softer light—an expression that in other days used so to win him.

"Then why not come back t' the—Flatwoods—?"

The other glanced down at the money on the floor; half lifted his face and covertly studied the man before him.

"Texie—she still b'lieves in y'u, and I ain't quite give up b'lievin' in y'u m'self. You was careful t' git—her"—his eyes were again drawn irresistibly toward the concealed house-boat—"out of danger t'night, and I 'low y'u never aimed t' hurt Pap Simon, and y'u ain't takin' away nothin' but what y'u brought. It would kill—her, if she knowed it was you that done—this"—he swept his hand toward the scattered money, the open safe, the dead robber; glanced in the direction of the churchyard, where lay a new-made grave—"and worse. You could go 'way—a while, and then come—back." He paused; his eyes hardened. "But the next time y'u've got t' come—clean."

The eyes of the other turned in every direction except toward the man addressing him. A moment of silence fell.

"Where's Belden?" Jack suddenly asked.

The other started; glanced at the open window—a bit uneasily, as it might have seemed.

"He didn't show up, that's all I know."

"Did they know who y'u—are?"

The man addressed glanced down at the huddled body on the floor; frowned in the direction of Eagle hollow.

"Cattle like them—h—l!"

The woodsman frowned at the words, but apparently decided to pass them over.

"Then—nobody needs t' know." He dropped a half-opened hand toward the body of the fallen robber. "He's enough t' satisfy Jerry Brown, and one more mark ag'in' 'im won't make no difference t' Black Bogus now."

Still watching the window, as well as the man leaning on the door of the safe, he picked up the ruins of the ivory-handled six-gun—being careful to hunt the pieces that had scattered about the room—and dropped them all into the pocket of his hunting blouse; lifted the tall hat from the floor and held it forth; motioned toward the open window.

The other took the hat; put it on with curious deliberation; stared hard at the scattered money; stepped around the body of his dead associate; crossed the floor and, closely followed by the woodsman, who still watched him narrowly, crawled through the window and stood in apparent stolidness, as if waiting to be told what to do next.

The woodsman, no little rankled that his offered clemency—an offer that had cost him much to make—had been received with cold, even haughty indifference, dropped to the ground behind him and stood a moment sounding the night. Except at Uncle Nick's, where Mrs. Curry probably lay tossing with anxiety, not a candle was alight. He closed the window and turned to the stolid figure in front of him.

"I'm givin' y'u time to warn Loge Belden off and take t' the woods—if y'u're quick. When I think the time's up, I'm aimin' t' fire off Pap Simon's shotgun and rouse the village. This house will be put under guard t'night, and t'morrow all that money will be took t' the city and put in the bank, where it ough' t' be'n long ago"—a thought of the mountain girl crying under the window the night before crossed his mind, and his voice grew crisp and cold— "and if y'u never come back, w'y, that'll be soon enough f'r me; but if y'u do, y'u've got t' come clean."

A black scowl swept the bearded face of the other; his eyes glared dangerously. Warhope—the bound boy—that he had committed the blunder of so vastly underrating! He half turned, a muttered oath on his lips; but mastered the outburst, and, with the air of a man who bowed to circumstances, strode across the yard, nursing his shattered hand and fumbling the elaborate frock coat about him.

All unknown to the woodsman there lay concealed in that same frock coat another weapon—a small single-shot pistol of heavy caliber that thugs of the underworld often carried, deadly at close range but inaccurate at a distance—a weapon that the men of the woods knew nothing about. At the brink of the yard, just where it dipped to the little park, he suddeny snatched it forth; whirled and fired.

Even with his right hand shattered and having to shoot with his left, with almost no light at all, the shot disclosed what he could have done with a real gun—the bullet scorched the woodsman's blouse and passed between his left arm and his side. The man crouched at the brink of the yard watched the success of the shot—his last desperate attempt—knew that it failed; swore, and dashed away up the path that led into the jaws of Eagle hollow.

It all occurred in the flick of an instant. Amazed at the treachery, the woodsman sprang out of the dim square of candle-light that fell through the window. He snatched out his re volver and was just straining a step in pursuit when, from somewhere in the yard behind him, there came a low cry—his name—so faint as to leave a doubt that he had heard. It froze him into a listening statue.

It came again—a woman's cry—borne upon the breath of the night. He would have known that voice among shouting thousands. He turned and bounded down the yard toward the gate.

Up from the gate she came, half-running, half-reeling, but before he could reach her she stopped, stood for a moment groping with her hands, drooped forward and fell with her face upon the grass.

PEOPLE TALKED ABOUT

Maj. Coupal New White House Physician

Maj. James F. Coupal of the Medical corps, United States army, is the new White House physician. He succeeds Brig. Gen. Charles E. Sawyer, who has resigned.

Major Coupal was summoned to the White House in the illness of Calvin Coolidge, Jr., the youngest son of the President, who passed away early in July, a victim of septic poisoning resulting from a blister on his foot.

The new White House physician formerly was curator of the Army Medical museum at Washington. He is an authority on bacteriology and pathology, and is president of the International Association of Medical Museums.

Major Coupal comes from Massachusetts, the home state of President Coolidge. He was born in Quincy, Mass., in 1884 and was graduated from Tufts college. He entered the Massachusetts National Guard in 1911 and remained in the regular army after the close of the World war.

Brigadier General Sawyer was called to active duty as physician to President Harding on March 12, 1921, the same day he was appointed a brigadier general in the Medical Reserve corps of the army. General Sawyer handed in his resignation in order that he might devote all his time to the Harding Memorial project, he announced.

She's Youngest Daughter of Revolution

Mrs. Angelina L. Avery of Willimantic, Conn., has the distinction of being the youngest living child of any soldier who served in the Revolutionary war. Her father, Solomon Loring of Hingham, Mass., was but a lad of fourteen years when he enlisted, serving as aide to Colonel Vost. Here he remained for two years, experiencing much active service. After the war he settled in Lebanon, Conn., and was married three times.

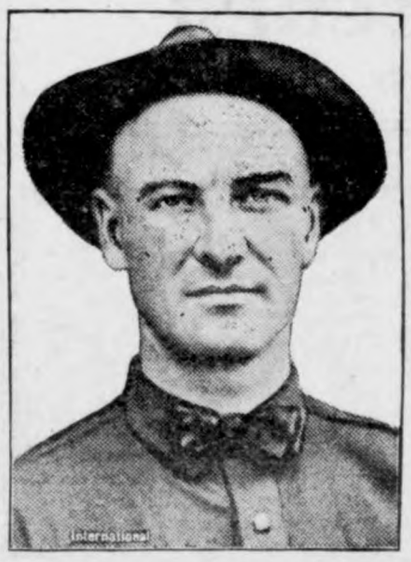
Mrs. Avery, his surviving daughter, was born on July 16, 1839. At that time the father was seventy-four. He died in 1842. His father also fought in the Revolution, serving eight years, dying in a prison ship after being captured by the British.

One of Mrs. Avery's greatest treasures is the hymn book her grandfather was using during service on Sunday morning in 1777 when he heard the drum beating "To arms!" Two hours later he was speeding on his way to Saratoga, N. Y., to enlist.

Mrs. Avery is one of the most interesting members of the little group of real Daughters of the American Revolution. She is honorary regent of the Willimantic chapter.

Mrs. Sarah Bosworth Bradway of Eastford, Conn., and Mrs. Abigail Strong of Morris, Ill., also have the distinction of being real Daughters of the Revolution. Mrs. Bradway, who is blind, celebrated her 109th birthday on April 30. Mrs. Strong is Illinois' last living Daughter of the Revolution and celebrated her 91st birthday this year.

Flees Turmoil in Rhode Island Senate



Arthur A. Sherman, Republican floor leader and president pro tempore of the Rhode Island senate, is one of the 21 Republican senators who have fled from their state and have found refuge at a mountain retreat at Rutland, Mass. Events leading up to their hurried leave-taking form one of the most interesting chapters in American politics, according to the opinions of observers.

Politics in Rhode Island had been at the boiling point since January 1. Then on June 17 the senate was plunged into the worst riot that ever occurred in the statehouse. A Democratic filibuster, initiated at the end of this free-for-all fight, was dramatically interrupted two days later, and the senate cleared of legislators by the sudden release of bromine gas fumes near the chair of the lieutenant governor. More than half of the members were temporarily incapacitated as a result of exhaustion following the 42-hour session, combined with the irritating effects of the gas fumes on the mucous membrane.

With only 14 senators present, the senate took a "recess," and almost immediately the Republican members left the state.

It is believed by many that the situation in Rhode Island may prove of national consequence in the coming election.

Mrs. Fairbank and George E. Brennan

The new list of the Democratic national committee members contains this: "Illinois—George E. Brennan and Mrs. Kellogg Fairbank." Democrats will tell you that the whole list contains no more interesting item—and it is quite possible that Republicans and LaFolletteites will agree with them. For George and Janet make an odd and efficient combination. George, for instance, is being hailed since the Democratic national convention as the "Big-Boss." But the Chicagoan is not in "Who's Who" or in the "Blue Book."

Janet Ayer Fairbank is the daughter of Benjamin F. Ayer, who was one of the leading lawyers of Chicago. She is a college graduate and one of Chicago's Four Hundred. She has made her mark in the literary world. In 1912 she was western chairman for women of the Progressive party; joined the Democratic party in 1917 and was a member of the executive committee of the Democratic national committee. In 1921 she was chairman of the women's committee in the successful coalition judicial campaign. She is vice chairman for Illinois of the Woodrow Wilson foundation. She is president of the board of directors of the Chicago Lying-in hospital. During the war she was a member of the Women's National Liberty Loan committee and was in all but five states, organizing and speaking. She is the author of a play entitled "Three Years More," and a novel, "The Cortlandts of Washington Square."

NO EXCEPTION

Stranger— What is the most prominent woman's club in this town?

Native— Same as any town—the rolling pin.

GOOD REASON

He— I like stuffed olives best.

She— Why?

"Yes sir, is he kicking?"

"Not as much as I am, Jimmie. He says they was almost hatched. But what I got t' say is, next time you go selling almost spring chickens at the price of a dozen of fresh eggs you get fired! Un'stand?"

DIFFICULT MATTER

She— I wouldn't marry you if we were the last two on earth.

He—Why not?

She— It would be too hard to get a divorce.

OUT OF JUICE

"Here, boy," said the wealthy motorist, "I want some gasoline, and please get a move on! You'll never get anywhere in the world unless you push. Push is essential. When I was young I pushed and that got me where I am."

"Well, guv-nor," replied the boy, "I reckon you'll have to push again, 'cause we ain't got a drop of gas in the place."—Black and Blue Jay.

THE RED LINE TRAIL

by Crittenden Marriott

NOT a western story, but a strange and thrilling combination of international intrigue and adventures on the sea. The author has in a singular degree the dramatic sense and the gift of narration. Although there are some latter-day pirates, a supposedly uninhabited island in the Atlantic and a mysterious chart, it is not a tale of buried treasure. That which the adventurers found on the island was more romantic and interesting than gold or jewels.

VIEW THE SCENERY

A Texas editor offers this: "There is good scenery at the railroad crossings. Stop and look around. You may see thec ars go by and have a chance to flirt with a lady passengen which may mean more to your family than flirting with death. "The advice is all right but most lady passengers today travel by auto.

THE SCANDAL MONGER

An exchange boils over with this little classic about the scandal monger: "After God had finished making the rattlesnake, the toad and the vampire, He had some awful substance left with which He made the scandal monger. A scandal monger is a two-legged animal with a cork screw soul, a water sogged brain and a combination backbone made of jelly and glue. Where other men have their hearts he carries a tumor of decayed principles. When the scandal monger comes down the street men turn their backs, the angels weep tears in heaven and the devil shuts the gates of hell to keep him out."

IN DAYS OF YORE

The days when the young fellow would drive old dobbin with one hand while sparking his best girl, is coming back to its own, they are driving the old Ford with the same amount of hands only from the opposite side. While driving nearly 200 miles last Sunday we were ahead of them, behind them and sometimes beside them and had an excellent opportunity to look over the situation. While old Dobbin perhaps kept to the road better than Henry, many of the cars performing with a zig zag movement, the young couples were seemingly unaware of any danger and the common married folk went by unnoticed. Our mind wondered back several years and the thought came to us that many of them might have inherited this faculty and that they are enjoying the present full as well as the parents did in the past.— Lakota Record.

RIPPLING RHYMES

I once was jealous of my rights, and sent up many ardent spiels; I said, "No everbearing wights can grind my face with tyrant heels."
And if encroachments then I saw, upon the rights I valued thus. I gnashed teeth and went to law, and kicked up an expensive fuss, indulgence in the law exhausts one's store of kopecks and bawbees; I always had to pay the costs, for justice doesn't grow on trees. And I made enemies of men who should have been among my friends; I watched my rights for years and then I said, "Here's where this folly ends. My sleepless vigilance shall cease, the rights I've guarded long may slide; the sweetest boon on earth is peace, and that to me is now denied. The neighbors I have often sued avoid me as I go my way and from their doorsteps I am shooed when I would pass the time o' day. They often kick my dog around until the night resounds with howls, they put my cow in yonder pound, they throw old bottles at my fowls. They spoil by hats with hurtling bricks, they throw dead tomcats at my door; and if I sue them for these tricks I'll queer myself some more." And so I sought no more the courts when rights dishonored made me fret, and found my neighbors dead game sports who were quite willing to forget. And now the atmosphere of peace is with me everywhere I roam; when I go forth with aunt and niece. no man attempts to punch my dome.

BUUSINESS IS CIVILIZATION

Certain types of politicians and college professors speak of business both large and small in a sort of apologetic manner.

Napoleon Bonaparte was a sort of progressive and advocated many advanced ideas but spoke contemptuously of the English people as "a nation of shop-keepers."

Socialists, communists, European doctrinaires and Carl Marx theorists scattered all over our country and big cities express contempt for Big Business and Business men.

Tillers of the soil, skilled mechanics and common laborers are all-im portant elements in a great nation of 110,000,000 people, but business men, organizers, managers, distributors, financiers and manufacturers are just as indespensible.

Without the business man the hand worker would supply his own needs only, and would live from hand to mouth in a very primitive form of civilization—one man bartering his work for another's.

Without security and stability there would be no big business or little business, no banking or transportation systems, no progress and no civilization.

In a leading editorial, "Liberty" calls all business one gigantic system of co-operation, national and international exchange and uniting of the world's energy and wealth to serve humanity.

The contempt of the radicals and doctrinaires for the business man is born of ignorance, no matter of what school of thought of political party.

OUR CENTRAL GIRL

I grab the phone and turn the crank and howl for two-six eight, and swear,. "By gosh, this service rank will make me one hour late.' Sometimes I don't pick up the book, but ask for Henry Jones and rattle at the dog-gone book with malice in my bones. When blizzards howl, I call John Brown, and swear some wicked words, when central says the line is down my blood just clots and burns. I say, just take my telephone and throw it in the creek.I wouldn't have it as a loan, your service makes be sick. And then I stop and think awhile, the service ain't so bad. It ought to make me glad to smile, instead of getting mad. A careful thought of service past, has proved beyond a doubt, my temper rises too blamed fast, I am too quick to shout. The girl who answers all my rings, has hundred's more like me and still she sweetly sings, "I'll put two-eight-three. Let us remember every time we give the crank a whirl, the one who serves us most sublime, is our own central girl.

TAXING BODIES WANT LAW REPEALED

Said to Be Expensive, Unworkable And not Favored by Taxing Bodies

Officials and taxing bodies in Kossuth county are petitioning the special legislature to repeal at once the state budget law. The petitioners want that part of the budget law repealed that has anything to do with county, school, city and township organizations for the reasons that it is unsatisfactory, unworkable expensive, and centralizes too much authority at the state capital. The budget system, at present, is costly for the reason that the printing and the exrta help is costing the state thousands of dollars that was not dreamed of when the law was passed. It takes a small army of employees at the state house to keep the machine greased and in good running order. The taxpayers of the state are paying the bills.

A copy of the petition follows—

We, the undersigned members of the certifying board of the Blank taxing district of Kossuth county, Iowa, acting in accordance with what we believed to the the general opinion of the above taxing district, hereby petition the Iowa legislative body for repeal of the new Iowa budget in regard to its relation to county, school, city, town and township municipalities, for the following reasons:

1. It does not show how any money can be saved by its operation.

2. The operation of the budget system will increase taxes for the following reasons.

a. It will be necessary for each taxing body to hold two or three extra meeting each year.

b. The cost of printing the proceedings in newspapers as required by law.

c. The number of state official forms that will be required to handle the law

e. The extra work and expense thrust upon all secretaries of taxing boards.

3. The budget system will create dissatisfaction in the local taxing bodies because it takes away the power from the local certifying board and tends to centralize the taxing powers at the state capitol, which is contrary to the vital principles which our forefathers fought for.

Before the passing of the local budget law, the law provided for a maximum levy for each taxing district and the various taxing boards could not then or cannot at the present time exceed such minimum levy.

LOVE'S HARD PATH

Combination That Was Too Much for Belinda.

How Was It Possible for Her Married Life to Be Happy After Such Warnings?

Of course one may not be superstitious, but circumstances alter cases, and sometimes the course of our lives, observes a New York Sun writer. Clarence met Belinda one day in March, which is rather early in the year for disturbances of the heart, but he fell hard and at the end of a week found himself still at her feet.

So one night in the darkness of the movies his hand sought hers and during a spirited burst of sound from the orchestra he asked her to marry him. She hesitated, as a shy young girl should, but something seemed to hold her tongue-tied as well. Suddenly light dawned, it was April 1. Well, he would not catch her that way, she thought, and said with sweet maidenly reserve that, of course, as she had not known him very long it would be better to discuss that a little later in their friendship. Clarence thought it might be wiser, and with apparent meekness acquiesced.

During the next ten days they saw each other frequently. Then one bright day Clarence appeared, his countenance radiating satisfaction, and presented her with a small package. On being opened it proved to be an engagement ring, a genuine diamond, which Clarence hastened to assure her of by scratching her initials on the window pane. Belinda was charmed indeed, but as her eyes half consciously sought the "Thoughts for Every Day" calendar hanging on the wall, she saw it was Friday the thirteenth. She was much troubled, but the ring was pretty, so she accepted it and the impulsive young man that accompanied it.

Then followed a four-weeks' engagement for the team of Clarence and Belinda. At the end of this time the young woman was still fond of the ring, but her affection for Clarence had received a decided chill.

One night as he was saying a fond farewell at the foot of her brownstone steps he asked her for the thousandth time if she still loved him, when suddenly a black object ran between his feet, and losing his balance, he fell backward upon the stairs, dragging Belinda with him.

Belinda tore the ring from her finger, thrust it at him and cried: "I can't marry you! You proposed to me on April Fool's day, you gave me the ring on Friday the thirteenth, you have spilled salt on the table three times this week, opened an umbrella before we were out of the house, a black cat ran across our path, and when you threw me down just now you broke the mirror in my vanity case. Good night!"

Madam, Your Age, Please.

A woman's age? The simplest thing in the world to find out! At least so Mr. Feri Felix Weiss, immigration inspector, says, though we are doubtful whether his methods succeeded every time. In his interesting book "The Sieve" he explains his methods; it is certainly amusing.

If a lady, he writes, refused to give me her age age, I told her I could guess it. Then with a woman's inborn curiosity she would make the mistake of asking me to do so; too late did she realize that she had walked into a trap.

I generally guessed about ten years older than she looked and might say, "Madam, you are about fifty-five years old."

"Oh, you horrid man!" would come the retort as a flash. "I am only forty!"

"Thank you, madam; that is all Uncle Sam wanted to know. Here is your landing ticket. Next!"—Youth's Companion.

Wished to Help Out.

Aunt Grace is teacher in a high school during the winter, and playground specialist in summer time, both jobs being necessary so that she can provide for her widowed sister and three little children. She has the admiration of her nieces on account of her accomplishments.

The other evening the older one said: "I'm going to be a teacher and playground woman both like Aunt Grace when I grow up."

The little one looked troubled. "Why, I was going to be that myself," she returned, "but now I reckon I'll have to be the sister with the children, so you can spend your money."

STRICT BUT JUST

How Royal Northwest Mounted Police Controlled Indians.

Small Force Did Wonderful Work In Patrolling and Keeping Order in Vast Territory.

For decades the mounted police of Canada have been the subject of unnumbered fiction stories. Such is the remarkable record of the force that there are many true stories about it that far outrival any work of fiction of the best writer's imagination.

When the monopoly of western Canada by the "Gentlemen Adventurers trading Into Hudson Bay"—better known to the world as the Hudson's Bay company—was bought from the company in 1869, an army of criminals, whisky smugglers, cattle rustlers and gunmen poured in from west of the Missouri river. The chief stamping grounds were in Alberta and Saskatchewan, and their main business was trading bad whisky to the Indians for furs.

To cope with these men, protect the Indians and few white settlers, the premier of Canada, Sir John A. Macdonald, decided on the formation of a body of guards who, as he put it, "would be without any gold lace." In May, 1873, the authorization of the Royal Northwest Mounted police was made by the house of commons.

Immediately 300 men were recruited in the city of Toronto, under Lieutenant Colonel French. From there they traveled by train to Fargo, N. D. This was then the end of steam locomotion to the great Northwest. With two field pieces and two mortars, this little army marched 800 miles from Fargo to Fort McLeod, Northwestern Territory, near the foothills of the Rockies, in the very heart of the Blackfeet Indian territory.

Yet the entire western region, comprising 500,000 square miles, was taken over by the mounted police without a gun being fired. The whole episode is one of the most remarkable in the history of the Canadian frontier. The first mounted police fort was completed at McLeod in 1874. In the same year a detachment pressed on to the country of the Wood Cree and Assiniboine Indians, and established a post at Fort Edmonton, 400 miles to the north. In 1875 Inspector Brisbois built a fort where the city of Calgary now stands. Regina, Saskatchewan, first known as Pile of Bones by reason of the great stakes of buffalo skeletons standing there in the early days, was made the headquarters. Regina retained the situation as headquarters until after the war, when the headquarters was moved to Ottawa.

Shortly following the massacre of General Custer in 1876, at the battle of the Little Big Horn, by the Sioux chief, Sitting Bull, the chief entered Canada with several hundred braves and attempted to stir the Canadian Indians to war.

Only the tact, diplomacy and that self-reliant bravery by which one man marches on and sways to his will a great number of men, as the mounted police did at this time and on hundreds of other occasions, prevented one of those terrible Indian wars which were so common during the early settlement of eastern Canada and the United States.

As it was, Sitting Bull and his band were handled without bloodshed. In the end they were escorted across the border by two constables. Perhaps the true secret of the success of the force with the Indians lay in the fact that the Indians had rights in the West, and whenever adjudicating cases where red men were concerned this fact was always to the fore with the police.

Gautier's Versatility.

Gautier was an extremely various and voluminous author. There cannot be many things in the visible world about which he did not say something—and generally something wise, memorable, and urbane—in the sixty volumes he wrote. But his principal achievement is fourfold—he was a novelist, a critic, a traveler, and a poet. In each of these departments he wrote some of the best things that have ever been written in French.

We suspect that Gautier's fame has suffered somewhat by reason of this very versatility. The world will not believe that a man can do more than one thing well; it insists on his being a specialist, restricted to one line of activity. If a man is naturally versatile, he always runs the risk of being classed as a dilettante; because he does many things, the public cannot conceive that he does any of them with supreme excellence.—Henry Bett in the London Quarterly Review.

Could Sing, but Wouldn't.

Civic pride and interest ran high recently when members of the congregation of a church in the southern part of Indianapolis held a social gathering. Mothers and fathers sat with pride while their offspring sang songs of various musical standards. The enthusiasm was not so pronounced among the boys and girls who were not participants in the program.

The crowning blow came when a group of little girls sang a childish Sunday school song in a manner that won a hearty applause from the audience.

The popularity of the girls was too much for a four-year-old boy, who said in a loud voice to a companion when the applause ceased:

"I know a song I could sing, but I won't."—Indianapolis News.

SUBMARINE YARNS IN BOOK BY SCOUT

The water gurgles with an unearthly gurgle overhead. Motors are humming aft. A chain rattles in the control room.

Within the tapering compartments of the gray-walled United States submarine all else is quiet. A strapping youth, seated on a three-legged stool, bends over a pad. And he writes away at wonder yarns for the kids who like real adventure on wave or in field or in air. Engaged in the most hazardous duty in the United States navy—service on a submarine—he doesn't think of that as adventure, but calls on his imagination for thrillers.

As he writes, his thoughts turn homeward to the children in the quiet homes across the sea. He thinks no more of his submarine which is running along submerged, scouting for the enemy lurking beneath the waves somewhere off the Irish coast.

Over in the mud of the trenches near Seicheprey, a young officer scans the lines of the enemy. He bears with honor on the battlefields of France a famous American fighting name.

Later the young chap in the submarine will publish a book. And the colonel will write a preface for it. For the lad in the submarine is Henry Beston; the colonel is Theodore Roosevelt.

The book, written by one faithful member of the American Legion and prefaced by the man who has been called the "Father of the American Legion," is ranked by Dr. John Tigert, United States commissioner of education, as one of the 20 best books for real American children.

"I knew that our wide-awake youngsters were sick of lollypop 'storykins for kiddikins' and bed-time tales," declared Beston who went down to the sea to do battle with the U-boat. "I felt that they were anxious for wonder tales told in the spirit of the sailor's yarns.

"I must have guessed right because Theodore Roosevelt encouraged me to keep on.

"You bet I am a Legionnaire," Comrade Beston continued. "I was a charter member of my post. I've been an officer in it. I believe in the Legion. It is the service man's best friend and is a growing force for good in American life."

All Claims Must Be on File Before January 1

Claims for all former service persons suffering from tuberculosis, neuro-psychiatric diseases, amoebic dysentery and encephalitis lethargica must be filed with the veterans' bureau prior to January 1, 1925, for presumptive service connection. Announcement to this effect has just been made by Watson B. Miller, chairman of the national rehabilitation committee of the American Legion, who states that claims should be filed through Legion posts or departments or with any office of the veterans' bureau.

Iowa Legion Men Set Pace for Many Others

Husbands outnumber bachelors nearly three to one in the Iowa department of the American Legion, according to statistics recently gathered by the Iowa Legionnaire. Sixty-five and four-tenths per cent of the Legionnaires own automobiles, and those few who haven't automobiles to get there in have radios that enable them to know what it's all about anyway. Eight thousand and more of them own radios. Enrolled in the Iowa department of the Legion are at least 50 per cent of all ex-service men in the state.

Community Building

Important Point Is Lighting of Streets

A town is known as much by the way its streets are lighted as by its homes, pavements and public buildings. A stranger arriving at night can form a very good estimate of the progressiveness and public spirit of the people by the kind of street lighting system used.

Progressive towns all over the country are putting in lighting standards of either the single or cluster-light types. For lighting parkways, boulevards and residential and business sections concrete lighting standards are most popular, for they have an ornamental value in the daytime, due to their clean, light, sparkling texture that adds greatly to the dignity and appearance of the town.

Concrete Lighting Standard.

Concrete lighting standards become stronger with age and do not rust, discolor or require paint. In smoky or very dirty sections the posts can easily be restored to their original luster by washing them with a dilute solution of muriatic acid.

Real Home Must Not Be Hastily Planned

The revival of interest in home building undoubtedly has brought with it questionable haste in selection of architecture as well as in construction, with the result that in many instances one is prompted to ask, "Is this a home or just a house?"

Cheap and hasty construction can never make a home serve the purpose for which it should be designed. A hastily selected house plan is, in most instances, a thing to repent. A dissatisfied home builder is anything but an asset to a community. Either he wants to sell his home or he thinks constantly of his mistakes, and does not derive the joy that should be his in such ownership.

Home building properly requires long planning. It is not a matter to be discussed today and placed in the hands of a contractor tomorrow. The investment is not only a heavy one for most people, but it is a peculiar one, in that sentiment and personal taste are to be satisfied if an enjoyable home is to result.

The livable home is the one which has not only been carefully planned by its occupants, but has been suitably fitted to its site and arranged in such a way as to conform to the mode of life of those who live within its walls, and at the same time expresses their taste and individuality. In other words, home building is an art, and no style of art is sound that does not express the life of the people who use it. —Marc N. Goodnow, Editor California Home Owner.

To Have Trees Grow

When planting trees the soil should be carefully worked around the roots with a pointed stick. No air spaces should be left, and it is as well to soak the soil around the roots so that the tree will stand firmly. Most trees should be planted two or three inches lower than they were in the nursery or the woodlot.

There can be no fixed rules for spacing trees. Along streets they will range from 30 to 80 feet apart, depending upon the variety used.

If the tree planter has not pruned his tree before he put it in the ground, it should be done immediately afterwards. Frequently there is too little rather than too much pruning at the top. The tree top should balance the root systems. Many tree planters find it best to remove all the side branches of the deciduous tree, leaving only the leader or main shoot.

Air Accidents Few

A total of more than 10,000 airplane flights from Clover field in twelve months resulted in only three accidents, according to the reports, and from this the argument is advanced that flying is safer than automobile riding, says an Associated Press dispatch from Santa Monica, California.

The reckless aviator and the stunt flyer are said to be responsible for the prevailing delusions about the danger of flying.

Consume Much Milk in Coffee and Tea

There are 3,000,000 coffee cows and 750,000 tea cows in the United States, according to dairy statisticians. That is to say, the quantity of milk and cream used in tea and coffee in the United States is equivalent to the production from that many cows.

Coffee consumption is around one billion pounds annually, or approximately forty billion cups. This requires forty billion ounces of cream, the milk equivalent of which is twelve and a half billion pounds, or practically one-eighth the total production of milk in the United States.

Consumption of tea in the United States is practically eighty-five million pounds, or approximately twenty-one billion cups. The quantity of cream used in tea averages only one-half that in coffee, or one-half ounce per cup, or a total in terms of milk of more than a billion pounds.

The survey also brings out the fact that 800,000,000 pounds of sugar a year, or one-tenth of the sugar consumed for all purposes in the United States, is used in coffee and tea.

ASTHMA AND HAY FEVER A GUARANTEED RELIEF

"I have arranged with all druggists here, as well as in all other towns of the U. S., that every sufferer from Asthma, Hay Fever, Bronchial Asthma or difficult breathing can try my treatment entirely at my risk," Dr. R. Schiffmann announces. He says: "Buy a package of my Asthmador, or cigarettes, try it, and if it does not afford you immediate relief, or if you do not find it the best remedy you have ever used, take it back to your druggist and he will return your money cheerfully, and without any question whatever. After seeing the grateful relief it has afforded in hundreds of cases, which had been considered incurable, and which had been given up in despair, I know what it will do. I am so sure that it will do the same with others that I am not afraid to guarantee it will relieve instantaneously. Certainly more positive proof can thus be demonstrated than a 'free sample' could possibly prove. Also sent on same guarantee, per parcel post, C. O. D., or on receipt of price, 65c, if not kept by your druggist, by addressing R. Schiffmann Co., 1734 N. Main, Los Angeles, Calif."—Adv.

But Far Removed

At the wedding anniversary of a railway magnate, one of the guests, noticing a somewhat lonely-looking and rather shabbily-attired man in a corner of the room, walked over to him.

"I was introduced to you," he said, "But I did not catch the name."

"My name," said the other, "is Swaddleford."

"Oh, then you are a relative of our host?"

"Yes," rejoined the "poor relation," "I am his cousin, one hundred thousand dollars removed."

Use of Locusts

Dreaded for generations as a serious plague, the swarms of locusts that sweep South Africa annually are now being looked upon by at least one industry as an asset. A factory has been established at Johannesburg to use locusts in the manufacture of concentrated cattle and poultry feeds. The raw material is almost inexhaustible and a large output is possible.

FOR MIDSUMMER COSTUME; INFORMAL DAYTIME WEAR

UP AND down, around and around, this way and that, in riotous color, thus do stripes play a spectacular part in the modes of the day. Some of the wash silks and fine dress flannels look as if the striped tents of Arabia or the Bedouin headscarfs of their native chiefs must have been the source of inspiration so exotic are their fascinating colors. Not less handsome are the Roman stripes which so gayly fly the Italian colors in our most fashionable scarfs, ribbons and silken fabrics. Even our own humble awnings bear the proud distinction of having their stripes copied by Madame Fashion. All of which goes to prove the popularity of stripes this season.

STRIPES PLAY IMPORTANT PART

The effectiveness of striped materials for midsummer frocks is set forth in the two smart summer models in the picture. Crepe de chine in varying stripes of blue, green and American Beauty is the chosen fabric for the gown on the seated figure.

The clever sports costume by its side is made of a camel's hair material striped in green, tan and blue.

Washable silks of shirting variety, especially accenting stripes, are greatly favored for blouses as well as one-piece frocks which in their making are simplicity itself. Many of these exploit lovely soft color combinations. There may be a stripe of bright color, narrower than the usual blazer, subdued by hairlines of some contrasting shade with perhaps black used between the gay colors.

Pastel striped tub silks define such exquisite combinations as pale green with white, the green stripes of graduated width; corn color on white, gray with white and in the striped materials black-and-white is especially good.

For informal dress models of striped silk are enhanced with lace and lingerie cuffs and collars with often cunning lace pockets. A patent leather belt, white or black, is worn with the frock of this description.

In making up the two-piece dress consisting of skirt and overblouse, it adds to the attractiveness to use the stripes horizontally in the blouse and vertically in the skirt.

Apropos of the fashion for stripes are sleeveless jacquettes made of bright striped fine flannel. The blazer stripes are particularly recommended for these. Bold red, blue, green and yellow on white feature in blazer-striped sportswear.

For every day and any day the silken frock remains the mode supreme. It has ever been thus. The soft rustle of silk has come down to us through the ages in poetry and prose which halo the days of "lavender and old lace" with tales of gentlewomen resplendent in grosgrain which "stands alone" or sweetly feminine in demure gray "surah."

In this age and generation it is canton crepe, flat crepe, taffeta, crepe-satin, faille, bengaline and hosts of novelty silk weaves which are making dress history which shall be read by posterity.

Years and years ago when "grandmamma was young" her "Sunday best" was trimmed in tucks and puffs, ruffling and shirring of the very same silk as the dress itself. In the fashions of today history repeats itself in terms of "self-trim." The smart present-day note in dress design is featured through intriguing plaiting, shirring, folding, cording, piping, and smocking.

We modernists differ from our revered ancestors in that we do not hold our silken frocks for "state occasions." We wear silk any day and every day, finding it the practical thing to do. Of course for informal daytime wear, we choose a conservative style, of which the model in the picture is a representative type. This pretty afternoon frock has its decorative scheme of flutings about skirt and sleeves, with shirrings at the waist worked out in material self-same as that of the dress itself. In the fullness of its skirt it emphasizes the fact that the bouffant silhouette is quite as fashionable as the straightline effects.

Speaking of the types of silk in fashion, the forecast for fall places special importance on bengaline and ribbed silks in general. These silks will be used not only for dresses but for coats especially.

Tucks, ranging from wide to pin, feature many of the frocks made of the smooth surfaced silks such as taffeta and flat crepe. Pin tucks are inset in panels and various motifs. A favorite employment of wider tucks is that of running them horizontally from neckline to hem of the fashionable tube silhouette dress. These straightline all-over tucked frocks fasten down one side of the front with a row of buttons supplemented with a plaited frill or cascade of lace traversing the opening from top to bottom.

SILK IS MODE SUPREME

Scorching Days in the Harvest Fields seem shorter when a jug of this refreshing drink is kept on hand

EVERYBODY knows the trick of putting oatmeal in the water jug to prevent the water getting flat and stale.

But here's a better scheme than that. Let Farm House Cocoa take the place of oatmeal. Then when you're tired, hot and thirsty, the contents of the water jug will be as welcome as the ringing of the supper bell at night. Fix up a gallon jug according to directions. Keep it in a shady spot where you can reach it easily. Then see how it refreshes after hardest labor. When once you've made this test you'll thank us for the tip. Let tomorrow be the day to try it out.

How to Make It

1 pound Farm House Cocoa, 4 pounds sugar, 2½ quarts boiling water, 1 teaspoon salt. Mix sugar, cocoa and salt, add boiling water, stirring constantly. Boil five minutes. This syrup will keep almost indefinitely in cool place, and is sufficient to make ten gallons of delicious beverage merely by adding cold water in the proportion of six quarts of water to one pint of syrup. The use of part milk adds richness.

Earthquake Marked Young

The youth of Japan will feel the effects of the great earthquake of last September for many years and in many ways.

New evidence of this has been disclosed by a physical examination made recently of the school children of Yokohama. It was found that the earthquake had afflicted 677 children with "night blindness," or inability to see after nightfall, even in the best artificial light.

Physical deterioration after the quake was found to be general. Of about 33,000 children examined, fully 3 per cent were anemic.

Securities Losses

The volume of worthless securities sold in the United States was estimated at $1,000,000,000 a year, and was described as a "tidal wave" by speakers at the recent eastern district savings conference of the American Bankers' association in New York.

Iowa Hangs Up Another Record

PLACED end to end, the 4,800,000 sacks of HAWKEYE CEMENT produced and shipped in 1923 would make a giant belt extending from Des Moines to Los Angeles.

The demand — in city, town and on the farm — continues to grow month after month. Today, approximately one-third of all the cement used in Iowa is HAWKEYE.

This ever increasing popularity is easily explained. Quality and uniformity—everything expected in a good cement—are found in HAWKEYE. Yet it costs no more than other brands. When building, specify and get HAWKEYE.

There's a HAWKEYE dealer near you. Write us if you don't know his name.

This was done, it was plained, in order to warn the driv s of the nervous horses, that they ght properly hitch their animals.

AUTO WRECK ON HIGHWAY MONDAY NIGHT

Frank Gibbs Run into By Goodell Man

Last Monday evening there was another smash up on the Wilson Highway, about a mile north of Goodell, when Nels Anderson, driving an Overland ran into a Ford, driven by Frank Gibbs of this City.

Gibbs and three other occupants had been to Goodell and were returning, when they met Anderson, driving on the wrong side of the road. Frank could not turn out any furthur because of the high grade and the Overland struck the front end of the Ford. None of the occupants of either car were seriously hurt, although some of them were bruised somewhat. Frank's car was damaged so that it took about thirty lollars to repair it. The costs of the accident are being paid by Mr Anderson as he was wholly at fault for the occurance. He was also driving with a spot light, so that he ought to have been able to sse where he was driving.

PROTECT HORSES FROM FLIES

Treat Your Horses This Fall—Protect Them Now.

Bot flies are causing a great deal of annoyance to farm horses in Iowa this year. Horses that are continually nodding their heads, or standing around resting their jaws on the necks of other horses, are trying to protect themselves from the throat bot. Other species of the pest are the nose bot and the common bot. The common bot lays its eggs on the shoulders and fore legs, and also on the hind legs, but not in such large numbers. This breed is the one that causes the horse to lick his legs.

The throat bot lays its eggs almost exclusively on the hairs between the jaws of the horse. The fly is frequently seen hovering between the forelegs of a horse, waiting for a chance to dart up and attach its eggs.

The nose bot causes the most annoyance, in the opinion of DR. C. J. Drake, head of entomology, Iowa State College,. It is darker colored than the others and with a reddish tail. This fly keeps darting at the lips of the horse, repeating the act until the animal is nearly frantic. All these species remain as larvae in the stomach of the horse for nine months of the year and then are passed out into the manure, whence they issue as flies ready to lay eggs.

The chief method of prevention is the protect the horse from attack by the flies. For the nose fly, a leather band cut into strips encircling the nose serves very well and has been used for many years. For the throat and common bot burlap covering may be used. Next fall it will be wise to have a veterinarian treat the horses for bots. Carbon bisulfide is given to the horses in capsules, but it is not advisable for the farmer to give it.

MUSKRAT IN BED

Farmer Awakes to Find a Strange Bedfellow

Groton, S. D., — Ralph Sperry, living on a farm south of Groton, has no particular enmity toward muskrats, but when one of the animals tried to sleep with him he killed the invading animal with a shoe.

The muskrat is believed to have entered the basement of the Sperry home, and from there made its way to the upper floor and to Sperry's bedroom. During the night he felt something tugging at the bed clothes. But thought it was his smaller brother and paid no attention. Later he felt his pillow being moved and finally felt some soft fur against his cheek.

Then he became wide awake and struck at the fur, knocking what proved to be a muskrat to the floor. —Hampton Chronicle.

Let me live in a house by the side of the road
Where the race of men go by—
The men who are good and the men who are bad,
As good and as bad as I.
I would not sit in the scorner's seat
Or hurl the cynic's ban—
Let me live in a house by the side of the road
And be a friend to man.

I see from my house by the side of the road,
By the side of the highway of life,
The men who press with the ardor of hope,
The men who are faint with the strife,
But I turn not away from their smiles nor their tears,
Both parts of an infinite plan—
Let mt live in a house by the side of the road
And be a friend to man.

Let me live in my house by the side of the road,
It's here the race of men go by—
They are good, they are bad, they are weak, they are strong,
Wise, foolish—so am I.
Then why should I sit in the scorner's seat,
Or hurl the cynic's ban?
Let me live in my house by the side of the road
And be a friend to man.

OUR "BOSS TAKES A VACATION

Ye Devil Manages the Printing Business During His Absence

IDLENESS LEADS TO OLD AGE

Idleness, more often than work, leads to early old age and death.It is disuse that ages and decays a man's mind and body, he believes.

In India, the lifetime of the slow-going peaceful native averages from 19 to 21 years; in China from 22 to 25 years ;in the more wide awake Occident, the average length of life is from 36 to 56 years.

A century ago in New York and Chicago the average length of life was from 30 to 50 years years. Today with the "killing speed" we hear so much about, the mortality has been reduced by 12 per cent.

"Octogenarians" should guard against solitude; they should mingle with youth in employments, and travel. Properly understood, youth is but another name for vital force, a quality much needed with aging folk.

Youth is a spiritual energy and properly speaking, there is no old age but rather spiritual decay. Decadence, disillusion and weariness are the things we mean when we speak of growing old. — Ex.

PROHIBITION MOVEMENT ON FOOT IN IOWA

DES MOINES, Aug. 6:— A movement to get every manufacturer and employer in Iowa to follow the example of Henry Ford in posting prohibition observance orders for employees in all shops and work rooms this month was set in motion here today by the Iowa Anti-Saloon League.

In the main Iowa Ford plant at Des Moines, as in all other Ford plants throughout the country, there now appears an order stating that if any employee is found to have alcoholic odor on his breath, or to have been drinking liquor, he will be discharged.

The league has offered to furnish such signs, free of charge, to all employers who will place them in their plants.

State Superintendent S. P. McMaught said today that the great majority of employers throughout the state had indicated their strong support of prohibition in surveys which have been made by the league. These surveys show Prohibition has made workman steadier, more prosperous and better to their families.

Organized labor is also strong supporters of prohibition in Iowa, the league says. Reports are on file in the offices here from labor bodies throughout the state, asserting their unqualified support of the Eighteenth Amendment.

IOWA EGG LAWS ARE MAKING THEM BEST IN THE WORLD

The State Department of Agriculture is making a strong effort to eliminate bad eggs, and in order to do this put on a drive through its system of pure food inspection, with the result that about 300 cases against infraction of the law was instituted. In a recent bulletin the department says: "The purpose of the egg law is to promote fair dealing in eggs and to keep eggs unfit for human food off the market. This law became effective on April 25, 1919, and since that time the majority of the merchants in this state have complied wih the law, with the result that Iowa eggs have sold for a premium on the eastern markets above the price paid for eggs from adjoining states. There are about eight thousand licensed egg dealers in this state, the majority of whom are doing all they can to encourage the production of fine eggs. All of these dealers were furnished with a copy of the egg law about four month ago, and during the past four months our inspectors have called on most of the dealers and discussed the law with them. Most of them have also been informed about what would be expected of them in the way of complying with this law. They were also informed that the law would be enforced on the same basis throughout the entire state. After spending four months with work of this kind, we decided to put on a drive, during which time we would check all dealers in order to ascertain whether or not they were complying with the law, and it has been very gratifying to find only three hundred out of eight thousand dealers who were not. Reports we have received would indicate that there has been a very noticeable improvement.

NORTH SIDERS TRIM SOUTH IN SOFT BALL

Business Men on North Side of Street Take Three Games

Last Thursday night, following a challenge from the business men on the south Side of Main Street, to play a game of soft ball with them, straight as bean poles but when they proceeded to give them a good trimming. The game was a fast one; (this means the north siders running around the bases) from start to finish, and you may be sure the fellows enjoyed themselves immensely. The score indicates what kind of players the north siders are for the only beat their opponents 37 to 5, only a matter of 32 scores difference. Doc Anderson also proved himself a bum prophet. He said that the northerners would go down to the conflict with their backs as straigh as bean poles, bu when they came back their backs would be the shape of a moon in its first quarter. Guess again Doc. No, the south side did not come back in quite that bad a shape, but they were "badly bent."

The alibi for losing was that the south side did not have time to organize their forces. However on last Friday night the two teams again met in conflict, which again resulted in a victory for the north. "Abe" Lauritzen, was however enlisted as pitcher on the south and he succeeded in holding the boys down to 19 runs while his side again secured five. Monday night the teams again met and the south side took their defeat to the tune of 15 to 2.

We hope that by the next time the teams play the south side will have their gang "organized". It is great sport and gives the "tired business man" plenty of exercise.

Of course you can easily guess that we sympathize with the south siders for "biing off more than they can chew," being that we are north siders.

SELECT YOUR BROOD SOWS

Demonstrations Will Help Stockman to Select Good Breeders of the Right Type

Demonstrations in brood sow selection will be held in 60 Iowa counties this fall by members of the extension service, Iowa State College.

Last year 181 demonstrations were attended by approximately 3,000 farmers. Of the 5,271 sows worked on by the specialist, 2,908 were culled, out leaving 2,263 sows for the farmers to breed for spring litters.

Reports from a number of the cooperating farmers show that sows in the culled herds saved 6.58 pigs in 1924, whereas they saved only 5.87 in 1923. This is approximately a saving of three quarters of a pig per sow. Compared with the average of the whole state, however, the sows in the co-operating herds saved 1.68 pigs per sow more than those in the entire state.

Much gain that is difficult to estimate results from the improvement in type of pigs, which should mean more economical gains and a more desirable type for the market, according to Quaife, of the animal husbandry ertension service. That this has happened is indicated by the reports from farmers who say they have "a better bunch of pigs" this spr ng as a result of last fall's demonstration.

On man reported that he had kept and bred two sows that had been discarded by the specialists, because he was short of sows. These two gave no milk and lost all their pigs except those that could be taken care of by other sows. This shows the importance of selecting sows show good milking qualities.

One man kept two sows and treated them according to the recommendation of the specialists. They farrowed 11 pigs and saved 9 each. With the rest of the herd the farmer gave his usual treatment, letting his boar run with the sows. As a result, the litters were small and only five pigs per sow were saved. He attributed the smaller litters to the fact that there were too many sows for one boar.

With hog values rising, farmers are urged to make the most of their herds this coming fall, making a careful selection of sows to be bred.

WHEAT MONEY FLOODS BANKS

Institutions of Southwest Gain Millions in New Deposits by Farmers.

Kansas City, Mo.—Country bankers of the Southwest are clamoring by mail and personally among Kansas City banks for commercial paper and other outlets for their rapid accumulations of new wheat money. The movement of new wheat in the Southwest has only started, but already the banks of Kansas City alone have effected an increase of $20,000,000 in their country bank deposits. The harvest is so much greater than expected and the prices being paid for wheat so much higher that new wheat money is flowing into the Southwest in a volume exceeding the happiest dreams of farmers and bankers.

One of the largest banks in Kansas City had $22,000,000 in country bank deposits prior to the inauguration of the new wheat movement; today its country bank deposits are in excess of $30,000,000. Another large bank has gained $5,000,000 in country bank deposits in this period.

"What shall I say?" This question was asked by an official of one of the larger banks here in considering a reply to a country banker who had sent a second letter clamoring for commercial paper or other loans that would provide an outlet for $50,000 of new wheat money. While he was considering an answer to this request, another letter came to his desk from a country bank that it desired to increase its application for the purchase of commercial paper, grain loans or other investments from $15,000 to $25,000.

From the receiver of a country bank near Dodge City, which is in the Kansas district having the best wheat crops in history, one leading bank of Kansas City has been advised that the paper it holds against that institution will be paid in full with interest. The amount due is $15,000 plus interest. When the bank near Dodge City failed, the Kansas City correspondent bank told the receiver not to press the farmers to pay off in order to effect a rapid liquidation. "Let them make a crop," the Kansas City bank wrote. Nature and the farmers did the rest, and the Kansas City bank will not lose a cent.

BRITISH IN PROTEST ON GUN ELEVATION

Declare Change Would Be Breach of Treaty.

London.—Great Britain regards the elevation of guns on capital warships, as proposed by the United States and Japan, as a breach of the Washington treaty on disarmament, Arthur Ponsonby, undersecretary for foreign affairs, declared in the house of commons. Representations to the United States and Japan have already been made in regard to this matter, Mr. Ponsonby said. The matter was brought up by a questioner on the floor of the house.

Washington.—Great Britain's protest against the elevation of the large guns, as well as the modernization program of the navy, will at least bring to a head the question of altering ships or making minor changes in their functions, officials believe. They intimated that it would be necessary to give much thought to the controversy before replying to Great Britain.

Decision on the question before the return from Europe of Secretary Hughes and conferences between him and President Coolidge was regarded, however, as at least unlikely.

A change in the elevation of the main batteries of first-line warships was included in a warship modernization program recommended to congress by President Harding in December, 1922. In a memorandum which accompanied Mr. Harding's proposal, Secretary Denby declared that the work proposed was of "major and vital importance in national defense."

WAR DEPARTMENT RUSHING BONUS

Papers Going Through at the Rate of One Thousand a Day.

Washington.—One thousand bonus applications have been put through every day since July 25, when the War department began its task of passing on the million that have been received.

Two thousand clerks have been hard at work since June 14—when funds for the administration of the bonus law became available—distributing application blanks and perfecting the records of the veterans whose applications failed to include necessary data.

During this period 10,000,000 items of record and the information from about 80,000 muster rolls have been filed with the records. When the system of handling the applications is perfected the output will be increased to 30,000 or 40,000 a day. Insurance certificates are dated January 1, 1925, and cash payments are due March 1, 1925.

Gen. Robert C. Davis, adjutant general of the army, said the department is ready to receive all applications. He requested that veterans who have not so far applied, but who intend to do so, submit their applications as soon as possible.

This will be to the interest of both the department and the veterans, he said. If death should occur prior to the filing of an application the dependent would receive only a third the amount he or she would have received had the veteran applied before death.

Says Present-Day Jews Not Israelite "Children"

London.—Lieut. Col. T. S. Beauchamp Williams gave a new theory of the origin of the Jewish people in the house of commons in the course of the debate on the budget for Palestine. He said the present Jews were descendants of the Chazara, a Mongolian people, who had a large and powerful state in south Russia, and not descendants of the "children of Israel." The Chazara, he said, were converted to Judaism in the Ninth century and conquered by the first rulers of Russia. His studies for 28 years as a physician in Russia, he said, had convinced him the present-day Jews were the descendants of proselytes belonging to various races.

Hang Slayer, Though Crazy, Coroner's Jury Demands

Elmhurst, Ill.—"Hang him regardless of whether he is insane." This in substance was the verdict of a Dupage county coroner's jury which named John Kammerer as the slayer of Mr. and Mrs. Otto Eder and their three children. The bodies of the entire family, beaten to death by a club, were found a month ago in their home at Elmhurst. In ordering Kammerer held for murder the coroner's jury took on itself to recommend that the state give a speedy trial and demand nothing less than the death penalty.

Community Building

Plan New Buildings With Eye to Future

It has often been a criticism of Americans that they are short-sighted, that they pay too much attention to the immediate thing, and not enough to the future. To some extent, the history of this country, especially in its early days, bears out this contention.

Even today we see many tendencies to disregard the future and be wasteful with the present. For example, let us take home construction.

Nearly everybody knows of instances of wild-cat promotion schemes in connection with new additions, where houses have been thrown up in wholesale fashion. Often these homes have been of the most flimsy type of construction. They have been built solely with the idea of having a good appearance for the short long enough to sell them. The builder, whose only idea has been promotion, has not cared whether the houses were permanent.

Such building as this has often caused false construction standards.

America could well take lessons from Europe in home building. Many of the dwellings of Europe today are hundreds of years old. The reason for this is that hundreds of years ago Europe began to feel the need of conserving materials by adopting a type of construction that would endure, and would not necessitate replacement or constant repairs.

The outcome of this need was the almost universal adoption of various forms of masonry construction. The masonry houses of Europe are often the residences of the descendants of the men who built them hundreds of years ago because the builders of other countries sought permanence in their homes, not just houses that would look good long enough for them to find buyers.

Park Systems That Would Benefit

The national parks preserve for the American people the most superb and majestic beauties and wonders of nature and, in somewhat lesser degree, the ever-increasing number of state and county parks give to their constituents this same ample recreational opportunity. City parks, too, are recognized as a necessary adjunct to the endeavor and backward, indeed, is the municipality that is not taking steps to meet to the full this demand of the people for recreative pleasures.

Growing from this recognized benefit of public parks has come the idea not yet thoroughly fastened upon the public mind, but, nevertheless, being seriously considered and thought out by those who are looking ahead to future needs, of a great network of parkways connecting this entire system of national, state, county and municipal parks so that one may, by ride or drive over pretty much all of our country without encountering the unkempt, soiled and neglected sites of our national life.

While this may appear visionary, the reality it promises full attainment, the seed is already sprouting in the establishment of the national park highway and other great natural and state highways, where those in charge are making somewhat scattered, yet ever increasing, attempts to beautify by removing billboards from road signs, preserving native roadside trees, shrubs and flowers, and by effective planting along their highways. —Parks and Recreation.

Care of Trees

Too few of us in building our home realize the injustice to trees we are subjecting our trees. We appreciate trees, it is true, and would be widely indignant if told that in haste to have a new home we are deliberately murdering the trees, best landscape asset.

It is such a common thing to see cellar dirt thrown out on the yard, new grade established, thereby burying the roots of the trees from two to three feet under their former level that we scarcely give it a second thought. In excavating our cellars we give very little thought to cutting the main arteries of these trees, the roots. Yet if we deliberately do these things we can but expect that in a very short time the trees will show evidence of carelessness.

Scout Room for School

In plans for a new $300,000 school in Malden, Mass., has not forgotten the present and future scouts. In the equipment, in addition to shops, science classrooms, lunchrooms, domestic science rooms and suites, ample space will be allotted for a special boy scout room for scoutcraft activities and troop meetings.

"Clean Up"

It is to the interest of the individual and of the community to "clean up." So why not get busy now? By cleaning the city would be made a cleaner, a prettier, a healthier and a better city. For removal of rubbish and accumulated refuse would mean clean yards and attractive premises.

Frocks of Eyelet Embroidery; Adds Charm to the Costume

LOVELIER than the loveliest are the exquisite allover eyelet embroidery frocks which lend their colorful charm to the summer landscape. Small wonder is it that milady wavers between choice of an allover lace frock and one of eyelet embroidery.

Evidently stylists who create from this exquisite material are guided by the thought that "beauty unadorned is adorned the most." The exclusive elegance of the eyelet fabrics is all-sufficient, relying for its best display on the simplest designing. That is why the highly fashionable eyelet embroidery frock is nothing more or less than a one-piece slipon. Of course, it may have a few bandings of lingerie crepe, as the model in the picture shows, but some are made without a vestige of trimming.

EYELET EMBROIDERY FROCK

The beltless straight-line frock, the season's most fashionable type, by the way, is recommended to the home dressmaker who is calculating on buying as few yards as possible of handsome eyelet allover for "just one more" midsummer frock to add to her wardrobe.

One can purchase choice batiste allover done in black on white, or in pastels of green, orchid or blue on white. Also solid shades are obtainable and pure white is the standard-bearer of them all.

The last word in midsummer fashions is the knee-length tunic of eyelet embroidery, either white or ecru, worn over a black satin skirt or slip. The smartest tunics are beltless, and they incorporate inserts of pin-tucked net and filet lace.

Organdie embroidery in Italian cutwork design is a near relation to the better-known English eyelet, and it, too, is one of fashion's exclusive midsummer fabrics. Nine-inch borders to match this exquisite organdie Italian cutout are one of the inducements offered to milady fair to overspend her monthly allowance.

A picturesque lingerie touch is given to many a black or colorful satin in the way of a panel or apron effect of sheer eyelet batiste, lace-edged and possibly matched with deep cuffs and collar.

If your blouse, hat, scarf, parasol or bathing suit bears not an embroidered monogram motif, then you are failing to play up to the rules and by-laws of the fashion game. Oh yes, you might include in the above list one's under-the-arm envelope pocketbook, and even one's crepe de chine or fine batiste nightrobe is daintily monogrammed according to style decree.

Madame Mode insists that somewhere, somehow most costumes, especially of the sports-wear type, bear the stamp of her approval in the form of hand-worked or machine-stitched hieroglyphics which at least look like a monogram. Of course we all know that the camouflaged monogram is simply for decorative purposes; not even the learned scholar who translates inscriptions of past centuries can decipher the monogram motifs of the modern stylist. For all that, we have taken quite a fancy to these monogram effects, and they are playing a prominent part in the embellishment of our wearing apparel.

Indicative of the monogram mode is the handsome frock pictured to the right, which displays a cleverly designed motif. Of course it "doesn't mean anything," none of them do, they simply "make believe" one's initials. However, they play a decorative part and that is the idea. This girlish frock of tan-colored flannel lays further claim to style in its binding of all edges with red leather matched to that used for the monogram.

As popular as the monogram idea is that of the watch fob ornament. That a fanciful silver watch fob dangling from the breast pocket of a conventional tailored coat should impart such an air of sophisticated style is really quite interesting to think about. Just how effective a touch the watch fob gives to a tailored ensemble, the picture herewith is proof. The best part of these fashionable fobs are that they are not necessarily expensive.

Not only as a costume accessory, but as a millinery trimming detail, the neatly beribboned watch fob has featured extensively this season. Many a tailored hat has, as its only note of trimming, a rhinestone-set silver watch fob suspended from a strap of grosgrain ribbon. Silver monogram slide buckles are also part of the millinery trimming program.

The Freshman was spending Saturday afternoon on the farm owned by his sweetie's papa and the scenery filled him with romance. They were walking through the pasture when he noted a cow and a calf rubbing noses. He stopped and smiled.

"Sort of all dressed up and no place to go?"

"No—nothing on for the evening

A certain reporter approached the desk of the editor and nervously coughed.

"What ye want?" inquired the chief hurriedly.

"Advice," answered the reporter "My wife's mother is soon to visit us and I don't know how to address her. I don't like to call her "Mother-in-law" on account of the comic column jokes on that name, and somehow there's a certain sacredness about 'Mother' that makes me hesitate to apply it to anyone but my own."

"Well," replied the chief, "I can tell you of my own experience. The first year we were married, I addressed my wife's mother as 'Say'; after that we called her 'Grandma'."

Some men are so temperamental. On a slippery morning last week along Washington street I heard a moodish husband remark to his wife as I trotted past:

The grocer looked down on the child with an air of an insulted saint

'Won't strike!" he said. "Why, look here." And he struck one on leg.

The child departed home. But in a very short time he was back in the store with the matches, which he laid down on the counter with an air of finality.

"Mother says she hasn't got time to come over here and strike these matches on your pants!"

A negro was receiving bricks at the top of a ten-story building in Los Angeles, where some repair work was going on. Another negro on the ground was loading bricks on the carrier. The negro above accidently dropped a brick, hitting the one on the ground squarely on the head.

He was very indignant and yelled to the one above: "Be a little more car'ful up thar. That brick hit me and made me bite mah tongue."

An attractive young woman entered a St. Louis store, bought some goods and presented a check. She was referred to the floor manager. The manager asked her if she had anything for identification. She said she had a mole low on the back of her neck, but she'd be darned if she was going to show it to him.

Did you hear of the two charming young women who attended the show together, but were unable to get adjoining seats? One C. Y. W. thinking to arrange a trade of seats, asked her male neighbor if he was alone, and the brute replied: "Fly away, birdie, I got the whole damn family with me."

A young lady who often thought out loud, had just been shown through a garter factory.

"Heavens!" she exclaimed, "90,000,000 pair in one year? I don't see where they all go."

"Neither do I," replied the young man, coloring slightly.

THE PERFECT TOWN

It should be a moral town where citizens obey the laws and a woman can walk the entire length of Main street and feel that the men she pass es respect womanhood; a town that forgets individual squabbles and unites for the common good of all; a town with a good public library, churches well attended, and pastors reasonably paid; a town where nobody has to lock the chicken coop door; where each citizen is made to feel that he is needed in every important movement, regardless of his financial standing.

The perfect town should have pure water and streets the taxpayers are proud of; a town whose citizens never say "they" but always "we"; a town fit to raise children in without blushing for what they may hear on the streets; where the so-called politicians are men chosen from the rank and file, seeking to help the community with no thought of selfish interest ;a town with a playground for children so they won't have to be in the streets, and with public comfort stations for both women and men.

It should be a town that grows without knocking a neighboring town, one whose people are always courteous to strangers and one with faith in itself and its ability to get whatever it goes afer.—Eddyville Tribune.

THE RED LINE TRAIL

by Crittenden Marriott

NOT a western story, but a strange and thrilling combination of international intrigue and adventures on the sea. The author has in a singular degree the dramatic sense and the gift of narration. Although there are some latter-day pirates, a supposedly uninhabited island in the Atlantic and a mysterious chart, it is not a tale of buried treasure. That which the adventurers found on the island was more romantic and interesting than gold or jewels.

HERE ARE THE TEN COMMANDMENTS FOR GOOD PARENTHOOD

By Doris Blake

You cannot expect to have good children and good future citizens unless the children have the advantage of good parents. Good parents are a necessity if the child is to grow up into a good citizen, as we know well.

How may one learn the rules of good parenthood? There has come for parents ten excellent commandments from the pen of Edward W. Stitt, associate superintendent of New York schools, which read:

"1. Set proper standards for your children to follow.

"2. Be friends with your children, Walk and play with them occasionally. We must not live about our children, but with them.

"3. Do not scold too much. Encourage them to do their best. Let us remember what Phillip Brooks said: Children are white, spotted black; not black, spotted white.'

"4. See that they select proper friends and associates.

"5. Make home as comfortable and happy as your means permit.

"6. Give your children at least a high school education.

"7. Train them in the habit of regular attendance at Church and Sunday school.

"8. See that they avoid all games of chance. A gambler never can be a sucess in life.

"9. See that your children take plenty of physical exercise in the open air. It is better exercise to walk than to ride in a limousine.

"10. Let your children feel that any honor which they win in school or any act of courage, or unselfishness they may preform will bring great happiness to father and mother and put the family name on a higher plane of honor. Do not forget that the future of America depends upon how your boys and girls are trained today not, on how you were trained when you were children.

"Let us hope," adds Mr. Stitt, "for better homes, more regular attendance at religious services, and a finer type of citizenship, all of which will combine to make our nation the best in the world. Let us all work to make our United States a republic of homes.—Chicago Tribune.

Demand for Sharks' Fins.

The demand for shark fins is always greater than the supply, and they fetch a high price. The principal American market is San Francisco. Considerable quantities are consumed by the Chinese of the Pacific coast, but most of them are exported to China, where shark-fin soup is regarded as one of the greatest of all delicacies. The fins should be at least six inches long; those of eight inches are preferred. The flesh should be trimmed off them, after which they should be dried thoroughly in the sun, without salt.

BIG MONEY

The more a mortal critter earns, the more he blows, the more he burns, unless his head is level; big money tempts a man to wade in luxury and life is made one long and gorgeous revel. He sets forth poor when he is young; to gain a plunk his frame is wrung by hard and heavy labors; he saves a little coin at times, some nickels now, again some dimes, as do his toiling neighbors. He builds a modest little shack with rose vines climbing up the back, he owns a plot of soil; his helpful prudence never ends, for all the capital he spends was won by grevious toil. His wife, his nieces and his aunt all gladly help him when he'd plant some rubles in the bank; they do without the things they need that he may save the chickenfeed, the kopeck and the franc. But now his patient toiling feet have carried him to Easy street, his salary is large; all prudent thoughts have pulled their freight, he goes through life in pomp and state like Cleo on her barge. The women of his household aid; they scatter coin as with a spade they dress like movie queens and oft I wonder what they'll do, this gaudy easy money crew, if fortune spills the beans. I have been poor as any jay, and I have drawn a princely pay, and wasted heaps of bones; and I believe the happy lad is he who views his toil earned scad, the only one he owns.—Walt Mason.

Roots and Herbs Best for Kidneys

Daniel G. Carey, M. D.

BACKACHE

said Dr. Carey is a pretty sure sign that all is not well with your kidneys.

Delay may be dangerous—thousands of people die every year from kidney troubles and many could be saved if the right medicine was taken in time.

Dr. Carey knew how to mix roots and herbs and for over 40 years his famous Marshroot Prescription 777 helped thousands of despairing people. It's the one remedy for backache troubles. Don't take chances—ask your druggist for it by name—liquid or tablet form—equally good, 75c. If your local druggist hasn't it he can get it from the Carey Medical Laboratories at Elmira, N. Y.

Thousands Have Kidney Trouble and Never Suspect It

Applicants for Insurance Should Use Swamp-Root

Judging from reports from druggists who are constantly in direct touch with the public, there is one preparation that has been very successful in overcoming these conditions. The mild and healing influence of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root is soon realized. It stands the highest for its remarkable record of success.

An examining physician for one of the prominent Life Insurance Companies, in an interview of the subject, made the astonishing statement that one reason why so many applicants for insurance are rejected is because kidney trouble is so common to the American people, and the large majority of those whose applications are declined do not even suspect that they have the disease. Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root is on sale at all drug stores in bottles of two sizes, medium and large.

However, if you wish first to test this great preparation, send ten cents to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., for a sample bottle. When writing, be sure and mention this paper.—Advertisement.

World's Oldest Banks

The oldest existing bank in the world is said to be the Bank of Barcelona, in Spain, which was founded in 1401. England's first bank was opened in 1603 by Francis Child, a goldsmith. A number of other goldsmiths immediately followed suit. The Mint in the Tower of London had been the depository for the cash of merchants until Charles the First seized the money as a loan. Then the traders began to deposit their cash with the goldsmiths in Lombard street.

With a cry, Jack Warhope caught up the unconscious girl in his arms, to discover that she must have been in the river, for her garments were completely saturated and her hair hung about her shoulders, sodden and dripping.

He was wrapping his hunting blouse about her when, with a startled exclamation, he jerked away his hand and held it up between his face and the sky—it was smudged with blood. He bent over the girl—blood was streaming from her right shoulder and running down her side. That last bullet from the edge of the yard—it had found the core of a tragic target.

Picking her up in his arms, he ran around to the kitchen, dashed the door open and laid her on the sofa in the sitting room.

He had wrapped her in blankets snatched from the parlor bedroom, tore up a sheet for bandages and was doing his best to stop the blood, when there came the sound of a man running across the yard, and the next moment Uncle Nick, doubtless alarmed by that last shot—coming as it did upon the heels of the housekeeper's story—was calling and pounding at the sitting room door. Jack threw it open.

"Texie's hurt!" he cried. "Quick—Doctor Arnold—and Aunt Liza and Mrs. Curry."

Without a question the old man hurried away.

The woodsman had brought the candle out of the room where the dead robber lay, closed the door and was doing his best to stop the blood and restore the girl to consciousness, when the doctor ran in.

A hurried word or two and he was at the hurt shoulder. The bullet—it was his first care. With quick skill he hunted it; fortunately located it almost immediately. It had just missed the lung, ranged upward and lodged barely beneath the skin at the top of the shoulder. He made a small incision and probed it out.

He had washed the wound and had it nearly dressed when Aunt Eliza came running in, followed an instant later by Mrs. Curry, flurried and panting. Changing Texie's sodden garments for dry ones, while the woodsman built a fire in the kitchen stove, they laid her between warm blankets in the parlor bedroom.

Picking up the candle, the woodsman crossed the floor, threw open the door of the room where the dead robber lay and motioned for the two men.

Even the doctor started, aghast at the gruesome, huddled form sprawled there among the littered, blood-spattered money. Uncle Nick's muttered cry brought the two women running from the sick room, to gaze with the others—awed to silence by the tragedy that had again visited the quiet cottage.

The woodsman well knew that questions would be flashing through each mind—had been since the discovery of Texie's hurt—knew that each looked to him for the answer. A low moan came from the parlor bedroom. That last treacherous shot—he knew that the man with the red lock could never come back. It had been a mistake to shield him; a blunder to trust him—a blunder that was being paid for at a fearful cost.

The doctor was the first to break the silence.

"What does this mean?"—the question was half a demand.

"It means—Caleb Hopkins," was the hard, incisive answer.

The doctor started; the two women caught their breath; Uncle Nick swore, felt ashamed of it, looked foolish.

"This dead man"—the woodsman dropped a hand toward the huddled form—"is Black Bogus." The two women looked at each other; shrank back. The doctor's eyes lifted; he drew a step nearer and gazed hard at the body. "Him and Hopkins and"—Loge Belden, the man was about to say, but thought of the mountain girl, and he—didn't; besides, Belden had not shown himself at the robbery—"they're both outlaws and counterfiters. Hopkins would take good money out of the safe and put counterfit bills in place of it.

"It was him that killed Pap Simon—that is, Pap Simon run out on 'im that night while he was changin' the counterf'it f'r good money, and in the scuffle died of heart disease. That shet off their game, of course, so they planned t' make a clean sweep t'night and go.

"Hopkins—went t' town and writ back a letter t' Texie, makin' out it was from—Ken. The letter said he was sick in town and wanted 'er t' come to 'im. So she went, leavin' a note with Mis' Curry f'r me. The minute I got the note I knowed it was—Hopkins. I'd be'n suspicious of 'im and had be'n watchin' 'im, so I rode after 'er as quick as I could—clean t' the city, t' the place where the letter said Ken was sick; found I was off the trail; rode back as fast as Graylock could bring me t' try and pick it up.

"I found where Hopkins had headed Texie off up the road a ways and got 'er on that house-boat Uncle Nick and the rest of us saw hid there at the head of Mud haul the day we went seinin'.

"But I found where he'd hid it at Alpine island, and watched 'im sneak back to the woods—t' wait f'r dark, as I 'lowed. As soon as he was out o' sight, I took to skiff, crossed to the island, got on the house-boat without lettin' Texie know I was there and found out she was safe.

"Then, without lettin' 'er know it was me, I moved the house-boat and hid it in a new place; left her locked in—b'cause I thought it would be the safest place she could be jist then—and hurried here t' watch the house, fully b'lievin' they intended t' rob the safe t'night.

"About midnight they come. I—killed Black Bogus and hurt Hopkins, but he—got away. Texie must 'a' broke out o' the house-boat somehow and swum ashore. I didn't know it, but she was jist comin' into the yard when I jumped out o' the winder after Hopkins, and that last shot he fired at me hit her."

It was a tremendous recital, brief; terse; not quite true; yet anything but false; by far the longest speech he had ever made in his life, even with so much left out. He saw questions still in the eyes fixed upon him. A moan came from the parlor bedroom—and every other consideration gave way to the sufferer.

Alone with Uncle Nick, the woodsman securely fastened the window that had been pried open, closed the door on the gruesome scene and went to the kitchen. Curious faces were beginning to gather in the yard. He turned to the old man.

"Uncle Nick,"—his voice showed the strain he was under—"send them away. Tell 'em as little as possible, but for—her sake, keep 'em away—Jerry Brown above all, if he happens t' wake up and take it into 'is head t' come up here. And I 'low y'u better git somebody t' ride in after the coroner."

The old man nodded and turned to the door. The other caught his sleeve.

"And when it's light, I wish y'u'd sneak up Eagle holler a little and kinda throw an eye out f'r Loge Belden."

"It Means Caleb Hopkins," Was the Hard, Incisive Answer.

The brows of the old hunter lifted.

"I wondered why y'u left him out in—there." He jerked his head toward the room they had just left.

The next moment, with a step that the years seemed powerless to totter or stiffen, he had glided through the kitchen door and out among the curious faces in the yard.

CHAPTER XIX

The Sprawled Figure on the Broken Floor.

The sleepless night wore itself out; morning came to the cottage; and Texie still lived.

On the heels of the dawn Uncle Nick poked his head in at the kitchen door and motioned with his finger. The woodsman lifted his face from his hands, rose and went out.

Without a word the old man turned and, with another very positive motion of his hand, led the way across the corner of the yard, into the little park, out through the fallow pasture lot and to the Eagle Hollow road.

Well within the dim gray jaws of the hollow he paused.

"When I p'inted m' nose up the crick this mornin', as you said, I noticed the door o' that ol' cabin whar Hen Spencer raised the devil that night wus part way open. I knowed it hadn't be'n open f'r years, so I snuck up and peeked in. Come on."

With the long, lanky, half running stride that he had probably copied from the Indians, the old ranger and scout, closely followed by the young man, trotted away up the gulch, climbed the fence in front of the cabin of the dead woodchopper, ran up through the dew-wet weeds to the half-opened door, pushed it wider and entered.

There on the dusty floor boards, partly twisted on his side, his face staring up, one arm crumpled under him, with a dirk knife buried to the hilt in his breast, sprawled the man that called himself Caleb Hopkins—dead.

The woodsman stooped over the body; looked up curiously at his aged companion.

"Do y'u know 'im?"

"It's Hopkins."

"Look close."

The old man glanced at his companion, caught the odd expression in his eyes, stooped over the sprawled figure and bent his eyes intently upon the dead face, slowly shook his head.

"Course, I don't 'low 'is name's Hopkins, n' more'n mine is," he muttered, "but it's the best I can do."

The woodsman stooped; raked the mass of hair down; brought the red lock into view; spread his hand over the lower part of the face to hide the beard.

"By the lord—Ken Colin."

Jack took his hand away from over the beard; scraped the hair carefully back into place.

"They say that red lock comes down from ol' Red Colin, a sea pirate hundreds of years ago, that it shows up every three 'r four generations, alw'ys bringin' along with it a drop 'r two of bad blood. It shore played the devil with Ken."

"Didn't it!" was Uncle Nick's thoughtful comment—"robbed and murdered 'is ol' man, an' then preached 'is funeral—Lord!"

A short silence fell.

"I could 'a' killed 'im there at the safe," the woodsman mused, half to himself, "but I—didn't. I only shot away 'is gun and fought 'im fair. When he was down, with 'is hair all mussed up and the red lock worked out in sight, that was the first time I knowed 'im. After that I tried t'—save 'im and let 'im git away, not knowin' he had another pistol hid on 'im. When he thought 'e had me off guard, he turned around quick and shot; missed me—and hit—her."

He stood a long time silent, his head half bent aside, his thoughts doubtless back where a hapless sufferer lay moaning; turned at last; gazed at the knife, buried to a gruesome depth in the blood-mussed shirt-front of the fallen man; glanced up at his old friend and found the deep-set eyes studying him in thoughtful retrospection.

"Uncle Nick, what sort of a lock have y'u got on y'ur jaw?"

"Tight as a clam shell, if you say so," was the ready answer.

"I'm askin' y'u t' lock it"—his words were serious and slow. "It ain't no use t' worry—her"—he jerked his head down the gulch—"by lettin' 'er find out it was—him—"

He gazed down at the sprawled body.

"I'm askin' you t' 'tend t' layin' 'im out and buryin' 'im; and be p'inted p'tic'lar t' keep 'is hair combed so's the red lock don't show. Nobody would know 'im only by that. The way he had 'imself cobbled up—them clothes and spec's and whiskers, and the way 'e talked, and 'is face puckered up the way 'e kep' it—he didn't look a bit more like Ken Colin than you do. Stay here, and I'll send Al up with Doctor Arnold's stretcher t' he'p y' carry 'im in."

He stooped to straighten the dead man and—a subconscious act of compassion, perhaps—to get the cramped arm out from under him. As he moved the arm, the frock coat fell open and a piece of soiled white paper stuck in a pocket of the vest caught his eye.

He drew it forth, glanced over the dozen or so scrawled words and passed the paper to Uncle Nick. The old man, muttering something about not having his glasses along, passed it back and the woodsman read aloud:

"This man aint no preacher. Hes Slim Finger Doolin. Hes the slickest forger and counterfitter that ever lived and devilish light fingered with a six gun. He ruined my sister. That's why hes dead. He aint no human. Hes got the guts of a snake and the devils blood. Thats why I knifed im stid uv shootin im white. It wont be no use follerin me cause yu wont ketch me.

"LOGE BELDEN."

A long silence followed the reading of the note. The woodsman was the first to break it.

"I ain't aimin' t' follow 'im," he said, while a spark of flint narrowed his eyes—"a man that'll back his sister like—that."

"I 'low he's about as black as the devil makes 'em," was the old hunter's thoughtful comment, as he slowly reached for his pipe, "but we'll haf t' consait 'im one white feather."

He kicked Black Bogus' box to the open door, stood it on end, sat down and scraped his match on the doorjamb.

With a final word of caution to keep secret the identity of the dead man, the woodsman hurried away.

At the inquest an hour or so later Jack merely repeated the statement he had made the night before. Of Loge Belden and his sister—knowing at last her pitiful secret, he let fall no word. The house-boat, when he went to its hiding-place days later, had disappeared. They had probably gone with it. They were never followed.

As to the True Black Fox.

The true black fox is black all over with the exception of the tip of the tail which is white, but I will say that these animals are very rare indeed, says a writer in the Sportsman's Digest. The silver, or silver gray, is practically the same color save that the back and shoulders are shot with more or less gray hairs; the less light hairs there are the more valuable the pelt. Foxes that have a very small amount of these gray hairs are classed as black. The cross fox is a mixture of the dark fox and the ordinary red one, rusty-colored patches being visible at different points, especially on the shoulders and rump. As in the case of the silver, the more black on the cross fox the greater his value.

LEGION MAN MAYOR OF SOUTHERN CITY

J. Fulmer Bright, Legionnaire mayor of Richmond, Va., is believed by his comrades of the American Legion as the old Southern capital to be the youngest Legionnaire to sit in the mayor's chair in a city of the size of Richmond, with its 200,000 population. Mayor Bright, who is only thirty-six years old, became a contender for that distinction when he defeated the man who had been mayor for 12 years.

The strenuous campaign came to a close recently. But there was no brick concealed under the hat in his path on All-Fools' day. He won a decisive victory over his opponent.

Mayor Bright was born in Richmond on November 17, 1887. He graduated from the Medical College of Virginia. After his graduation, he served for several years as professor of anatomy at that institution.

He did not confine his interests and activities to his professional duties.

J. Fulmer Bright.

From 1906 to 1917 he served in the Virginia National Guard. He was with the One Hundred and Sixteenth infantry in the Twenty-ninth division during the World war.

Since the war he has been commissioned a colonel of infantry. At present he is in command of the One Hundred and Eighty-third infantry in the Virginia militia.

His election to the mayoralty was not Colonel Bright's first venture in politics. He had represented Richmond in the state legislature in 1922 and 1923.

He knew what he was up against in entering the contest for the mayoralty with a man who had been so popular that he had held the office for 12 consecutive years. But this did not deter him.

He remembered the way the American doughboy had pushed forward with grim determination on the scarred battlefields of France. He decided that he would put into his campaign the same kind of push and driving force. So he entered the lists as the champion of the younger generation. And April Fool's day belied its name and brought to him the greatest political honor of his career.

The mayor has been a very active and loyal member of Richmond post No. 1, of the American Legion. His first expression upon being informed of the high honor which had come to him was:

"I am indeed proud of the privilege of being the humble instrument whereby this distinction is brought to a member of the American Legion."

Education Week to Be Observed November 17-23

"American Education week," conceived by the American Legion in 1921 at the annual meeting of the National Education association and observed annually since that time by Presidential proclamation, will be observed this year the week of November 17-23, inclusive.

The program of education week for this year will deal with the several phases of national education held to be most imperative to the best interests of the country by the American Legion, the National Education association and the United States bureau of education, the organizations sponsoring the movement. The program for the week embraces: Constitution day, Patriotism day, School and Teacher day, Illiteracy day, Physical Education day, Community day and For God and Country day.

Determined to Check Un-American Propaganda

The Americanism division of the American Legion at national headquarters recently issued a statement in which it expressed itself as determined to stamp out all seditious, un-American and unpatriotic propaganda disseminated by pacifist organizations such as the "Women's International League for Peace and Freedom." The particular propaganda that aroused the Legion's declaration was printed in a booklet entitled "America Menaced by Militarism," and read as follows: "Go to war if you want to, but know this: we have pledged ourselves not to give you our children, not to encourage or nurse your soldiers, not to knit a sock or roll a bandage or drive a truck or make a war speech or buy a bond!"

Prominent People

Exclusive Club Ousts Him After Fracas

As a result of his attack on Dr. James T. Mitchell on the club golf course, Senator Joseph T. Robinson of Arkansas, Democratic floor leader of the senate, has been ordered expelled from the exclusive Chevy Chase club.

Senator Robinson's expulsion was voted by a special committee which drew up a resolution setting forth the facts in the case. So far as is known the action is unprecedented in the club's history. Chevy Chase, with one of the most select membership lists in the country, generally keeps its affairs to itself.

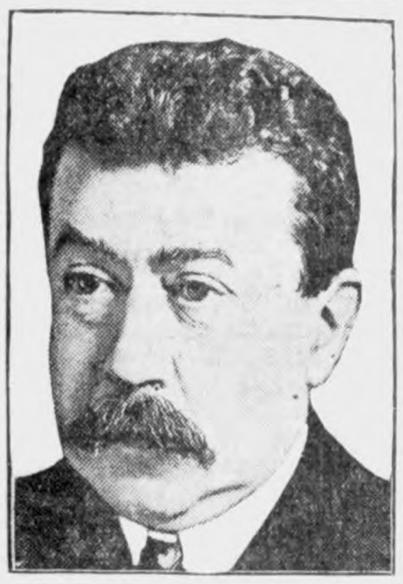
Senator Robinson was playing in a foursome on the day of the fight with Doctor Mitchell, his companions being Senators Thomas J. Walsh of Montana, Andrieus Jones of New Mexico and John B. Kendrick of Wyoming.

One hole behind the senatorial foursome came Doctor Mitchell, nationally famous as a surgeon, with Col. Edward Clifford of Chicago, former undersecretary of the treasury, and Edward Clifford, Jr.

The senators are said to have been proceeding slowly and, according to testimony before the investigating committee, Doctor Mitchell asked permission to drive through.

It is further said that this was accorded, but that Senator Robinson objected and engaged in words with Doctor Mitchell, which ended by his striking the surgeon in the face and knocking him down. Thereupon Senator Walsh, chairman of the recent Democratic convention, intervened.

M. Painleve: Politician and Scientist

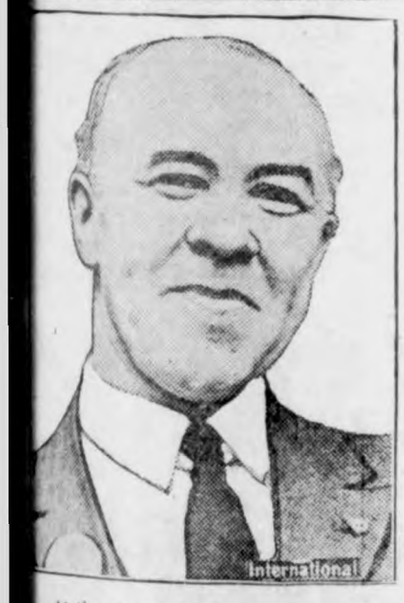


Paul Painleve, well known to Americans as the French radical Socialist politician, is one of the leading figures in the new left wing of the French government. M. Painleve was one of France's war premiers, his ministry preceding that of Clemenceau. In the chamber of deputies elected in 1919, he was a member of the opposition, especially during the Poincare regime. The new chamber recently elected him its president by a vote of 309 to 209 for M. Maginot, Poincare's minister of war.

When Millerand was forced to resign by the left bloc's boycotting tactics Painleve was Herriot's choice for the vacancy in the Elysee. But the radicals of the senate went over to Paul Doumergue, the presiding officer of their body, and elected him with the support of the Nationalists. These facts indicate M. Painleve's status in politics, which is one of distinction. He is a moderate radical, much like Herriot and with the same academic background. He is an intellectual, not a leader risen from the ranks of labor like Premier Ramsay MacDonald.

But there is another Painleve, very little known outside of France. That is Painleve the savant, one of the most honored figures in the French scientific world. In this field his reputation is more general and the esteem felt for him more ungrudging than in the arena of politics.

Gets Nomination and Then He Loses It



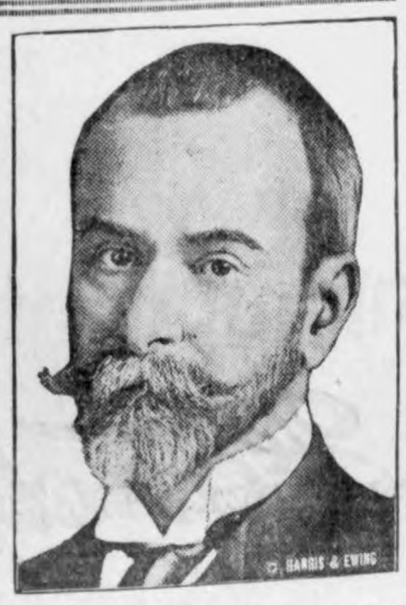
Duncan MacDonald, until recently the Presidential nominee of the Communist controlled convention of the Farmer-Labor party, has lost his job. For many years he played an important part in directing the affairs of labor in Illinois. He held the position of secretary with the state coal miners' union and the presidency of the Illinois Federation of Labor.

MacDonald's first tilt in organized labor occurred when he clashed with Frank Farrington, president of the Illinois Coal Miners' union. As secretary of that organization MacDonald launched an attack on a series of alleged irregularities in Farrington's office. The ensuing fight was bitter and ended when MacDonald was ousted. MacDonald was elected head of the state federation of labor through the votes of the coal miners who practically dictate the naming of the pilot. He met defeat at the next election.

At the recent Peoria convention of the state coal miners MacDonald was mentioned as Farrington's probable successor.

But with apparent success in view MacDonald committed the mistake which practically blasted hopes for regaining lost leadership—he associated with William Z. Foster and his cohorts in forming a new third party in the state. His conservative friends deserted him. MacDonald followed along with the Foster brigade, believing it afforded him the necessary weapon to continue his fight against the Farrington machine. Events moved quickly. At the St. Paul convention MacDonald was nominated for President. A little later his candidacy was supplanted with that of William Z. Foster's.

Jusserand, Dean of Diplomats, Departs



Jules J. Jusserand, ambassador from France to the United States and popularly known as the dean of the diplomatic corps at Washington, has left for Europe. Before departing he called at the White House to bid good by to President Coolidge, and now rumor has it that this venerable old gentleman has decided to retire from public life and may never return to America.

M. Jusserand came to Washington in 1902 as ambassador of France, and, so far as can be determined, his 22-year stay establishes a record for length of service.

Not only will he be missed in official Washington, but, if the rumor is confirmed and he does not return, his loss will be greatly felt by capital society, in which he and his charming wife, who is noted for her ability as a hostess, have been prominent figures for many years.

M. Jusserand entered the diplomatic service of France as soon as he had attained his majority. Before coming to America he served as minister to Denmark from 1898 to 1902. Ten American universities have conferred on him the degree of LL.D.

HOW HE KNEW HIS COAT

After dining at a fashionable London restaurant a man with a shabby character went to the cloakroom, and was astonished to be handed his overcoat before he produced his ticket.

"How did you know that was mine?" he asked the attendant.

"I didn't, sir."

"Then why did you give to me?"

"It's the one you gave me when you came in, sir."

His Opinion

"I dropped into the Tote Fair store this morning," related a guest, "and found the proprietor and his clerk playing checkers."

"Eh-yah!" returned the landlord of the Petunia tavern. "I always did say that a merchant that will play checkers before noon ain't got much business nor much sense to attend to it if he had it."

Medical Proposal

A young doctor said to the girl of his choice: "Do you know, dear, I have a heart affection for you?"

"Have you had it long?" she inquired.

"Oh, yes. I feel that I will liver trouble without you."

"Then you had better asthma."—London Tit-Bits.

Too Much

"How did you like my sermon Sunday?" asked the modern clergyman.

"I couldn't get you," replied the radio churchgoer.

"Too much theology?" asked the minister.

"No," replied the radio lost sheep; "too much interference."

His Ambition

First Hobo—I've decided to become a movin' pitcher actor.

Second Bo—Don't dat take lot of pep?

First Bo—Nix. As I understand it, it's de pitchers does de movin'.—American Legion Weekly.

Appeal

When he came home late his wife confronted him with a sour face. He hoped to avert the storm.

"Now, lissen, my dear," said he thickly, "You are a blonde and black looks don't go with your style of beauty."

BEATS ONLY THE DRUM

She—What a boaster that musician is! He beats everything!

He—He's a boaster all right; but, as a matter of fact, he beats only the drum.

Mixed Ideas

"Oh, doctor, I'm so very queer,"
She cried; "what shall I do?"
I feel I hardly wish to live,
So thought I'd send for you."

His Part

"Are you good at bridge?"

"No. At bridge I'm a regular Horatius."

"Horatius? I don't understand."

"I keep the others from coming across."

Her Neighbor's Advice Helped Mrs. Frick

MRS. ADA FRICK
PERRYSBURG, OHIO

"YOU can be just as healthy, strong and happy as I am,' said one woman to her neighbor after listening to the description of her ailments,—'if you will take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. My condition was very similar to yours, I suffered from those awful bearing down pains, weakness, backache, nervousness and headaches until I could hardly drag around. Today I am strong, well and happy because I followed the advice of a friend who had been greatly benefited by this old-fashioned root and herb medicine."

Nearly fifty years ago Lydia E. Pinkham of Lynn, Mass. prepared from medicinal roots and herbs Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Its fame has spread from shore to shore. You will now find in every community or neighborhood some woman who has been restored to health by its use, or has some friend who has. Therefore ask your neighbor.

Thousands of unsolicited testimonials such as the following are on file at the Pinkham Laboratory at Lynn, Mass., and prove the merit of this medicine. Therefore no woman should continue to suffer from such ailments.

Mrs. Frick Tells of Her Experience

PERRYSBURG, OHIO—"I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound because I suffered with pains in my sides all the time. I can't remember just how long I suffered but it was for some time. One day I was talking with a neighbor and I told her how I was feeling and she said she had been just like I was with pains and nervous troubles and she took the Vegetable Compound and it helped her. So then I went and got some and I certainly recommend it for it is good. Whenever I see a woman who is sick I try to get her to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound."—Mrs. ADA FRICK, R. -Dad 'n' Me-

A youngster's mightly lucky
If he's got a fishin' dad;
The fun I used to have with mine
Was the best I ever had,
When the sundown called the music
From the bulu-frog's husky throat
And we were trollin' pick'rel
In an old flat-bottomed boat.

We always used a hand-line
With a whirlin' silver spoon,
And we both took turns at rowin'
Till the risin' summer moon
Her warnin' of the nightfall
With her silver pencil wrote,
And we' quit trollin' pick'rel
In the old, flat-bottomed boat.

In the dusk of early evenin'
Fish'll strike a shinin' bait,
Droppin' softly down slow water
We would lure 'em to their fate,
Pilin' up a feast for breakfast
Worth a twenty-dollar note
By just a-trollin' pick'rel
In the old,flat-bottomed boat.

So I'm goin' back this summer
To the fun I can't forget,
And when the shadows lengthen
'Cross the old-mill pond, you bet
We'll bt droppin' down the river,
Past the lily-ponds we'll float—
Dad 'n' me, a-trollin' pick'rel
In the old, flat-bottomed boat.

SLAUGHTER GOPHERS

Farmer Just Mows Them in Hay Field

Lead, D. —Francis McNeil ,a rancher and farmer living in the St. Onge district of the Black Hills did not exactely intend to hunt gophers wih a mowing machine, but results were the same as though he had.

He finds himself richer by $40 in bounties as the result of his mowing machine killing a number of these animals. He said the gohpers had a habit of getting in the way of the mowing machine and geting caught in the sickle bar, so he had ih bays follow them achine and pick up the lifeless bodies of the gophers.

Heb rought in to thec ounty auditor the scalps of 370 gophers and the feet of 30 magpies. Them agpies were shot by himself and his boys. He also received a bounty for them.

GIVES CAMPING RULES

Miss Willetta Moore Tells of Proper Foods

This is the season of the year when prospective campers are making plans for the summer outing and in anticipating this mid-summer tendency, Miss Willetta Boore, associate professor in the foods department of the home economics division recently gave some instruction to a group of Campfire girls, which are applicable to anyone interested in camping.

"The more of civilization you leave behind you, the more excitement you will have," said Miss Moore in laying down the first general rule of camp life.

"Choose your camp location near pure water and plenty of fire wood. Note from what direction the breezes blow, then hide the camp from them in the winter and expose it in the summer. Drainage should be good.

"We live by what we digest," said Miss Moore and this is the guide to thec hoice of food for the camping trip. "Food of nigh calrific value is a great saving space and weight. Knowing nature well enough to add to the diet any wild fruits, sorrel, watercress and dandelion greens is another aid.

"Wigwam and trench fires are the two most common types used, the wigwan bting best adapted for quick heating by hanging a pail or kettle over the flames on a forkel stick and the trench fire used for baking, by placing a wire grate on a bed of live coals.".

Then for the clean-up, that hardest job of all. "No good camper," concluded Miss Moore, "leaves the place littered up with papers, glass or tins. Burn what you can and bury the rest."

Or as the forest rangers say; "Be sure your fire is dead, then bury it."

OBITUARY MRS. FRED BELL

Mrs. Fred Bell, nee Elsie Sophia Henschen was born on a farm near Klemme, Hancock County, Iowa, on July 6th, 1900, and died at the Mercy Hospital at Mason City, Iowa, August 6th, 1924, at the age of 24 years and 1 month. She was the second oldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Henschen who reside on a farm north-east of Klemme.

The deceased was a kind, faithful wife, and a tender loving mother. Her death seemed untimely and her life was nipped in the bud of young womanhood. For some months she had been in poor health and after an operation a few months ago she did not improve in health and lingered along until death came as a relief to her earthly suffering and she was called to her Heavenly Home.

The deceased leaves to mourn her death her husband, Fred Bell, her 10 months old baby boy, Fred Jr.; her father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Henschen; one sister, Mrs. Otto Weiwood; and two brothers, Ernest and Walter; and other relatives and many friends.

In giving this sketch we shall also mention other important events in this young mother's life. She has always been a faithful Christian girl and woman, and at the age of 15 years she was confirmed in the Ell Township German Reformed Church where she has since been an active member. On September 30, 1922 she was united in marriage to Mr. Fred Bell, of Klemme, and to this union a baby son was born.

Funeral services were held Sunday morning, August 10th, 1924 at 10:30 o'clock, her pastor Rev. Schmidt preaching the services. Interment was made in the the beautiful church cemetery.

Card Of Thanks

We wish to thank our neighbors and friends for their kind assistance during the illness and death of our beloved wife, daughter and sister, also extending thanks for the beautiful flowers.

WINNING THE BARBARY WAR

Observers who have traveled extensively over the spring wheat country of the Norhtwest report little eveidence of he black semrust of grain which sci-nce has traced to common barberry as source and cause.

It is easy to draw large conclusions from small premises, but it seems fair to say that the comparative freedom of wheat fields from black stem rust is a fruit of the miliant fight carried on in the North Central states to uproot barberry bushes. Federal and sae govtrnments have aided in the extermination of this rust breeding pest, but the main credit goes to he farmers who, convinced that the scientists were right, set themselves o the business of clearing heir places of the barberry.

Tremendous ravages have been made on the wheat fields of the Northwest from year to year by rust. The loss in the last few years has been estimated at scores of millions of dollars. Rust reduces both yield and quality, thereby cutting two ways into the farmer's pocketbook.

It looks today as if the fight on barberry was worth many times what it cost in time, muscular energy and money. Anything that contributes to the increasing a re yields in farm crops is abundantly worth while; and more particularly so when tht quality of the product is improved.

The war on barberry is not yet over, although many successful skirmishes and major battles against it have been won. Conditions in the fields this year should act as a spur for a continuance of the eradication campaign. —Minneapolis Tribune.

ORIENTAL MOTH ON APPLES

Unusual Pest Immune to Poison. Spray

The oriental peach moth, ordinarily an inhabitant of eastern peach orchards, will be found in Iowa orchards this year, feeding on apples and plums.

This pest is a smooth worker, in the opinion of Dr. C. J. Drake, head of entomology, Iowa State College. He is immune to poisonous sprays, due to his habit of spitting out his first few mouthfuls, taken from the surface of he stem or fruit, and not swallowing until he gets below the surface, to the more tender inner portions.

Two distinct kinds of injury are inflicted by this larva. During the early part of the summer, when the tip ends are growing terminal and lateral shoots are tender , the larva enters the shoots near the extreme end and eats its way into the twig a few inches. This causes the shoots to wilt and eventually die. One larva may attack several shoots before it compleses its developement

The second and most serious type of injury is produced on the fruit. During the latter part of the summer, after the fruit is half grown and the growth of new shoots ceases the larva enters the fruit.

The oriental peach moth looks very much like te codling moth and is a grayish brown color. The larvae vary from one-sixteenth to one-half inch long and are white and gray in color with black heads. When full grown the larvae are pink. Dr. Drake requests that growers finding infested fruit and wormy shoots send them to the department of entomology, Iowa State College, Ames

HARD TO BALANCE

A doctor brought a dyspeptic farmer a big, brown pill.

"I want you to try this pill at bedtime," he said. "It's a new treatmen, and if you can keep it on your stomach it ought to cure you."

The next day the doctor called again. "Did you manage to keep the pill on your stomach?" he asked eagerly.

"Well, the pill was all right so long as I kept awake," said the farmer, "but every time I fell asleep it rolled off."

Search of the Languid Eyes.

All through the long and terrible day following that tragic night, the angels of life and death waged their grim struggle in the parlor bedroom, where the hapless sufferer writhed in the delirium that followed the shock of her wound.

Toward evening Aunt Eliza, believing with the others that the end was near, beckoned the woodsman to the bedside.

It fairly staggered him to see the frightful change the hours had wrought. Under an impulse of pity that he could not resist he bent over the bed, caught up her hands and spoke her name. She instantly grew more quiet and turned her face toward his voice.

The doctor was quick to notice this, and at his direction Jack dropped on his knees by the bedside and began talking to her, softly stroking her hands and wrists and face the while; and as he talked she grew calmer.

Hour after hour the man knelt and crooned the story of their playmate days, while the doctor plied his utmost art and the women lavished their care.

Late that night she seemed to quiet away into a light sleep. A smile struggled out upon the doctor's grim features and he went out into the yard for a moment of relaxation. The woodsman laid the girl's hands down upon the covers, rose to his feet, stumbled out to the kitchen and dropped down on a chair by the cook stove.

Barely a minute after, Aunt Liza, sleepless and faithful, tapped him on the shoulder.

"She's frettin' ag'in."

He sprang up and hurried to the sick-room. But before he reached the bedside her tossing had ceased and she lay back against the pillow still and white. He caught up her hands; they were so cold it startled him.

At that moment the doctor came back in. The instant he entered the room the unusual stillness—or the instinct of his profession—must have warned him that something was amiss, for he hurried to the bedside and bent a keen look upon the patient.

"Her han's are like ice," the woodsman faltered.

"She's sinking fast," was the doctor's answer, as he made ready a powerful stimulant. "Rub her hands and wrists and temples—rub toward the heart—and try to call her back with some more of that Black rock and Whispering spring talk. And be quick with those hot cloths, you women. If we can only keep breath in her for the next hour—"

The woodsman, toiling with gray and graven face, was the first to notice the clamminess leaving her hands and a faint tinge of color beginning to drive the chill out of her fingers. The doctor bent low over her, noted the respiration, took her pulse again.

"She's got a chance," he muttered. "Keep on with that talk, Warhope, and rub her wrists and temples—and come on with more hot cloths, the rest of you."

Nearly an hour had gone when the girl's lids fluttered apart and the brilliant eyes strayed open—weak, haggard, but no longer wild and vacant with delirium.

Slowly the eyes traveled over the room, a languid questioning in them; searched the faces about her; dwelt at last upon the face of the woodsman.

"Jack"—it was only a whisper, fluttering out upon the labored breath, but it was the sweetest sound his ears had ever heard—"he didn't kill y'u—"

He dropped on one knee by the bedside, but dared not trust his voice with a word.

"Jack—what—what—?"

"You've be'n sick—bad—and we're all tryin' t' coax y'u back well. When y'u git strong, we'll have a long talk—you and me—but now, won't y'u jist try t' go t' sleep? Won't y'u?"

"Yes," she whispered, like a trusting child—"I'm so—tired—"

One hand stole across the covers and hunted his; the long lashes drooped over the languid eyes and she slipped away to sleep. The others tiptoed from the room.

"What she needs above everything," muttered the doctor, softly closing the door—"sleep—it will do her more good right now than all the medicine in the world."

And there Jack crouched—himself bruised and worn—afraid to move with her hands in his, lest she start awake and so lose one moment of the rest just then precious beyond calculation. Only a man of his superb physical powers could have held the cramped, uncomfortable pose so long.

Several times one of the women, and once the doctor, softly opened the door and peeped in, but they as often closed it again and left the man to his silent vigil.

By the next day she was so much better that the doctor declared her out of danger—time alone being all that was necessary to bring her well.

In the serene evening the sun peeped under the porch roof for one last look before reluctantly passing on to less interesting scenes beyond the gates of the west; fell in at the open parlor window; crossed the floor and just missed the big old-fashioned sofa, soft and cozy with blankets, where the woodsman had carried the girl in his great arms, the wonderful landscape of lawn and bottoms and winding river spreading before her.

The woodsman himself sat on a low footstool at her side. The room had settled still.

From the kitchen came the low drone of voices where Mrs. Curry and Aunt Liza sat by the cook stove. A tall old clock in a corner of the parlor—taller than the woodsman himself, with a peasant man and maid on the face raking hay—punctuated the silence into a sort of drowsy rhythm.

The girl was so still that he thought she slept. Glancing around at her, he was amazed to see her eyes full of tears.

"W'y—what's the matter—?"

"Nothing—!"

Her lips quivered; she turned her face away and cried silently. He picked up her hand; attempted a comforting word. The sprawled dead figure in the old cabin crossed his mind—the brother in whom she still believed; whose death she still mourned; of whose degradation and deep dishonor she was haply spared from ever knowing—and the attempt failed.

She turned back to him after a time, brushed away the tears and a brave suggestion of the smile that made her eyes so wonderful brightened them.

"Ain't it jist terrible f'r me t' cry like this, when y'u're all s' good to me!"

He hitched the footstool closer to the sofa. It surprised him to feel a queer weakness in his breast and a tightness in his throat when he tried to speak.

"Do y'u think y'u're strong enough t' talk—some?"

"W'y, I could git up—a'most."

A sudden thoughtfulness displaced the smile.

"Do y'u remember that letter y'u give me from Pap Simons las' Saturd'y?"

The girl raised her eyes.

"T' be opened the day you're twenty-one—I've wondered and wondered what was in it."

He looked down at the floor; looked up again.

"This is the day."

"No!"

"I'm twenty-one t'day—and"—free, he was about to say, but didn't.

"Is it possible it's only be'n six days sence—"

"Six days," was his slow comment.

It Was the Biggest Word He Had Ever Said in His Life.

"Don't seem like s' much could happen in six days—hardly—"

He fumbled in his blouse; took out the letter in its formidable envelope; held it toward her.

She took it and, glancing over it, handed it back. He tore it open and drew out its contents.

Wide-eyed, they read it through—a title deed in fee simple to the Warhope homestead, together with all stock and betterments and growing crops thereon, duly conveyed and executed to Jack Warhope; and, folded inside the deed, a bank draft in his favor for ten thousand dollars.

The man stared at the girl; the girl stared at the man.

"I'm b'lievin' Pap Simon meant t' do this all along," he mused at last. "I can see it now, as I look back. That's why he was s' good to me. Mebbe"—he hesitated, "that's why he had me—bound—"

"Pore father!"—the girl's eyes strayed away to where the silver contour of the river rimmed the bottoms—"it was his—way."

He let loose the deed, leaving it in her hand. She turned back from the silver-rimmed bottoms and glanced it over again.

"W'y, it was made out only last Friday—he never knowed it, but that was lady-slipper day—and so he made it a—big day—after all—"

Very slowly, with the tightness still at his throat, the woodsman took out his pocketbook and laid a flattened yellow orchid in the girl's palm.

"I found it there at the edge of Mud haul, where you got on the house-boat."

The girl fumbled the flattened blossom in her hand; the color of returning health tingled into her cheeks.

"The one you found that—day," she stammered. She lifted a tiny glance up to him from under her long lashes; let her eyes stray far out across the bottoms toward Alpine island. "Pore—Ken! Hopkins met me up the road and told me he was sick on the boat. I didn't know Hopkins—then."

"I did—and I knowed Brickbat alley. That's why I rode after y'u the minute I got y'ur note. Hopkins was a—bad man, but we've already talked about him, and what b'come of him. All that money he stol'd I—tuck away from 'im at the parsonage the evening of the—funeral, and drove 'im out o' Flatwoods. That's why he went, and all that stuff he told y'u about—Ken was jist lies. I've got all that money hid, and we'll put it back in the safe as soon as you're able t' open it."

The eyes came back from the distant point where Alpine island split the silver rim of the bottoms.

"I know now that what he said was all lies, but I didn't then. As soon as I got on the boat I saw—Ken wasn't there, but Hopkins locked the door and wouldn't let me off. And such a cabin as that house-boat had—tight as a jail. He made all the apologies a man could f'r raisin' false hopes about—Ken, and told me he'd done it all f'r my own good. Then he told me there was two men plannin' to rob the safe that night and he'd brung me on the boat t' git me out o' danger."

She paused; looked at the man; went on.

"He said he was goin' t' git you t' he'p 'im and you'd both watch the house, and after the danger was over you'd come and bring me home. He said one o' the robbers would be Slim Finger Doolin, the most dangerous pistol fighter in the world. I asked 'im how 'e found it all out—not knowin' then that he 'imself was Slim Finger Doolin—but he said he'd rather tell me all about it next day. From that minute I was afear'd of him, though he was as polite and respectful to me as 'e could be, short of lettin' me go."

She felt the eyes of the woodsman upon her. He looked away and she went on.

"From that minute I mistrusted he was one o' the robbers, though I never let on, and as soon as he was gone I tried all I could t' git out. I was afear'd"—she looked down at the blanket; crumpled a corner of it hard in her fingers—"you might chance t' hear 'em, and I knowed if y'u did you'd fight, and I was half wild f'r fear they'd kill y'u. Oh, if I'd only knowed it was you that moved the boat!—Jack why didn't y'u let me out—!"

The man stared at the floor and twisted his great hands till the knuckles turned white.

"G—d!" he groaned—"if I only had! But I thought you'd be safest there. It was the worst mistake I ever made in my life—that and lettin' Hopkins preach Pap Simon's—funeral, but I didn't have no good proof on 'im then."

The girl glanced at his bowed form. The tick of the tall old clock in the corner throbbed loud on the silence; through the open window came the call of crows flying home.

"It was away in the night," the girl went on at last, thoughtful and slow, "b'fore I fin'ly got out by beatin' a hole in the roof with a stove leg, swum ashore and run home as fast as I could. I'd jist got in the yard when I saw you a-standin' there by the winder. Then come that shot and I thought Slim Finger Doolin had—killed y'u. I don't know what happened after—that—"

"After that," the man echoed, his voice low and broken, "we've all be'n tryin' to coax the bravest and most wonderful girl in the world back to life."

"Life!" she murmured, as if the word came new and strange to her after being so fearfully close to death. "Oh, I want so much t' have it all back ag'in—"

"And y'u shall have it back!" the man cried, catching the appeal in her voice. "You've got it now. Every breath brings the woods and hills, the sunshine and flowers, jist that much nearer—w'y, you're as good as well this very minute."

The smile in her eyes came alive again, stole out over her face and brought back a heartening suggestion of the dimples.

By some intangible bridge all unseen of human eyes, the smile found its way across to the man's grave and serious face; kindled it—like the glint of morning upon the front of Black rock.

He picked up her hand; touched the faded orchid in her palm.

"I 'low y'u ain't f'rgot the day we—I—found it—"

He felt the twitch of her fingers.

"I tried t' ask y'u t'—promise me—that day—I'm askin' y'u t'—promise me—now—"

It was the biggest word he had ever said in his life. Much like a man who had committed a crime and awaited his sentence, he raised his head; ventured a glance at the girl.

Something very wonderful had come to her face—like the birth of morning; and her eyes like star trails—a marvelous transfiguration that only one thing in the world can bring.

He slipped from the footstool and knelt down by her side; her arm came up off the blanket and hunted its way across his massive shoulders.

The peasant man and maid on the face of the old clock in the corner smiled, raking hay.

CRABBED OLD SILAS FINALLY SAW LIGHT

Reformation Really Got Him Out of Two Holes.

Silas Atkinson was as industrious as he was vindictive and crabbed. His only daughter, Martha, who lived with him in their brush home in the hills, was falling a victim to his tyranny; she bade fair to go overworked and starved to the grave as her mother had gone.

Martha found favor in the eyes of big Ben Thomas, a neighboring lad who was seldom too busy to come over for a visit; but old Silas soon stopped such nonsense.

"Now lookee here, Ben," he said. "I need Marthy's help, and I'm a-going to have it. If you'll come and hire out to me you kin see her, pervidin' you'll promise never to say a word of love or anything to keep her off her work. I'll shoot you if you play false! Will you come?"

Ben agreed and became a member of the household. Martha gained new spirit and new color, though her toil was not lightened.

"Guess he's given up marryin' and takin' her away," muttered old Silas, chuckling grimly. "Why, she's worth twicet as much as she was, worth a whole man's wages and don't cost a cent! I got Ben cheap too. Those two lovin' fools makes a good bargain for me!"

One June morning the two men were digging a well; Ben was working the hoist at the top, and Silas was at the bottom, digging.

Finally Ben pulled the bucket out of the hole. "Old man," he called down the well, "I've quit! Marthy and me has some important business to look after downtown. You ain't hardly safe to be trusted out just now, so I'll keep this rope up here. Now don't yell too hard; it's bad for the throat. Good-by!"

The angriest man in all the history of the hills stayed down in the well that afternoon, for no relief came in answer to his shouting.

At sunset Ben's smiling face appeared at the opening. "Old man, we've just been married. I toted fair, and I haven't said a word to her about love while I was workin' for you, but I quit this mornin', you know. It was all arranged before I come. You've stole her youth and her money all these years, but now she's goin' free and safe. You'll sign a release of your daughter and your promise to be good before you ever get out of that hole. Will you sign now?"

Old Silas would not sign! Never, never, never!

Ben yawned. "Well," he said, "I'm goin' back to the house for the night, where Marthy has our weddin' supper. Say, but it's grand! I'll come out here in the mornin' and see if you're reasonable."

He came in the morning and again at night and once more on the second morning, but Silas was still firm.

On the second night, however, the man capitulated. "I was an old fool," he said. "I robbed and was killin' her with overwork. I'll pay her up honest, though I reckon you ought to leave me here in this hole forever for what I done in the past. But say, Ben, I'd sure like to taste Marthy's weddin' cake! Do I get out?"

He got out; and the Grandpa Atkinson of later years couldn't have been finer if he had been born with a halo!—Youth's Companion.

Baby Tours in Suitcase

A customs inspector examining baggage when the Cunard liner Albania arrived recently opened what he thought was a suitcase and to his surprise a four-month-old baby smiled contentedly up at him. The extraordinary crib was well ventilated and the youngster was giving part of his time to the contents of a nursing bottle.

The parents, Dr. and Mrs. Charles Lewis of Los Angeles, explained that their young son was very much at home in his new quarters. The doctor said the baby was born in Vienna. As he and his wife had to do much traveling it was a burden to carry the young son in their arms, so they had had the special case made for him. The special case is 12 inches wide and 36 inches long. The doctor said it was a safe and sanitary method of transportation, says the New York Times.

King's Train in Museum

The court train of the late King Ludwig II of Bavaria has been repaired and refitted in the state railway shops here and returned to Nuremberg, where it is kept in a railway museum.

The train cost a fortune, the car used as the king's drawing-room having been wonderfully furnished. The tables are of marble and the chairs of blue silk with heavy gold ornaments.

The ceiling of the car, too, is of gold, while the coat of arms of the Wittelsbach family and the initials of the king are displayed freely on all the cars in gold relief.

Most Prized Order

Prior to June 26, 1902, the day upon which King Edward VII would have been crowned, but for a sudden attack of appendicitis, the highest honor in his gift would, in most people's estimation, have been the Order of the Garter, and it is still the premier order of chivalry in the world. On that day, however, a new "Order" was instituted, which, for real distinction, takes precedence of any other. It is the Order of Merit, which is limited to 24 men and women of extraordinary eminence.

Tibute to the Legion

"CERTAINLY if any organization is in a position to recognize the value of mutual understanding between nations, it is the American Legion," declared William Mather Lewis, president of George Washington university, in an address on "Education for International Understanding" made before the National Educational association at a recent meeting of that organization at Washington. President Mather continued: "The improved architecture in various parts of our nation, particularly in smaller communities, bears testimony to the effect which their stay in Europe had upon our soldiers. Likewise, the improved sanitary conditions in the reconstructed districts of France bear testimony to the lessons learned from our troops." In referring further to the Legion, the noted savant stated: "It seems to me that one who would not go to the defense of his government in its hour of danger has no right to enjoy its benefits in time of peace. The Legion has that right."

OBTAINS AID FOR MANY LEGION MEN

The national rehabilitation committee of the American Legion at Washington has thrown the spotlight on many little obscure dramas of the World war that for many seasons past have played to an unresponsive house, with the result that hundreds of disabled veterans, who of themselves were unable to obtain relief, are now on the road to health and happiness. There is the case of John Adams, disabled veteran, to whom the Legion extended a helping hand.

In June, 1918, John Adams enlisted at Pittsburgh, Pa., as a private in the infantry. The following October, while participating in bayonet drill, he got tangled up with that instrument and jabbed himself in the groin. He was bandaged up by one of the camp doctors. He got better and, though his side troubled him now and then, he didn't take any particular pains to tell the army surgeons about it when he was examined for discharge, and consequently got by the mustering-out officers with a clear bill of health.

John went back to his pre-war work as a stationary engineer and carried on for some ten months. Then his old bayonet wound began to assert itself. He had to give up the struggle and filed a claim for compensation in December, 1919. He was sent by the veterans' bureau to a government hospital to be operated on several months later for gland trouble in his groin. Immediately following the operation he grew worse, until it became necessary to rate him as permanently and totally disabled, no service connection, however, being admitted.

From that time on John's life has been just one hospital after another—and John was still a very sick man. John had never been to school much, and had to depend upon others to lead him through the red-tape labyrinth that shut off help. One agency after another was lost in the maze. Then some one steered John onto the national rehabilitation committee of the American Legion. Things looked better from then on.

The Legion committee got the names of his comrades in the service, secured their affidavits affirming John's accident at camp; obtained the name and affidavit of the medical officer who treated John at camp, and finally got together the historical data necessary to establish the fact that the boy was hurt in the manner, on the date, at the place, just as he said.

But this was not enough. There was no mention of a bayonet stab anywhere in John's official papers in the War department. Therefore, John could not have been stabbed. He was still "out of luck" in so far as connecting his disability with service was concerned. John had by now been hospitalized continuously for four years and a half. He was ragged. He despaired—but not the Legion. Outside physicians and surgeons were called in. The government doctors were interviewed personally and finally, with every bit of evidence that could be secured from all sources, the case was placed before the director of the veterans' bureau at a special conference with Legion representatives.

Within a few days John received a check for several thousand dollars from the United States veterans' bureau, covering the compensation he had gone without for so many years.

Demand Monument for First Killed in War

In Locust Hill cemetery, Evansville, Ind., lies the body of the first American soldier to lose his life in the World war. No imposing monument casts a protecting shadow over that grave; it is marked only by a small glass fruit jar with a piece of paper inside bearing his name in faded letters "James Bethel Gresham."

The Everette Burdette post of the American Legion of Evansville is sponsoring a movement to raise funds to build a monument over this last resting place of the first doughboy to go "west." The chamber of commerce and other civic clubs and organizations are planning to support the movement.

Gresham was honored with a state funeral when his body was returned from France.

Norwalk, Iowa.—"I have been meaning for some time to write and tell you how much good your medicine has done me. When I started to take it I was almost bed fast and would have been in bed all the time if I had had any one to care for my children. There was so much swelling and pain that I could hardly take a step. I took seven bottles of dia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and used Lydia E. Pinkham's Sanative Wash, and found that so healing. am not entirely well yet for I was in bad shape when I started your medicine, but I am so much better that I am not afraid to recommend it, and I think if I keep on taking it, it will cure me. I have done my work all alone this summer, caring for four children, and I canned 300 quarts of fruit and made 9 glasses of jelly, so you see I must be better. I feel pretty good all the time and I am glad to tell others about the medicine."—Mrs. C. J. WENNERBERG, Box 141, Norwalk, Iowa.

A well-known Mississippi printer was fond of playing pranks. One day while riding with an illiterate man, he began gravely to chatter Italian to his driver.

The man looked wildly at him, but said nothing. Finally the printer, in pretended pique, said:

"I dunno what yo'all is talkin' about."

"What's wrong? Haven't you any brains?"

"Yessah, I got some brains all right, but dey ain't no use to me now."

PEOPLE TALKED ABOUT

Vauclain, the "Apostle of Prosperity"

Samuel M. Vauclain, president of the Baldwin Locomotive works, and who is now on a tour of the country, is considered one of the nation's foremost captains of industry. As an economist he has won the title among business associates of "Apostle of Prosperity."

In 1920 he was considered as a Presidential possibility and was backed by many who had been close observers of his work as a member of the national council of defense. He has gained considerable distinction in connection with railroads.

When the Chilean government decided to electrify the state railways in that country, Mr. Vauclain went to Chili as representative of the Westinghouse corporation and the Baldwin works. The task of electrifying the Chilean state railways was considered the biggest undertaking of its kind at that time.

When business depression gripped the country, a little over a year ago, Mr. Vauclain shipped the largest string of steam locomotives ever assembled across the country under their own power. Everywhere this unique train, called the "Prosperity Special," passed through it was a triumphal procession, and foremost business authorities of the nation at that time held this demonstration had much influence in stabilizing business and restoring confidence to the industry of the country.

Presents Her Countrywomen at Court

Mrs. Frank B. Kellogg, wife of the American ambassador at the Court of St. James, made a charming picture when she presented 23 of her countrywomen to their majesties at Buckingham palace at the last two courts held there this season.

This emphasizes again the many and various tasks which demand the time and tax the ingenuity of the woman who represents the United States government in the kingdom of Great Britain. And, it can be pointed out, Mrs. Kellogg performs her duties to perfection.

Mrs. Kellogg before her marriage was Clara M. Cook of Rochester, Minn., and it was there she met Frank Billings Kellogg, a rising young attorney, then in the employ of the city. And, she probably would tell you, she never dreamed then that some day she would be called upon to present to the king and queen of England 23 American women of the highest social stratum.

Ambassador Kellogg acted in the capacity of unofficial advisor at the recent London conference on the Dawes plan. He also has his social duties, and at the banquet given recently at the Pilgrims' club he found himself seated next to the prince of Wales and Secretary of State Hughes. The dinner was described as being attended by one of the most distinguished gatherings of men in the public life of England and America.

Insists His "Beam of Death" Is a Terror

H. Grindell Matthews, the British wireless telephone expert, known as the inventor of what he says has been miscalled "the death ray," declared on his arrival in New York recently that his "electrical beam," when properly developed, would be able to wipe out whole armies or the beam could be regulated to stun troops long enough to permit of their capture.

"With the small apparatus I have already developed I have been able to stop a motor engine at a distince of 65 feet. I have also killed a rat and a mouse and lighted an electric lamp at the same distance. In these experiments I used a six-inch beam," Matthews said. He asserted that the purpose of his visit was not to make money, and that he would sell his invention only to Great Britain.

American scientists, however, have declared that what Matthews claims to be able to do is impossible, and that exhaustive research into the properties of every known ray has proved them impotent to deliver through the air any force powerful enough to be of practical value in war time.

Matthews refused absolutely to reveal anything concerning the nature of his invention. He said that he had not patented it for fear of disclosing the secret. Only two persons share the knowledge with him, he said, and in case anything happens to him they will be able to carry on the experiments.

His Fight for Economy Splits Brazil

President Artur da Silva Bernardes of Brazil, and a majority in congress are arrayed with the Liberals in the latest clash of the forces of reaction with the forces of liberalism in Latin-America. The reactionaries, composed of an aggrieved military clique and supported by a group of wealthy coffee planters, are seeking to re-establish the feudalistic Brazil of 100 years ago.

President Bernardes' program of reform is said by many to be the main cause of the present strife. In an effort to cut expenses he radically reduced the army appropriation. He introduced an income tax, something hitherto unheard of in Brazil, and gained the ill will of the coffee planters.

Early this year the cost of living soared, and Bernardes issued a decree fixing the prices of food. This was loudly denounced by the reactionary newspapers. For all this, Bernardes is not considered a radical. When he entered office he promised certain reforms, many of which would be regarded as conservative in America. In labor disputes he showed no partiality and at times was denounced by the workers as a reactionary.

His drastic economies have made him many powerful enemies, for he has abolished many lucrative offices, particularly in the army. His only extravagance—if it may be called that—was his appropriations for education, aimed to wipe out Brazil's reputation for illiteracy.

FACING WRONG WAY

In Arkansas a man and his wife were sitting outside their house when a funeral procession passed. The man was comfortably seated in a chair that was tilted back towards the street, his feet on the sill of an open window.

"I think that's the funeral of ol' man Williams," he remarked. "Reckon it's the biggest seen in these parts for a while, ain't it, Car'line?"

"A purty good-sized one, Bud," his wife replied.

"I sure would like to see it," said Bud. "What a pity I aint' facin' that way!"

SUFFERED TWELVE YEARS WITH STOMACH TROUBLE

"My recovery has been a surprise to myself and all my friends," recently declared Jacob Ferdinand, R. F. D. 2, Fond Du Lac, Wis., a prominent citizen of this city, in relating his remarkable experience with Tanlac.

"The suffering I went through from stomach trouble for 12 or 13 years simply can't be described. In my efforts to find relief I spent over one thousand dollars, but kept getting worse instead of better. A large part of two years I was laid up in bed and for four months of that time I couldn't get up at all.

"Finally I sent my daughter for a bottle of Tanlac with the result that I found immediate relief, and seven bottles made a well and happy man of me. I will gladly talk to anyone personally and answer all letters regarding my experience with Tanlac. It proved a godsend to me."

Mystery Present

"And how did my precious like the little present I made him with my very own hands?" cooed the sweet young thing to the object of her affections.

"It was lovely," replied the young man. "But there was one thing I should very much like to know, dear."

"And what is that, pet?"

"I want to know what your present was intended for," he answered, tactlessly. "My sister said it was a cushion. Mother thought it was a tobacco pouch, while I'm using it for a pen-wiper."

Means Peace and Plenty

The name Saturnian days was given in a mythical period in the early history of Italy, when the god Saturn shared the throne with Janus, the reigning king, and by his mild, pacific and beneficent rule raised the people to a relatively high degree of civilization. Agriculture and the useful arts flourished throughout the land; innocence, freedom, peace and happiness reigned, and sorrows were forgotten. The ancient Romans celebrated the Saturnalia in December of each year in honor of Saturn. The phrase "Saturnian days" is used at present to denote any period of peace and plenty.—Kansas City Star.

SHORT BOLTS

By HANK, The Drivtr

On a large flat rock about six miles from town a traveling Evangelist painted the following sign "What Will You Do When You Die"? Below, a hustling merchant has painted "Use Cure-all-Oil, good for Burns for sale by Ideal Pharmacy." If life were a thing money could buy, the Jews would live and the Irish would die. Our timekeeper thinks Celluloid is a sister to Harold. Down our way they tell of a man who was so hard that he could ride a porcupine through a bed of cactus and never get a scratch. Ideal Social service Work—telling hair-raising stories to bald-headed men. Sam is a brave fellow. He got on a rampage and wandered into a city morgue and offered to lick anyone in the place. We will now join that Howling Hollywood Holocaust, intitled; "Come pave our streets with doughnuts so we'll have a Holy City. No. Alice, just because a man has cauliflower ears, it is no sign he's a vegetaria.n. It's a good thing Adam wasn't Irishman, or he'd have chosen a Shamrock instead of a figleaf. For Barber Shop reading—our mail clerk tells of a girl who went into a drug store and asked for 15 cents worth of aromatic spirits of kimona. That's nothing. We know a man whose wife asked him to bring home some fine yarn, and he brought her a copy of True Confessions Magazine Whether or not bootlegging is rising or declining, we are quite certain that it's not on the level. Noble—"And then he put his arms around me and I wanted to scream and I couldn't, and when I finally could I didn't want to."

You can't keep a bad drink down. It is b tter to be broke than never to have loved at all. Honesty is the best policy," said the speaker. Instantly ten insurance agents in different parts of the room rose to dispute his word. Who is this guy Tommy Rot that we hear so much about? The bachelor is unfortunate; he has no home to stay awa yfrom. "You may go as far as you like," she said softly. So they drove on five miles farther and started back home

NO PLACE TO SPOON

Yesterday aftrenoon we saw a young man—and he lives right here in Forest City— driving his Ford coupe car south on the Wilson Hizh way. He was traveling not less than twenty-five miles an hour This isn't very fast under ordinary circumstances—but in this case it was just twenty-five miles too fast. He was driving wih his left hand and with the right he held one of Forest City's fairest damsels closely around the waist. She was enjoying the situation immensely—and he too. And it wouldn't have been any of our businss if this young man with his eyes and thoughts directed towards the girl, had been any where except on a public highway. We gave the couple twothirds of the road as he turned sharply to avoid thec rash. You could not have put your hand between the fenders of the two cars as they passed. Not until the cars were along side of each other did the fond lovers awaken to the fact of the close escape from a serious, if not fatal, accident of one or more persons. If a copule must spoon in public, why not go to the park of on the court house square? Next to the drunken driver and speeded, no class of people are a bigger menace o the highway travelers than the love sick nut who persists in driving with one hand whil he hugs his sweatheart with the other—Winnebago Republican.

Brit News-Tribune— It's a dirty shamt the way those Forest City boys do, but at that it seems to be effective. Britt lost a perfectly fine school teacher last year to one of those Forest City lads. It's a surprise to us though that those Forest City lassies will go with a boy who uses one arm to hug. Couldn't get away with that on the Brit girls. When hey want o spoon here old number 46-30700 just pulls out at the side of the road and stops and then there is some real hugging with both arms, two sets of lips and all the appurtenances thereto. Hope that Forest City girl who got hugged with just one arm comes to Brit and gets a real sensation.

THE RED LINE TRAIL

by Crittenden Marriott

NOT a western story, but a strange and thrilling combination of international intrigue and adventures on the sea. The author has in a singular degree the dramatic sense and the gift of narration. Although there are some latter-day pirates, a supposedly uninhabited island in the Atlantic and a mysterious chart, it is not a tale of buried treasure. That which the adventurers found on the island was more romantic and interesting than gold or jewels.

COOLIDGE ACCEPTS WITH CONFIDENCE

Has Abiding Faith in Judgment of People on Accomplishments and Purposes.

SEEKS PEACE AND THRIFT

Wants Opportunity for All, No Government Monopolies, Independent But Helpful Foreign Policy.

Washington, Aug. 14.—No single question vital to the people of the United States was dodged by President Coolidge in the first great speech of the political campaign—his speech accepting the nomination as President offered him by the Republican party, and delivered in Washington the evening of August 14.

After outlining the sound foundation of the party system of government, the President said: "Party means political co-operation, not as an end in itself, but a means, an instrument of government. If founded upon a great moral principle and directed with scrupulous regard for its integrity, it cannot fail to sweep onward and upward, advancing always steadily and surely, a mighty constructive force, a glorious bearer of progress.

"That is what the Republican party always has been and is today. In full faith that such it will continue to be, deeply conscious of the high honor it confers and the responsibility it imposes, I accept its nomination for President of the United States.

"In the history of our country is recorded the public services rendered by our party for more than the threescore years. That is secure. I pass on to the recent past and the present."

Progress of Four Years.

The President pointed out the condition of the nation in March, 1921, when the Republicans resumed the reins of government after a lapse of eight years. Though more than two years had passed since the armistice, the nation was still technically in a state of war. No diplomatic relations existed with Turkey, Greece, Russia, Colombia or Mexico, the Far East situation caused "grave apprehensions." Because of the war, "a reckless extravagance had come to characterize the administration of public affairs and was all too prevalent in private life." The national debt had risen to the staggering total of $24,000,000,000, more than $7,000,000,000 of it in short-time obligations without provision for payment. Government bonds were below par. High war taxes burdened the people. Demobilization and liquidation were incomplete. Huge railroad accounts remained unsettled. Transportation was crippled. Unliquidated foreign debts amounted to $11,000,000,000. Banks were filled with frozen assets. Interest was high, capital scarce, and financial distress acute. About 5,000,000 were without employment. No adequate provision had been made for relieving disabled veterans and their dependents. The great powers continued to burden their peoples by building competitive armaments. An avalanche of war-worn people and cheapened merchandise impended upon America from foreign lands, the President pointed out.

Turning to the settlement of these vast problems since the start of the Republican regime, the President pointed out that treaties of world-wide importance have been ratified with Germany, Austria, Hungary, Colombia and Mexico, that 42 other treaties have met with the approval of the senate, while 6 still await action. Friendly intercourse with Greece and Turkey has been resumed. Peace and American rights have been assured in the Far East and the Pacific.

Turning to finance, the President called attention to the enactment of the budget system, and the resultant tremendous savings.

"For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921," President Coolidge said, "our expenditures were $5,538,000,000 and our surplus was $86,000,000. For the year just closed our expenditures were $3,497,000,000, and our surplus exceeded $500,000,000. This was a reduction in the annual cost of government of $2,041,000,000. The public debt now stands at about $21,250,000,000, which is a reduction in three years of about $2,750,000,000 and means an annual saving in interest of more than $120,000,000. The $7,000,000,000 of short-time obligations have all been quietly refunded or paid. The internal revenue taxes have been reduced twice, and many of them repealed, so that during the present fiscal year the tax receipts show a saving to the people of approximately $6,000,000 a day compared with 1921. One government bond has sold well over 105."

The President pointed out that more than 40 per cent of the debt due us from foreign nations has been liquidated, providing funds for liquidating about $13,000,000,000 of the national debt during a 62-year term.

"The finances of this nation have been managed with a genius and a success unmatched since the days of Hamilton," Mr. Coolidge declared.

"A great revival of industry took place, which is spreading to agriculture. Complaint of unemployment has ceased, wages have increased. Capital has become plentiful at a low rate of interest," Mr. Coolidge declared, "and the banks of our country, as a whole, show a high percentage of liquid assets"

Speaking of the generous laws passed to relieve disabled veterans, the President said that more than 71,000 have been rehabilitated, 38,000 of whom are earning more than they did before the war. Compensation is being paid at the rate of about $100,000,000 a year, soon to be increased by $30,000,000 more, $40,000,000 have been provided for hospital facilities, which are open to veterans of all American wars.

"No government," the President declared, "ever provided so generously for those disabled by service in time of war."

Touching the exclusion law and restricted immigration generally, the President said: "Restricted immigration is not an offensive but a purely defensive action. It is not adopted in criticism of others in the slightest degree, but solely for the purpose of protecting ourselves. We cast no aspersions on any race or creed, but we must remember that every object of our institutions of society and government will fail unless America be kept American."

Next the President dealt with the tariff. "By means of a protective tariff," he said, "we have saved American agriculture, labor, and industry from the menace of having their great home market destroyed through the dumping upon it of a flood of foreign products. Under this wise policy we saw an economic revival, and our people as a whole, in marked distinction from the sufferers from the financial distress and depression of other lands, have come into an era of prosperity and plenty. As a source of revenue the tariff surpassed all expectations in producing an annual return of the unprecedented sum of about $550,000,000. A fiscal policy which places a large and much needed revenue in the public treasury, while stimulating business to a condition of abounding prosperity, defends itself against any criticism. Its merits are demonstrated by its results. We have protected our own inhabitants from the economic disaster of an invasion of too many foreign people or too much foreign merchandise."

The Washington Conference.

Next the acceptance speech dealt with the Washington conference whereby an end was put to the ruinous competitive naval armaments of world powers, the importance of which has never been fully realized by the people in general, Mr. Coolidge declared.

Turning to the "honest government" issue, President Coolidge pointed out bluntly that in all his studies of political history he could not recall an adminisration which was desirous of a dishonest government that, to check extravagance, introduced a budget system, cut taxes, purged pay rolls, made enormous reductions in the public debt and laid firmer foundations for the peace of the world.

President Coolidge declared he favored the system of private American enterprise and was opposed to the extension of government ownership and control; that he believed in economy in public expenditures and the practical application of the tehory; that he believed in tax reduction and tax reform; that he favored protection.

Favors Permanent Court.

"I favor the permanent court and further limitation of armaments," the President said. "I am opposed to aggressive war. I shall avoid involving ourselves in the political controversies of Europe, but I shall do what I can to encourage American citizens and resources to assist in restoring Europe, with the sympathetic support of our government. I want agriculture and industry on a sound basis of prosperity and equality. I shall continue to strive for the economic, moral and spiritual welfare of my country. American citizens will decide in the coming election whether these principles shall have their approval and support.

"The domestic affairs of our country appear to me to be by far the chief concern. From this source comes our strength. The home market consumes nearly all our production. Within our own boundaries will be determined to a very large degree the economic welfare and the moral worth of the American people. These are plain facts, but there are others equally plain."

Reaffirming his opposition to entrance into the League of Nations as a surrender of independence, the Presidena favored becoming a member of the permanent Court of International Justice, "as peace means fundamentally a reign of law." Entrance into the so-called World court "would do much to indicate our determination to restrain the rule of force and solidify and sustain the rule of reason among nations," Mr. Coolidge said.

America Helps Europe.

The President reviewed the difficulties of Europe and the unavailing efforts to find a way out until the American plan, proposed in 1922, was finally adopted, under which the reparations commission appointed a committee of experts, whose three American members included Gen. Charles G. Dawes, the President's running mate on the Republican ticket. The appointment of General Dawes as chairman and the report which has met world-wide approbation were pointed out.

When the reparations plan is in operation, the President said, he would consider it time to approach the great powers with the proposal for another conference to limit armaments still further and devise plans for the codification of international law.

"I trust that never again will the women of this nation be called on to sacrifice their loved ones to the terrible scourge of war," President Coolidge said.

Touching Latin America, the President said that we have constantly striven to come to more complete understandings with those nations. He recited the help given Mexico to avert domestic violence there, and the indication of a policy of making it worth while for a government to conduct itself so as to merit recognition. He pointed to the written agreement with Mexico to negotiate a treaty of amity and commerce such as has not been in existence since 1881.

Equal Opportunities for All.

Of discrimination of all kinds, President Coolidge said: "This is one country; we are one people united by common interests. There should be no favorites and no outcasts; no race or religious prejudices in the government. America opposes special privilege for anybody, and favors equal opportunity for everybody. It has adopted these conclusions because they are the logical conclusions of our ideals of freedom. Moreover, we believe they contribute to our material welfare. We oppose the artificial supports of privilege and monopoly because they are both unjust and uneconomic. They are not right. They do not work."

The Farm Situation.

Reviewing the situation of the farmer, the President said that one of the first thoughts in 1921 was for the relief and revival of agriculture as a fundamental industry, and touched upon the credits of between three and four hundred million dollars extended through the War Finance corporation, an additional $50,000,000 provided for the relief of the cattle industry, and the formation of a $10,000,000 corporation in the spring which, it was estimated, can furnish $100,000,000 for diversification and relief in the Northwest. He told of the activities of the intermediate credit banks, directly and indirectly assisting 500,000 farmers.

The President commented on the present upturn of prices for agricultural products.

"The government rendered a great deal of assistance," he said, "and private enterprise co-operated, but the fundamental remedy was provided, as it always must be provided, not so much through the enactment of legislative laws as through the working out of economic laws. Because the farmers have thoroughly realized this, they have on the whole opposed price fixing by legislation. While maintaining that sound position, they have seen a partial relief come in a natural way, as it was bound to come.

"We now need in agriculture more organization, co-operation, and diversification. The farmer should have the benefit of legislation providing for flood control and development of inland waterways, better navigation east and south from the Great Lakes, reclamation, and especially relief for those who cannot meet their payments on irrigation projects. But the main problem is marketing. Co-operative effort, reorganization of the freight-rate structure, good business, and good wages in manufacturing, and the settlement of European affairs will all help to provide better market conditions.

"The Republican platform recognizes that agriculture should be on a basis of economic equality with other industries. This is easy to say, but the farmers themselves and their advisers have never been able to agree on a plan to provide it by law. Now that nature and economic law have given some temporary relief, I propose, therefore, to appoint a committee to investigate and report measures to the congress in December that may help secure this result which we all desire. I want profitable agriculture established permanently. I want to see the dollar of the farmer always purchase as much as any other dollar.

"Under the policy of protection and restrictive immigration," he asserted, "no deflation of wages has occurred. While the cost of living has gone down, wages have advanced. The 12-hour day and the seven-day week have practically been abolished. The uninterrupted operation of public utilities with mutually satisfactory and legally established methods of adjusting labor questions have been sought. Collective bargaining and voluntary arbitration have been encouraged. Republican rule has raised the wage earner to a higher standard than he ever occupied before anywhere in the world."

Reduction of Expenses.

President Coolidge then pointed out that the people of the country, because of the war have had to recreate nearly one-fifth of our national resources. We can make up the loss, he said, only by saving part of what we produce each day.

"It is for that reason," he continued, "that the present administration has made every possible effort to cut down the expenses of government. The expenses of the government reach everybody. Taxes take from everyone a part of his earnings, and force everyone to work for a certain part of his time for the government.

"When we come to realize that the yearly expenses of all the governments in this country have reached the stupendous sum of about $7,500,000,000, we get some idea of what this means. Of this amount about $3,500,000,000 is needed by the national government, and the remainder by local governments. Such a sum is difficult to comprehend. It represents all the pay of 5,000,000 wage earners receiving $5 a day, working 300 days in the year. If the government should add on $100,000,000 of expense, it would represent four days more work of these wage earners. These are some of the reasons why I want to cut down public expense.

"Because of my belief in these principles, I favor economy that the taxes of everybody may be reduced. Much has already been done. The bill which I signed will save the people about $1,000,000 each day. I want further tax reduction and more tax reform. The raising of the revenue required to conduct our government is intimately connected with our economic welfare. If it is done by wise and just laws, the burden will be most easily borne. But if the method of taxation is not sound disaster will follow, reaching even to financial panic. Our first thought should be to maintain unimpaired the activity of agriculture and industry That tax is theoretically best which interferes least with business.

Asks Just Taxation.

"Only about 3,500,000 people pay direct income taxes. The remainder pay, but pay indirectly, in the cost of all purchases, from a pair of shoes to a railroad ticket. This country has at least 107,000,000 of these indirect taxpayers. I am not disturbed about the effect on a few thousand people with large incomes because they have to pay high surtaxes. They can take care of themselves, whatever happens, as the rich always can. What concerns me is the indirect effect of high surtaxes on all the rest of the poeple. Let us always remember the poor. Whatever cry the demagogue may make about his ability to tax the rich, at the end of the year it will always be found that the people as a whole have paid the taxes. We should, therefore, have a system of taxation under which the people as a whole are most likely to be prosperous. Our country will be better off if, disregarding those who appeal to jealousy and envy, it follows in taxation and all else the straight path of justice.

For Economical Campaign.

"Economy should be practiced scrupulously in the conduct of a national campaign. I know it is difficult to distinguish between real service to the people and mere wastefulness. Costs have increased by doubling of the electorate, rendering close calculation impossible.

"Nevertheless, I can perceive no reason why the budget system should not be beneficial in a campaign, as it has proved to be in government. It is to be tested by our committee.

"I would make clearly and definitely one other requirement, that no individual, or group of individuals, may expect any governmental favors in return for party assistance. Whatever anyone gives must be given for the common good, or not at all. Contributions can be received on no other basis.

"For the first time after having opportunity fully to organize, the women of the nation are bringing the new force which they represent directly to bear on our political affairs. I know that the influence of womanhood will guard the home, which is the citadel of the nation. I know it will be a protector of childhood. I know it will be on the side of humanity. I welcome it as a great instrument of mercy and a mighty agency of peace. I want every woman to vote.

"The Constitution is the sole source and guaranty of national freedom. We believe that the safest place to declare and interpret the Constitution which the people have made is in the Supreme court of the United States.

"Under our institutions there is no limitation on the aspirations a mother may have for her children. That system I pray to continue. This country would not be a land of opportunity, America would not be America, if the people were shackled with government monopolies.

"Our country has adopted prohibition and provided by legislation for its enforcement. It is the duty of the citizen to observe the law, and the duty of the Executive to enforce. I propose to do my duty as best I can.

For Child Labor Amendment.

"Our different states have had different standards, or no standards at all, for child labor. The congress should have authority to provide a uniform law applicable to the whole nation which will protect childhood. Our country cannot afford to let anyone live off the earnings of its youth of tender years. Their places are not in the factory, but in the school, that the men and women of tomorrow may reach a higher state of existence and the nation a higher standard of citizenship.

"I am in favor of national defense, not merely as an abstract state of mind, but as a concrete mode of action. I favor not merely talking about it, but doing something about it. I do not want the safety of my country to be imperiled in its domestic or foreign relations by any failure to be ready to preserve order or repel attack. But I propose to work for voluntary observance of law and mutual covenants of peace.

Common Sense Greatest Asset.

"We are likely to hear a great deal of discussion about liberal thought and progressive action. It is well for the country to have liberality in thought and progress in action, but its greatest asset is common sense. In the commonplace things of life lies the strength of the nation. It is not in brilliant conceptions and strokes of genius that we shall find the chief reliance of our country, but in the home, in the school, and in religion. America will continue to defend these shrines. Every evil force that seeks to desecrate or destroy them will find that a Higher Power has endowed the people with an inherent spirit of resistance. The people know the difference between pretense and reality They want to be told the truth. They want to be trusted. They want a chance to work out their own material and spiritual salvation. The people want a government of common sense.

"These, Mr. Chairman, are some of the beliefs which I hold, some of the principles which I propose to support Because I am convinced that they are true, because I am satisfied that they are sound, I submit them with abiding faith to the judgment of the American people."

NEW ALIGNMENT TO RULE ORIENT

Japan, Russia and China Speeding New Pact to Prevent Wars.

Peking.—A new and powerful alignment of nations—Japan, China and Russia—is arising in the Orient. The prime mover in the new line-up is Kenkichi Yoshizawa, Japanese minister to Peking, who has just returned from a visit to the island of Sakhalin and also to Mukden. At Mukden he conferred with Chang Tso-Lin, the Manchurian war lord.

Mr. Yoshizawa is negotiating with M. Kadakhan, the Soviet representative in the Far East, regarding the resumption of diplomatic relations between Russia and Japan.

Japan is making the greatest concessions in order to make the new line-up a success. It asks a comparatively small share in the stakes beyond an equal division of the trade advantages in northern Manchuria coupled with access to the oil deposits in Sakhalin island.

What Japan desires most is an assurance that it will have friendly or neutral nations on the continent, thus enabling it to face its fancied enemy to the east.

Premier Kato and other leaders have not hesitated to express their deep resentment over the American immigration legislation, and they see in the continued American possession of the Philippines a menace to the oil routes from Borneo and other districts. Without these oil sources Japan's fleet would be closely bound to its coasts unless huge oil stores were amassed.

Russia realizes that it has little in common with Japan, but the uppermost desire of the Soviet is peace on all frontiers. Hence it is willing to abandon its former idea of buffer states and also to co-operate with Japan for the development of Manchuria.

China desires peace with its neighbors, hence it is encouarging both parties to reach an agreement which includes, among other things, Japanese rights to river navigation and through trains from Darien to Harbin, where the political difficulties over the Chinese Eastern railway are removed by its becoming a Sino-Russian enterprise.

GREAT BRITAIN SIGNS TWO RUSSIAN PACTS

Makes John Bull Most Favored Nation Commercially.

London.—The house of commons was electrified when Undersecretary of State for Foreign Affairs Ponsonby rose and announced that two treaties have been signed with Russia.

The announcement followed the declaration that the Anglo-Russian conference was adjourning without success.

One of the treaties is a commercial pact giving Britain "most favored nation treatment unconditionally," Britain admitting Soviet exports in a credit scheme. The second treaty is a general agreement providing for the settlement of British claims in Russia, guaranteeing loans, reducing Russia's debt, and the granting by England of diplomatic immunity to certain Soviet officials and trade delegations.

Ponsonby explained that he had not attempted to arrive at any figures which the settlement would represent, but said the treaty provides the machinery to reach such settlement, Britain having obtained admission from the Soviet regarding the principle of liability on the part of the Soviet. Joint commissions are to investigate the claims against Russia.

Morgan & Co.

Taxes Take Farm Owners' Revenue, U. S. Report

Washington.—Taxes have absorbed a large part of income from the rent of farms in many parts of the United States, and in some less-favored districts have taken the entire income, the Department of Agriculture declares. Local rather than federal and state taxes are held responsible for the situation. In most counties taxes are levied chiefly for the support of schools and public highways. Taxes in recent years have greatly increased, while rents have shown a downward tendency.

NEW SAYS AIR MAIL SUCCEEDS

Not One Day Missed in 31, Despite Bad Weather; No Accidents.

Washington.—Continuous air mail service from New York to San Francisco is successful from every standpoint after a month of trial, Postmaster General New declared in a report here. In the 31 days starting July 1, when the new service was begun, not a single day has been missed, despite bad weather, and no accident worthy of mention has taken place.

In that period the mail planes flew 173,910 miles. The average time was 39 hours 49 minutes from New York to San Francisco and 36 hours 21 minutes from San Francisco to New York.

"Of the first 20 nights of flying there were only 6 with clear weather through from Chicago to Cheyenne," according to the postmaster general's report.

Most of the time the air mail pilots encountered cloudbursts, tornadoes and severe electrical storms, which proved a greater menace to aviation than more severe rain and snowstorms experienced in other seasons of the year.

"While the gross income from the service for the first month of its operation is substantially less than the cost of maintenance," said the postmaster general, "it would be unfair to lay too much stress upon the exact balance between income and outgo until we have had six months' intensive traffic solicitation."

U. S. Forecasts Estimate of Grain Crop Productions

Washington.—Most of the country's crops improved substantially during July, and production prospects at the beginning of this month were considerably better than a month ago. The crop-reporting board of the Department of Agriculture issued forecasts for the principal crops, basing its calculations on the condition on August 1. The farm valuation of the five principal crops, wheat, corn, oats, rye and barley, as of August 1, is estimated at $1,276,443,000, compared with $1,109,256,000 received by the farmers in 1923, an increase of $167,192,000 for the month.

Mr. Herrick's health has been bad for several months, and informally he has admitted that his retirement is likely this year.

Two Wisconsin Tornadoes Kill Five Persons; 12 Hurt

Eau Claire, Wis.—Three persons are known to be dead, at least a score injured, and scores of homes and farm buildings were wrecked in two tornadoes which swept portions of three counties in central eastern Wisconsin early Thursday night. Community Building

Concrete Burner for Disposal of Refuse

The waste paper, refuse or other combustible material which every household accumulates and which must be disposed of can be safely gotten rid of in a refuse burner constructed of concrete blocks. These blocks are almost universally available in various sizes, the one 8 by 8 by 16 inches being common.

The blocks can be laid up so as to form a small, square structure, to a height of three or four feet, one block being omitted on each of two sides of the bottom course to form a draft opening. A piece of stiff woven wire fence or heavy screen placed over the top of the structure will prevent particles of burning paper from being blown out as a result of strong wind.

Municipal Forest to Be Work of Students

The village of Saranac Lake is to have a municipal forest planted by the pupils of the local high school. The actual planting is to be done by the boys while the girls are organizing as an auxiliary which will accompany the working units to provide meals.

"Promoters of the project intend to have the Saranac Lake municipal forest a model of its kind," says the University of the State of New York Bulletin for Schools. "In preparation for the work the boys of the high school began making forest plantations in the cemetery and laying out small parks and planting trees on the school grounds. All this work will be completed this spring while the committee is securing land for the municipal forest, which it is planned to start in the fall.

"The students of the Genesee State Normal school, working with the village authorities, are conducting a reforestation campaign around the village reservoir on land owned by the village."

Proper Objective

Once a community has diagnosed or charted itself, it will know, presumably, wherein it is deficient and what should be done about it.

President Harding, in his last discussion of the subject, said that the broad, general objective of every community should be the American ideal set forth in the preamble to the federal Constitution—"to form a more perfect union, establish justice, insure domestic tranquility, provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare and secure the blessings of liberty."

"The nation at its best will not be better than the aggregate of all its citizenship," said President Harding. "We need to find a commanding and dominating national interest, and I believe it would be found if we could contrive to set before all the people the full meaning and implication of that simple statement about the aims and purposes of our government which is found in the preamble of the Constitution."

Flower Beds of Brick

Small ornamental flower beds prepared by amateur gardeners often fail to develop satisfaction because of the poverty of the soil. This can be overcome, according to the Popular Science Monthly, by laying a floor or bed of ordinary building bricks and a circular retaining wall of bricks. The bricks are not laid in mortar, but are placed as close together as possible. The circular wall is made of standing bricks placed on end.

These brick beds retain the richness and also absorb vast quantities of water, which is given back gradually to the flowers.

Consider Before Building

In every sense one's home will mean more and last longer in satisfaction if time has been taken to study all the details that enter into it, secure competent advice concerning its arrangement and construction, and complete every necessary transaction involved.

Renewal

It costs much more to renew a portion of the home than to have the work done right at the start. Many home owners find to their sorrow that it is costly to change the plan after building.

Ohio Town Progresses

A well-equipped correction farm of 111 acres in Dayton, Ohio, has superplanted the old city workhouse building, which has been in use for a hundred years first as a county jail.

Showing How to Cook on Ice

Cooking on ice is the latest thing for the housewife, and Fred Andrews and Miss Viola May are here demonstrating it with a kettle of boiling water. Liquefied oxygen is the secret. It is 312 degrees below zero, and 344 degrees below freezing temperature, hence the ice is intensely hot in comparison, and when the oxygen is placed in the kettle it boils merrily.

Negroes Open Big Convention

New York has been the scene of great convention held by negroes and under the direction of Marcus Garvey, who calls himself president of the Africas and chief potentate of the Royal Order of the Nile. The doings started with a big parade, part of which is shown above.

LURE OF DAINTY LINGERIE; WIDE-BRIM DRESS HAT NEXT

THE lure of dainty lingerie abates not. Where is she whose repose is not sweetened by the touch of a soft silken nightrobe lace-edged and beribboned? Or whose waking hours are not filled with dreams of a hope-chest, which shall be the receptacle for delectable garments as lovely as the one shown in the picture?

It is fine detail which counts in the making of one's lingerie. A touch here and there bespeaks individual charm, such as, for instance, the little pocket on the silken gown of this illustration. Then, too, the lace-trimmed scallops at the hem line suggest a clever finish.

Ever so many attractive materials are available for lingerie sets just now. There is a very lovely small figured jacquard crepe and a fabric highly commendable is what is called triple voile, the same in dainty shades, leading among which are palest green and the handsome peach tones. Crepe-back satin is also a favorite, and it launders to perfection.

Collectively one's lingerie represents a rainbow of enchanting flower shades. Even the lace trimmings are dyed to match in some instances. Novelty is registered in the trimming of narrow black lace edgings and insertions which adorn colorful garments.

Lingerie sets in flower-like colors have little hand-work bouquets done in natural colorings. Here is where home talent finds opportunity to create garments at minimum cost.

New in the lingerie class is the nightrobe of glove silk. Models include the simple strap design with tiny venise lace edge, and round neck types which show insets of lace.

Lavish detail work which some of the handsomest garments boast stresses drawn threads with incrustations of net or lace.

It would almost seem as if the little cloche has had most of us hypnotized into wearing it, and it only, for these several seasons past. However, with the coming of summer, the spell was broken, and the wide-brim dress hat has come into its own once more. At least, the honors are divided between narrow cloche brims and the wide picturesque bonnet kind, such as are grouped in the illustration.

Very advance models include for late summer or midseason wear a few wider-brimmed models of black velvet, faced with white straw. One very choice model of this description had a broad sash of white organdie tied about the crown, brought to a huge bow of many loops at the front.

Peach color is such a favorite millinery shade, and has been throughout the summer season. Taffeta silk in this delectable color tops the large leghorn mushroom worn by the charming young woman with the parasol in the picture. There is a handsome multi-colored chenille embroidery covering the crown tip. The parasol is also of peach-colored silk.

Just the type of hat which most of us consider ideal for occasions for mal and informal, is the black satin, wide-brimmed bonnet shown to the right in this group. A swish of malines across the brim front and roses of deep pink radiance add to its charm.

LACE-EDGED AND BE-RIBBONED

SHOWS BONNET TENDENCY

Picot ribbon fashioned into flat roses, and floating into streamers at one side, makes beautiful the large citron yellow chiffon chapeau, pictured in the oval below.

Large dressy hats of transparent hair and lace will hold good until the finale of the summer season. The fact that so many of the lace models are in cocoa color or darker browns presages their favor until cool weather.

Western African Fetish

One of the latest additions to the University museum at Philadelphia is a curious wooden statue bristling with many nails and sharp metal points. It is one of the fetishes commonly found in western Africa not far from the mouth of the Congo river where natives practice weird religious rites. Each nail and point represents a prayer to the spirit believed to dwell in the figure for vengeance on some enemy of the tribe. A priest and a party of followers go into the forest and cut the statue from a live tree. While it is being prepared, only the names of persons whose death they desire and whose spirits they wish to enter the statue, are spoken. As soon as it is dedicated with proper rites, the figure is supposed to become the dwelling of spirits that award justice.—Popular Mechanics Magazine.

SILO VALUABLE THIS FALL

Soft Corn Is in Prospect; Fodder 48 Percent as Good as Silage

Iowa farmers who keep dairy cows and have silos will find their silos especially valuable this year, in the opinion of John Shaw, assistant chief in dairy production, Iowa State College.

It is almost a certainty, according to Mr. Shaw that with the growing season as late as it has been, much of the corn will be soft. The general outlook," according to the U. S. D. A. crop report of Aug. 1, "is for considerable soft corn unless the next three months are warmer than usual." With soft corn as a prospect, the silo will provide the most convenient method of handling the crop.

To the dairyman, regarlless of the lateness of the season, ensiliing corn is a good practice. Experiments show that corn as fodder possesses only 48 per cent of the value of corn as silage. With all other conditions equal, an acre of corn yields eight tons of silage, which, valued at $4.50 per ton, is worth $36. An acre of corn only yiells 3.4 tons of fodder, which is worth $5 per ton when silage is worth $4.50 making a total value for fodder of $17.17 per acre. This is only 48 per cent of the value of silage.

IOWA HAS PORTION OF PARK

National Wild Life Refuge in Northeast Iowa

Iowa has a very large interest in the upper Mississippi wild life and fish refuge which was established by action of congress at its recent session. It's Issac Waltons and lovers of outdoor life had much to do with creating the sentiment for it's passage. That refuge, which comprisses about 300,000 acres of swamp and lands along the Mississippi river, will be maintained primarily for the pregservation of wild life and other private uses, but must be maintained in a natural state.

Iowa is interested because the greater portion of this long stretch of preserve touches Iowa. The preserve extends from Davenport and Rock Island to Wabash, Minn. a distance of about 280 miles, following the river line. About two-thirds of this long stretch lies along the Iowa side of the Mississippi.

Not until the next session of Congress will money be made available for developing this project for while the last session passed the bill reserving this area and authorizing appropriations, it did not actually make the needful appropriations.

Editors Always Give Other Fellow Benefit of Doubt

A business man brought us in an obituary notice this week for publication, at which we were surprised, as we had not heard of the man's death. But the merchant insisted he was dead. He said that the man faithfiluy promised that he would be in and pay an account on a certain date if he were alive. We are holding up the obituary however; there may be some mistake.—Ex.

Playing The Game

When Jimmy Jimson starts to pitch
At baseball in the lots,
He gives his head a little twitch,
He ties himself in knots.
He bends his body, lifts his knee,
And limbers up his toe,
And swings the ball amazingly
Before he lets it go.

But Tommy Tomson's not the same;
He doesn't move around
As Jimmy does; a different game
He plays upon the mound.
He sizes up the boy at bat,
He looks him in the eye;
Then takes a little step—like that—
And lets the pellet fly.

And thus the game of life is played,
When you are 1 and 20
You'll find in ev'ry line of trade
Of Jims and Toms a plenty.
I think this humble notion
For a moral well will serve:
There's nothing in the motion
If you haven't got the curve.

LOW TEST CREAM WILL WHIP

Watch Age and Temperature for Results

Whipped cream would be used more liberally during the warm months of the year if the housewife could be sure that it would behave properly, in the opion of Prof. E. F. Goss of the dairy department, Iowa state college.

The difficulties people have in getting cream to whip can largely be eliminated. Cream fresh from the separator will not whip; it should be from 24 to 48 hours old, when it becomes more viscous and will take up and hold the air without turning to butter.

Cream that is cooled just before whipping will not whip satisfactorily. If the cream is held cold, preferably by packing in ice, for at east three or four hours before attempting to whip it, no diiffculty will be experienced. If the cream is not cooled at all or if it is cooled just be fore whipping, butter will probably resut.

The richness is usually not at fault when the product does not whip up, although separator cream should test 30 per cent fat. Even 20 per cent cream, however can be made to whip if conditions are right. The primary thing to watch the age and temperature of your whippng cream.

GERMANS AGREE TO PARIS TERMS

Berlin's Final Appeal Unavailing, but France Makes Slight Concessions.

London. — Germany accepted the French terms for the evacuation of the Ruhr through her delegates here after obtaining slight textual changes, it is understood. The French are to stay in the Ruhr another year.

The day was one of excitement. In the course of the afternoon the German representatives received from Berlin a 7,000-word report of a special cabinet meeting. The message was in a special code in the possession of Chancellor Marx and was decoded by him. A visit of the Germans to Downing street followed early in the evening, and Marx and Stresseman conferred for more than an hour with Prime Minister MacDonald and Ambasador Kellogg.

This last appeal proved something of a disapointment, as the Englishman and the American, it is understood, joined in representing to them the advantages of acceptance of the French proposal, trusting that later events would force a reconsideration of the evacuation date at a later time.

The Germans tried to strike a bargain over the forthcoming loan, asking Ambassador Kellogg and Premier MacDonald to guarantee that it would be raised. The British and American statesmen replied, however, that they were powerles to do this, the matter being solely in the hands of the bankers, who, after arrangements have been made here, must decide whether or not the loan is practicable and safe.

In addition to the forts and towns which Premier Herriot said the Franco-Belgian forces were prepared to quit, he told Chancellor Marx that they would leave other places within a few months if the Germans fulfilled all their obligations.

General Nollet, French minister of war, set at the conference between the French premier and Dr. Marx. The Germans asked that Dueseldorf, Duisburg and Ruhrort be evacuated immediately, and that a promise be given that the decision covering these evacuations should be embodied in notes, which should be appended to the protocol.

The French insisted upon free import into Germany from Alsace of cotton goods, wines and iron and steel products, and the Germans showed a willingness to agree to this.

14,000 PERISH IN BIG CHINA FLOODS

Nearly 14,000,000 Others Affected by Famine.

Peking.—From 13,000 to 14,000 dead and nearly 14,000,000 affected by famine is the latest estimate of the relief commission of the victims of the floods which have been almost general throughout China.

Of the dead 3,000 perished in Kalgan, Chihli province, and the majority of the remainder in Hunan province, which suffered more than other parts of the country in the torrential floods.

The metropolitan area, which includes twelve counties from Peking southward in Chihli province, with a population of 4,000,000, has 800,000 persons who need relief, according to the commission.

In other provinces the number who will have to be cared for is even greater.

In Hunan it is estimated there are 4,760,000 so situated; in the whole of Chihli, 5,100,000; Kiangsi, 240,000; Kwangtung, 2,590,000; Fukien, 130,000; Shantung, 310,000; Honan and Hupeh, 540,000 each.

Chekiang province is also reported to have suffered.

Many of the areas, from which the flood waters have already been drained, will produce winter crops.

There have been no refugees except a few hundreds who have arrived in Peking. In the affected districts the people are mostly camping on the dikes and higher ground.

COMMON SENSE, COOLIDGE PLEA

President Contemptuous of Davis' Charges; Guilty Men Prosecuted.

Washington.—Common sense in government, lower taxes, removal of unemployment, rehabilitation of Europe, improved economic conditions with higher wages and better prices for farm products, these are a few of the reasons that President Coolidge advanced in accepting the endorsement of the Republican nomination for President and why he expects the endorsement of the American people at the polls in November.

The President referred somewhat scornfully to those who would remove all thought of these accomplishments, and the aim for even greater improvement which the administration cherishes, and make the issue of this campaign "honest government."

Dishonest governments, the President tersely pointed out, do not introduce budget systems, cut down taxes, purge payrolls, nor reduce the public debts.

"That is not the way of dishonesty," he said. "The government is sound, but individuals charged with wrongdoing are being prosecuted. The people of the country hate corruption. They know my position. They know the law will be enforced."

"No government," he said a moment later, "was ever able to prevent altogether the commission of crime, but this government under my direction is doing the best it can to detect and punish any and all wrong doing. The laws of the land are being, and will continue to be, enforced."

The address of acceptance of the President was made at Continental Memorial hall, national headquarters of the Daughters of the American Revolution. With a capacity of only about 2,000, there was a marked contrast with the tremendous open air meeting at which John W. Davis was notified of the Democratic nomination at Clarksburg. Elaborate arrangements with amplifiers and a radio, however, were in effect so that every one who wished could listen to what the President had to say.

Mrs. Coolidge and John, now their only son, occupied a box. Only a few hundred seats of the two thousand were reserved, these being for the national committee, the notification committee, senators and officials, and the press. The rest were thrown open to the public, first come, first served.

Community Building

Trees Are Necessary for "Home Beautif

No lengthy explanation is needed back up the assertion that surroundings are an important factor in creating "the home beautiful." Well-kept lawns, properly-selected shrubbery and certain varieties of trees add an incalculable value to the appearance of any home that is more than four walls occupying the entire lot.

The following advice is offered by the American Tree association:

"First, there is the consideration of the kind of soil in which the tree must grow, the climate, and the kind of tree that will thrive. Thought must be given to the location of the tree, the space it will have in which to develop and the variety that grows best in the vicinity. It is well, also, to consider whether it is not better to plant trees of long life, such as the oak or sycamore, instead of trees like the silver maple or the poplar that mature at a short span of life. Whatever the choice of the tree, it is deserving of careful thought.

"It may be that in nearby woods sections there are many young trees, saplings or evergreens, the association points out in urging you to send for free tree-planting folder. This, of course, makes an easy source of supply with the advantage of obtaining trees that live well in the vicinity. Experience shows that it is often more satisfactory to buy nursery trees specially raised for transplanting. As a general advice it might be said that evergreens of five feet in height or deciduous trees up to twelve feet raised in a nursery, will give the best results.

"The roots must not be bruised or allowed to dry, and moist earth should be kept around them until just before they are put in the ground. This is extremely important."

Landscaping Both Diversion and A

Landscaping one's home place—"it never so humble"—is a real sport full of healthful enjoyment and diversion, and, at the same time, an art of creative possibilities, writes W. Kirkwood, University of Minne... Moreover, it is a game that can be played at indefinitely by an individual by husband and wife, or by the whole family. It offers from year to year trying out of new combinations or arrangements and the improvement old. It is a game without end. It costs money—much or little, as one chooses—but it pays.

It is a game with rules, too; they are not hampering rules. However, one rule to be more or less strictly adhered to, is this: "Never set a plant, tree or shrub, or place a bit of ornament without a reason for it." That is a rule laid down by the late Leroy Cady, who was for years in charge of the landscaping of the college of agriculture of the University of Minnesota, between St. Paul and Minneapolis.

Mr. Cady's advice to beginners was: "First know the shrubs to be used, learn their height, color and season of flowering. Then choose those you like best, and use for a special purpose either as a screen or to frame a view or for its beauty of foliage, flower or fruit."

Tree Planting

As a general rule, it would be safe to say that all trees except evergreens can be planted at any time during the period between their going to sleep in the fall and the awakening in the spring and when the ground is not frozen. In the northern states, the early spring is the best time for the inexperienced planter. Evergreens should be put into the ground in the late spring and during the latter part of August and the first of September.

A cool and cloudy day is the best for planting. In preparing the hole for the tree it should be made large enough to hold the roots extended normally. It should be deep enough for a six-inch layer of good loam before the roots are put in.

Home Ownership Urged

"More than half the homes in the United States are owned by men who make less than $2,000 a year," said W. D. Carter, retiring president of the New York State League of Savings and Loan associations. "It is estimated that approximately 90 per cent of those who build or buy a home do not pay for it outright at the start.

"Habits of thrift, economy and self-denial established and practiced in paying to meet the monthly payments on which the home is paid for are among the greatest benefits of ownership of a home."

Don't Neglect Painting

The slogan of the paint manufacturers of "Save the surface and you save all" is an important truth. Paint not only adds to the beauty and value of the home, but its neglect is a very costly one to the home owner.

The first coat of paint should be heavy in linseed oil, which allows it to sink into the wood, acting as a preservative and a binder for the second coat. Pure lead and linseed oil is the best mixture, with possibly a small amount of zinc.

Maj. Gen. John L. Hines, who has been serving as deputy chief of staff since the retirement of Gen. J. G. Harbord, will be elevated to the position of chief of staff to succeed Gen. John J. General Hines has actually been performing the duties of the office during the absence at various times of General Pershing from Washington.

FLANNELS HAVE FOUND FAVOR; FOR THE AUTUMN SCHOOLTIME

OF DISTINCTLY youthful treatment and in a range of delightfully original colors are the regulation straight-line frocks styled for office and schoolroom wear. In fact, these frocks of simplicity are the sort which make instant appeal to women of practical affairs in general.

Flannel is a favorite medium for the informal daytime frock, in such out-of-the-ordinary shades as russet, peach, powder blue, mauve, reindeer, and plain as can be, accenting the beltless vogue.

All good things must come to an end, even summer vacations, which at this moment means to mothers and daughters the immediate staging of that annual prologue which always precedes "first day of school." As usual the outstanding theme for this regular autumn program is outfitting daughter for school.

It is a fortunate circumstance that soft wine tones, brilliant red and greens on the reseda and Lanvin order. Because of the prevailing simplicity in styles these high shades do not make the wearer seem conspicuous.

Wearable for sports and especially desirable as a school type for autumn is the girlish model here pictured. It is developed in peach-color flannel, with pintucks detailing vestee and pockets. Clusters of pearl buttons and collars and cuffs of white linen complete this frock.

Among the distinctive features stressed in the youthful flannel frock smart vogue favors the simple cloth dress this fall. It makes the problem of school apparel so much easier to solve. Furthermore, fashion decrees that the youthful frock of flannel, rep, poiret twill or serge, be enhanced with daintiest lingerie accessories. A touch of lace, a bit of embroidery, what vast possibilities do these trifles of feminine finery suggest! A swift transformation in one's costume may be accomplished by simply changing one's collars or cuffs or adding a lace slip-over bib. Some of these new laces and tucked net bib effects have become so is that of the bishop sleeve. This fulled-in-to-the-wrist type gives opportunity for trimming effects in that the wristbands may be tucked, embroidered and otherwise designed.

The arrival of the directoire style adds zest to the designing of the severely plain cloth street frock. Tight-fitting sleeves, conventional revers, buttons, many of them, and long, severe lines with interesting capelets, interpret this mode.

Competing with soft woolens for supremacy in matter of tailored one-piece frocks are heavy ribbed silks, bengaline being of outstanding style importance. Also heavy crepe satins and marocain crepes continue in favor. These are made up as straight elongated in the process of design they fall quite below the front of the waistline, slipping under the girdle.

The fact that long tight-fitting sleeves are the fashion augurs well for the future of fanciful detachable cuffs, such as are pictured in this group of modish lingerie sets. That novelty cuffs are to feature this fall is told at a glance.

Eyelet embroidery sets, such as that shown above to the left in this collection, are especially approved by the mode. Not always is this openwork white or ecru, for some of the most attractive sets are in delft blue, orange or rose.

WHEN TO CUT SOW BEANS FOR HAY

Some of our readers are asking about the best time to cut soy beans for hay. It is generally considered that while soy beans may be cut for hay at almost any stage, the best time is just as soon as the pods are fully formed. At this time the maximum feed value will be securtd and the hay is also more palatable than when cut later. Later harvesting gives somewhat greated bulk, but less of digestible protein and somewhat lower palatability, thus rendering the method less satisfactory.

Grind alfalfa hay and sell it in the sack by the hundred just as the dealer doles out bran and shorts, is the idea that J. F. By grinding the alfalfa it goes one-third farther as feed and the process is not as expensive as baling, declares Mr. Henderson, senior member of the fatherson partner ship a few miles southeast of Logan. Tht Hendersons conceived the idea of grinding through selling alfalfa in the bale to large dairy farms in Illinois.

THE RED LINE TRAIL

by Crittenden Marriott

NOT a western story, but a strange and thrilling combination of international intrigue and adventures on the sea. The author has in a singular degree the dramatic sense and the gift of narration. Although there are some latter-day pirates, a supposedly uninhabited island in the Atlantic and a mysterious chart, it is not a tale of buried treasure. That which the adventurers found on the island was more romantic and interesting than gold or jewels.

A COSTLY GIFT

He Gave a Cigaret to a Minor and Was Fined $29

Newton, Ia.,—Something new in the way of an expensive cigaret was owned by a Newton man. It cost exactly $29.95.

Charles Howard was standing in the downtown business district and a young lad walked up and asked for a cigaret. Obligingly it was supplied but the transaction took place only a few feet from the chief of police who immediately arrested Howard for giving a cigaret to a minor. Mayor McCord fined him $25 and costs.

The young lad happened to be nearly six feet tall so Howard was innocent of the fact that lad was considerably younger than he looked.

Too many people who went to school can't prove it.

GREAT AIRSHIP WILL BE AT IOWA STATE FAIR

Official Iowa will accord one of the greatest welcomes in the history of the state to the giant ship Shenandoah, when it arrives at the Iowa State Fair here this month on the first trip made west of the Mssssippi.

The ship is so giganic that the entire aviation field at the State Fair grounds will be required to anchor and house it. Special anchorages will be erected to make sure of its moorings in event of storm or high wind, and details of troops will be assigned to guard it both day and night during its stay at the fair.

All Iowa officialdom will turn out to welcome the officers and crew of the big ship when it arrives. Eaborate ceromonies are already being planned to honor the men who accompany it. It is also planned to introduce them in front of the grand stand during the fair, in order that hue people may get a good view of the men who have the difficult task of piloting the huge blimp on its first western cruise.

"This is probably the greatest fea ture that has ever been brought to any State Fair in America," Secretary Corey said today. "It is the first time that Iowa has has on oppurtun iy to view this giant battle ship, and we expect all attendance records to be broken on the days it is heere."

As for the younger couple they not only are husband and wife now but also are stepbrother and stepsistr. If a child is born to the elder man and woman, the relaton of such a child to the younger couple would furthur complicate the tangle.

TALE WITH THRILLS

Here's a good sea yarn—as good as one of W. Clark Russell's old-time stories, and with the advantage of being modern. It opens with a mysterious murder and the securing of valuable papers by the villain, masquerading as a rich man's secretary. Thereupon the rich man and one of his daughters hastily start on a mysterious journey, its destination an island in the South Atlantic. The rich man's wife and his other daughter follow soon after. The captain's safe is robbed of his sealed orders. Dirty work in the forecastle and all over the ship. Mutiny, marooning and shanghaiing. A mysterious island that contains no gold, but something far more important than pirate's cave or treasure cache.

And love! Why, the rich man's son is in love with an actress, to the father's great indignation. One daughter is in love with a young man working on one of her father's docks. The other falls in love with an English lord who gets mixed up in the affair—a regular fighting son-of-a-gun. In the end six young and wildly beating hearts are made happy. The joke is that all three marriages are better than their wealthy and ambitious fathers and mothers could have hoped for.

And, by the way, the author, Crittenden Marriott—who is he? It's a new name, but it's dollars to doughnuts that he is some experienced spinner of yarns under a pen name. Certainly he writes like a skilled craftsman.

CHAPTER I

On a Dark Road

The trolley station at Curwen is small, consisting only of a closed-in shed with a single bench against its rear wall and a line of gimcrack, jigsaw scroll eaves overhanging its open front. On a dark night it is almost invisible and is practically nonexistent.

It was well after ten on an evening in late October when a buggy, drawn by a hard-driven horse and containing a single occupant, approached the station. The man who was driving continually peered ahead, in the manner of one trying to recognize some landmark that may tell him where he is. When he saw the rectangular bulk of Curwen station against the sky line, he leaned out, endeavoring to distinguish the white letters that spelled the name. Failing to do this, he threw back the lap robe and prepared to get out and inspect them more closely.

Midway in the move, however, he was stopped by the sudden siren shriek of an automobile that was coming up behind. He turned and looked through the glass-paned peephole in the back of the buggy and saw two great acetylene lamps splitting space with terrifying speed. Instantly he shook his reins and tried to draw out to the side of the road. He did not really doubt that the hastening chauffeur behind would slow down in time to prevent a crash. And yet that raucous shriek had sounded very imperative. Again he urged his tired horse.

The car did not halt, nor even slacken speed. Too late he realized that it would not or could not slacken. But his nerve was good; not till the very last possible second did he abandon his seat and leap for safety. As he did so, a cry rang out, the auto veered and plunged outward, away from him. Its rear wheels, skidding, struck his buggy and hurled it forward against the horse. Its front wheels climbed the ridge that bordered the road and the whole great machine dived downward toward the river, with a roar of throbbing engines, flying pebbles and whirring wheels. Staggering from his leap, he caught a glimpse of a dark form hurtling through the moonshine to the earth, and of the great automobile plunging into the water.

As he stared, shaken by the suddenness of it all, a beam of light switched past him and he realized that the door of a house, till then unseen, had been thrown open, letting out a white glare, and that a woman was calling to know whether anyone was hurt.

He laughed shortly. "Anybody hurt?" he echoed. "He ought to be, if he isn't. He ought to be dead. Bring a light, will you?" He plunged down the bank toward the spot where he had seen the dark form hurled from the automobile. As he went, his eyes roved over the river, seeking the automobile, but the placid surface of the stream was unbroken, as if the machine had never plunged into it.

A moment later he reached the bottom of the slope and bent over the body of a man, whose huddled and bent form bespoke serious injury if not death. As he stooped, however, a groan told him that life was at least not extinct. The next moment the glimmer of yellow light that had been increasing behind him became stronger, as if the bearer had removed a sheltering hand from before it. Its beams fell upon the wounded man, disclosing a ghastly wound across the brow.

He looked up. The light came from a lamp carried by a girl, whose face showed dimly in the gloom. The lamp itself, he noticed, was trembling slightly, perhaps from the haste with which the girl had brought it and perhaps from the shock of the occurrence.

"Oh! Poor fellow!" she breathed. "Is he dead?"

"He ought to be." The man spoke harshly. "Anybody who drives an automobile through the night forty miles an hour and runs down a horse and buggy ought to be dead. However, he isn't dead yet."

"Is anyone else hurt?"

The man shrugged his shoulders. "If they were, they're past praying for," he said callously. "The auto went into the river."

The girl glanced at the water and shivered. "Can you get him to the house?" she asked. "We haven't any men about the place."

The man from the buggy had risen and was looking at the girl. She seemed to be about twenty-two or three years old, with clean-cut lips and a well-shaped nose. He could not make out her eyes, but her chin bespoke determination, and he guessed that her eyes might be gray.

"No," he said, consideringly. "I won't need to trouble you. I can manage, I think." He bent down again, caught the wounded man's arm and drew it over his right shoulder in accordance with the rules for carrying wounded on the battlefield. Then he rose with some difficulty to his feet, lifting the man upon his back, and began to struggle slowly up the slope. The girl followed.

The slope was short and not very steep, but the wounded man was heavy and the rescuer himself was scarcely in condition for the work. However, he went doggedly on until he had nearly reached the top. There he stopped, staggered, and would have fallen backward had not the girl propped him from behind, pushing with a strength altogether unexpected. The timely aid enabled him to step over the crest of the slope onto the road. "Thank you," he murmured gratefully. "You saved us."

Then He Rose With Some Difficulty to His Feet, Lifting the Man Upon His Back, and Began to Struggle Slowly Up the Slope.

"You could have saved yourself," said the girl, "if you had dropped your burden. Why didn't you?" A new respect spoke in her tones.

"I always play the game out if the cards have been dealt," remarked the man, lightly, as with firmer footing he crossed the road and the tracks toward the open gate on the other side. As he passed through it he noticed that someone was standing on the porch, and heard a soft, quivering voice. "Oh, Edith," it called. "What has happened?"

"It's an automobile accident, mother," replied the girl, clearly. "An automobile jumped the bank and plunged into the river and threw out the driver. This gentleman is bringing him in."

The bearer mounted the steps firmly and followed the old lady into the house and the sitting room, where he thankfully let his burden slip from his shoulder to a broad lounge. "Is there a doctor anywhere in the neighborhood?" he asked as he rose.

The girl nodded. "I'll telephone," she said.

She went to a telephone hanging on the wall and gave a number. A moment later she turned around. "Doctor Fox is expected home any minute," she said, "and they will send him over as soon as he comes. He is the only doctor anywhere near. Can't we do something before he comes, Mr.—er—"

"Harrison," responded the man promptly. "Henry Harrison."

"Thank you. I am Edith Grant. Can't we do something, Mr. Harrison?"

Harrison nodded. "I'll try," he answered. He was already feeling the limbs of the wounded man. "One of his legs is broken and he's badly cut about the head. Get a basin of warm water and a sponge, please."

The girl turned to the older woman. "You're white as a sheet, mumsey," she said. "You must go and lie down. Come!" She led the unresisting old lady from the room.

A moment later she was back, bringing the water and basin. While the man straightened the mangled leg, she bathed the cut and bound it up.

A few moments later Doctor Fox arrived. "Good evening, Miss Grant," he said, nodding to the girl, as he bent over the mangled form. "How did it happen?"

Edith Grant glanced at Harrison, and he explained.

"Humph!" The doctor had finished tying up the broken leg. He glanced approvingly at the bandage about the wounded man's temples. Then he opened the muddy and bloodstained shirt and exposed the broad chest.

"Good Lord!" he exclaimed.

At his tone Harrison bent swiftly forward and Miss Grant, who had drawn back a little, turned toward him with a startled face. "What is it, doctor?" quavered the girl.

"Matter?" The doctor was fingering the wounds. "This man has been shot. The bullet went clear through him and came out at his back. He's dying. Who shot him?"

Harrison and the girl looked at each other. Harrison's face was white. He seemed dismayed, perhaps terror-stricken, by the announcement. "I certainly didn't," he blurted out.

"You? Certainly not!" The doctor seemed a little surprised by the hasty disclaimer. "Not unless you were traveling with him. He was shot at least an hour ago. He must have been pretty far gone when he ran into you. Did you find any papers on him?" The doctor was working as he spoke.

"We haven't looked," Harrison spoke calmly. The doctor's assertion that the man had been shot an hour before seemed to restore his poise.

The doctor slipped his hand into the man's pockets and brought to light a purse, a watch and other small articles. At last he drew out a flat packet, carefully corded, but muddy, broken and bloodstained.

Hesitantly he stared at the seals, and then at the man. "I don't like to open this," he said. "I'll try to restore him to consciousness first, anyway." He hesitated, as if doubtful what to do with the packet. When Edith recognized his dilemma she reached out her hand to take it. But he shook his head. "No, thank you," he said. "I'll keep it." He slipped the packet into his pocket, then raised the man's head and poured a few drops of pungent liquor between the contorted lips.

Almost instantly the man opened his eyes and stared around him. "What has happened?" he demanded, striving to struggle up upon his elbow. The intonation of his voice was foreign.

Gently the doctor pressed him back. "Lie still," he ordered. "There's been an accident and you're badly hurt."

Into the man's eyes snapped a look of terror, and he snatched at his breast. "My packet!" he shrieked. "Where is it?"

"It's here!" The doctor thrust the packet into the man's hand. "It's safe. Now you must lie still."

"Still! Still! Good heaven!" The man laughed hoarsely. His fingers closed tightly on the packet. "I will lie still enough soon," he gasped painfully. "I must work now. I must see Henry Archman before I die."

"Henry Archman!" The doctor's eyes met those of Miss Grant. "Mr. Archman lives near here," he said soothingly. "We will send for him at once."

"No! No! I shall go to him." Again the man tried to struggle up. "Where is my car?" he demanded.

"Your car is at the bottom of the river," answered the doctor. "Listen to me. You have been badly hurt. You are dying—"

"I know it. Yes, I knew it when the bullet hit me! They think I shall fail. But I'll fool them! I'll beat them all yet." The man's voice rang with desperation. "I must see Henry," he reiterated.

"So you shall," the doctor promised glibly. "But you must lie still. I will get Mr. Archman for you. But first tell me who shot you."

The man made a gesture of contempt. "What does it matter?" he demanded. "You cannot touch them. They snap their fingers at the law. But Henry can beat them. That will hurt them worse. Get him for me!"

"But—" The doctor still strove to protest.

Edith Grant stepped forward. "Dying men have privileges, doctor," she said. She turned to the man on the couch. "Tell me your name and what to say, and I will telephone to Mr. Archman."

Here's a mystery. Who shot him? And what for? And what does he want of Archman?

Threats

I consider it a mark of great prudence in a man to abstain from threats or any contemptuous expressions, for neither of these weaken the enemy, but threats make him more cautious, and the other excites his hatred, and a desire to revenge himself.—Machiavelli.

ACTION TO CHECK RADICAL ELEMENT

Steps of national dimensions to curb the activities of radical elements who use un-American methods in public speeches were taken by members of the American Legion at Buffalo, N. Y., recently as the outcome of a clash between members of the Legion and Proletarian party orators.

As the climax of a series of un-American speeches of radicals in Lafayette square, Legion men on the eve of Flag day put to rout a Proletarian speaker, who, standing in the shadow of a monument in memory of the nation's dead defenders, was hurling philippics against the nation, the flag and all "milk-fed patriots." The speaker, a Chicago man, took to his heels and sought refuge at the Proletarian headquarters. He attempted to obtain a warrant against the Legionnaire who pushed him from his soap box, but the judge refused to issue one, stating that the man did his duty.

The Legion men then made an insistent demand to city officials that an end be brought to all public speeches, "such as are being vomited by Reds in Lafayette square, and such as would incite a riot by any group of patriotic men exposed to the spleen." Both Mayor Schwab and Commissioner Meahl agreed to revoke permits of all radical parties that have been allowed to speak in public places, such as Lafayette square.

In commenting upon the action of the Legionnaires of Buffalo in dispersing the radical meeting, Garland W. Powell, national director, Americanism commission of the American Legion, said: "The action taken by patriots in Buffalo was not an official act of the American Legion. However, I am proud to state that no red-blooded American will allow any man to slander those men who sacrificed their all in defense of their country."

In this regard, the Americanism commission of the Legion has taken steps to preclude the unpatriotic activities of organizations advocating the repeal of all sedition and criminal syndicalist laws throughout the United States. These people are also advocating "free speech," speech of the kind that allows the advocacy of the overthrow of our government by force of arms, which means the overthrow of the government which guarantees free speech.

Police Chief Zimmerman of Buffalo stated the case of "free speech" when, as a reaction to the Lafayette square affair, he said: "It is all very well to talk about free speech but when speakers overstep the bounds they have got to be muzzled, with an iron hand if necessary."

Legion Comes to Aid of Buddy and Family

Things looked pretty bad for Ed Rowland of Okanogan, Wash., disabled veteran of the World war, when his case came to the attention of the American Legion of Okanogan.

In September, 1918, Ed volunteered to help clear out a German machine gun nest that was holding up the advance of his company in the Argonne forest. He eliminated the troublesome machine gun by killing the gunner in a hand-to-hand fight. But not until a bullet from a German Luger had ploughed through his body, piercing his liver and intestines and leaving the walls of his abdomen so badly torn that he narrowly escaped immediate death from his wounds. The government paid all his doctor's fees, hospital expenses, and furnished transportation back to the United States; nor was that all; they saw to it that he got twenty-five dollars every thirty days, that his wife and three children should not want for anything.

Ed did not want to presume upon the government, but recently he came down with the scarlet fever and mustered up courage to put in a request for an increased compensation allowance. The government couldn't do anything for Ed just then.

The American Legion heard about Ed and believing that something could be done for him, representatives of the Okanogan County post of the Legion went before the board of commissioners to solicit an appropriation from the county soldiers' relief fund. It was granted, and will tide him over until the recently passed Reed-Johnson rehabilitation law comes to his permanent relief.

Will Permit Trainees to Retain Their Books

Through the instrumentality of the American Legion recently an order was issued from the United States Veterans' bureau which permits rehabilitated vocational trainers to retain their books and supplies furnished them by the government for use during their training. Heretofore it has been the policy of the bureau to insist upon the return of all books and materials charged to trainees upon the completion of this course. The Legion argued that this material when returned to the government was second-hand and had little or no salvage value, whereas it would be a real asset to the graduated trainee.

Won Attendance Prize

In a parade celebrating the 255th anniversary of Woodbridge township, New Jersey, the American Legion post of Highland Park won the one hundred dollar first prize offered for the post of the Legion with the best percentage of attendance. Every town, borough and municipality within a radius of twenty miles was represented in the parade.

Brainy Children Come From Small Families

Do not pity the only child. He has more brains than children with many brothers and sisters, according to conclusions reached by Dr. Hornell Hart as a result of a study of 600 families in a typical Iowa city. The results have been reported to the Iowa child research station at Iowa City, Iowa. Children from large families are handicapped mentally, morally and socially, Doctor Hart declares.

In a representative sample of children from practically completed families in Davenport, Iowa, the ability of the children, as determined by mental tests, was found generally to run higher the fewer the number of surviving children. Children with no living brothers or sisters tend to have mental test quotients about 15 points higher than children with 11 living brothers and sisters, and the average mental test ability decreases fairly steadily as the size of the families increases:

"School progress, that is in excess of the amount to be expected from mental test ability, is at a maximum in families of four or five living children, and at a minimum in families of ten children or over," Doctor Hart says. "The difference between the progress in school of these two groups is such that the average child in the very large family loses about one-third of a year through conditions other than mental test ability associated with large families.

"The larger the family the greater the tendency is for the children to leave school at the earliest possible age.

"Of families with seven or more living children, 14 per cent are chronically dependent, as compared with 3 per cent among families with six children or less.

"As far as can be ascertained from teacher's ratings, children in large families are less energetic, less kind, less sincere and less honest than children from small families. This conclusion is fairly certain for energy, but not so decisive for the other characteristics.

"Contrary to general impression, children without brothers and sisters compare very favorably with children having brothers or sisters. Birth order, as far as it was studied in this inquiry, appears to have very little significance."—Kansas City Times.

Man of Mystery

In Major Beaufort's enforced absence his old black servant Lem was under instructions to welcome the expected guest.

When Mr. Allen was settled comfortably before the library fire, Lem asked as a matter of course, "Can I mix you a highball, sah?"

"No, thanks, Lem."

"Take it straight, sah?"

"No, thanks."

This guest was going to be hard to entertain. Bringing in a humidor, Lem urged:

"Try one of Mistah Jim's cigars, sah. They's ve'y fine!"

"No, Lem. Thanks just the same, but I don't smoke."

Lem looked puzzled; then: "Beg yo' pa'don, sah, but would you min' tellin' me what you does to make you smell like a gen'leman?"—Everybody's Magazine.

Took Name From Crow

In using the ordinary crowbar few of us connect that heavy implement with the crow. Dictionary research is needed to explain the relation of the two words. Investigation shows that a crowbar is defined as "a bar with a strong beak, like that of a crow." The beak of a crow is one of the bird's most powerful tools and weapons. When the first crowbars were fashioned it was only natural that the makers should see the resemblance of it prying end to the beak of the bird, and the use of the name "crowbar" was entirely logical. The bird itself, incidentally, took its name from the nature of its cry, suggesting the old Anglo-Saxon word "crawan." In the Anglo-Saxon tongue "crawan" was equivalent to the English verb "to crow."

Famous Work of Art

The victory of Samothrace is a superb fragment of ancient sculpture now in the Louvre at Paris. It consists of a colossal winged statue, without head or arms, carved in commemoration of the naval victory of Demetrius Poliorcetes, 305 B. C. This figure, which is represented as alighting on the prow of a galley, is remarkable for its "noble proportions and grand vitality, making it one of the masterpieces of the majestic style.—Kansas City Star.

Vital Statistics

Among facts regarding health brought out in analysis of recently issued census bureau figures are that cities show a more rapid decline in mortality than do the rural districts; that persons of mature age show an increase in length of life, and that there has been a continuation of the general improvement in the expectation of life at birth, with colored persons showing greater improvement than the whites.

Recovery From Influenza Hastened by

PE-RU-NA

Mr. C. A. Allen, R. R. No. 2, Bondurant, Iowa, gives testimony to the healing power of Pe-ru-na. Influenza left him much run down in health with catarrh of the nose, throat and bronichal tubes punctuated with attacks of asthma. He writes:

"While recovering from the Influenza I was so weak I could not gain any strength for two months. The latter part of the winter, I bought six bottles of Pe-ru-na and began taking it. My weight increased to 175 pounds, the most I ever weighed.

My usual winter weight is 155. If you can use this letter for any good, you are perfectly welcome."

Such evidence cannot fail to convince the rankest unbeliever of the merits of Pe-ru-na.

If You Need a Medicine You Should Have the Best—Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root

Have you ever stopped to reason why it is that so many products that are extensively advertised all at once drop out of sight and are soon forgotten? The reason is plain—the article did not fulfill the promises of the manufacturer. This applies more particularly to a medicine. A medicinal preparation that has real curative value almost sells itself, as like an endless chain system the remedy is recommended by those who have been benefited to those who are in need of it.

A prominent druggist says, "Take for example Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, a preparation I have sold for many years and never hesitate to recommend, for in almost every case it shows excellent results, as many of my customers testify. No other kidney remedy has so large a sale."

According to sworn statements and verified testimony of thousands who have used the preparation, the success of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root is due to the fact, so many people claim, that it fulfills almost every wish in overcoming kidney, liver and bladder ailments, corrects urinary troubles and neutralizes the uric acid which causes rheumatism.

You may receive a sample bottle of Swamp-Root by parcel post. Address Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., and enclose ten cents; also mention this paper. Large and medium size bottles for sale at all drug stores.—Advertisement.

Hines to Be Chief of General Staff

Maj. Gen. John L. Hines, deputy chief of staff (portrait herewith), will succeed Gen. John J. Pershing as chief of staff of the United States army upon the latter's retirement this fall. The War department general staff is organized under the act of 1920. The chief of staff is the immediate adviser of the secretary of war on all matters relating to the military establishment and is charged by him with the planning, development and execution of the army program. He directs the preparations by the general staff of the plans for organizing, equipping, training and using the military forces for national defense, including those for the mobilization of the material resources of the nation.

John Leonard Hines was born in West Virginia in 1868 and was graduated from the United States Military academy in 1891. He saw service in the Spanish-American war, in the Philippines at various posts and in the Mexican punitive expedition. He arrived in France in June of 1917 as assistant adjutant general, A. E. F. He was successively colonel Sixteenth Infantry; commander First brigade, infantry, First division; commander Third Army corps and commander Fourth, Fifth and Second divisons. In 1921 he was made commander of the Eighth Corps area. He was awarded D. S. M. in 1919 "for services as regimental, brigade, division and corps commander" and D. S. C. "for service in Soissons drive." He has various decorations from the French, British, Belgian and Italian governments.

Van Sweringens Big Railroad Operators

The Cleveland News-Leader said the other day: "The Van Sweringen railroad merger is next door to an accomplished fact. It is, in fact, accomplished. What remains to be done is detail. Four systems, Nickel Plate, Chesapeake & Ohio, including the Hocking Valley; Erie & Pere Marquette, operating over 11,000 miles of line and with total balance sheet footings of upwards of $1,000,000,000 and $1,500,000,000, will, within a few weeks, be brought under a unified control with Cleveland headquarters. Put into the picture also Cleveland's new $77,000,000 Union station and terminal, for O. P. Van Sweringen says he expects to see the steel going up on the central section of its depot on the public square within a few weeks."

There are two Van Sweringen brothers, Orris P. (portrait herewith) and Mantis J. Orris is forty-six and Mantis forty-four. They were born in Wooster, Ohio. The first Van Sweringen railroad purchase was the Nickel Plate in 1916, then doing the unprofitable freight hauls of the New York Central to leave the main four to six track system clear for the big money. The next Van Sweringen purchase was two more similar links strung out in the territory around Lake Erie—the Clover Leaf & Lake Erie & Western. These were welded into the Nickel Plate system. The next was a real railroad—the Chesapeake & Ohio, carrying control of the Hocking Valley, both notable among the coal carrying systems of central territory east of the Mississippi.

Cleveland professes to believe that in less than five years O. P. Van Sweringen will be the country's leading railroad operator.

Mrs. Seton Back From India Tigerless

Mrs. Ernest Thompson Seton of New York is back from a trip to India which had many interesting features. She was the guest of Lord and Lady Reading and of 11 different maharajahs. She interviewed Ghandi twice. She went on 11 separate organized tiger hunts in central and southern India and didn't get a single shot at a tiger. She was the guest of the exiled emperor and empress of China. She got inside the Zenanas and brought back material for a book on women in India. She founded women's organizations and gave lectures which were translated into four languages. She had various adventures with dangerous wild animals and had several narrow escapes.

Mrs. Seton is equally as famous as her husband. By the way, the Setons apparently are no longer Canadians but Americans. Incidentally, their name, "Seton" recalls a romance. When the head of the Seton family, several generations ago, fled to England from Scotland, he assumed the name of Thompson. Ernest Seton Thompson was the name used by the naturalist in his early publications. Now he has resumed his ancestral name.

Watson and Couzens Agree to Disagree

Senator James E. Watson (Rep.) of Indiana (portrait herewith), chairman of the senate committee to investigate the income tax unit and the prohibition unit of the internal revenue bureau, has resigned from the chairmanship and intends to take no part in the inquiry. Senator James Couzens (Rep.) of Michigan, has been elected chairman in his place. The other members of the committee, Senator William H. King (Dem.) of Utah and Senator A. A. Jones (Dem.) of New Mexico, have decided to go ahead with the investigation. September 2 has been fixed as the date of the beginning of open hearings in Washington.

The flareup dates back to the last session of congress when the committee, then investigating the internal revenue department, employed Francis Heney of California as prosecutor and announced its plans of investigating the income tax and prohibition units and Secretary Mellon's activities in them. Watson, in the senate denounced the plan. Illness of Senator Couzens prevented further investigation then.

"It is the committee's intention," said Senator Couzens, "to investigate for the purpose of seeing whether the laws are being properly carried out and if any amendments would improve the functioning of the internal revenue bureau. The committee is going into the matter with an entirely open mind."

BIG BUSINESS

A real estate man was plainly worried, and his wife asked him to tell her about the deal. It seems that he had fixed it up to sell a man a loft building, a marble yard, with dock privileges, a factory site, and a summer garden, and to take in part payment a block of frame tenements, a small subdivision, an abandoned lime kiln and a farm.

"He assumes a $20,000 mortgage on the loft building," explained the real estate man, "and I take over a second mortgage on the subdivision. Get me!"

"I guess I get you," responded his wife. "But what is the hitch about?"

"Well, I want $4 in cash."—Pittsburgh Sun.

GIVE COW A VACATION

Persistent Milker Should Be Given Rest Before Lactation

The poor dairy cow will take a rest; the good dairy cow needs one.

The dairy cow is the hardest working animal on the farm, toiling for a long period of time as hard as a horse does during the working season, and she should be allowed a rest period before beginning her next lactation, says John Shaw, assistant chief of dairy husbandry, Iowa State College.

Rest, according to Mr. Shaw, will help the cow build up her body weight so that heavier milk production will be the result during the next lactation. A rest period also builds up the cow's mineral reserve. She cannot prevent mineral losses during heavy milk flow, even if she is fed liberally on mineral mixtures. During the rest period, however, with a good leguminous hay and a good grain ration of reasonable variety, she will be able to restock her supply of minerals.

The persistent milker may be prepared for her vacation by changing her diet from one composed of succulent feeds and those rich in milk proteins to dry roughage such as timothy hay and dry starchy grains containing less protein.

The silage should be cut down and in some cases eliminated from the ration entirely.

The laundry requrements of a big circus afford something of a problem. When the Ringling-Barnum big show struck Des Moines, the week's washing was turned over to one of the big laundries of the city. The collection consisted of 864 shirts, 1738 pillow cases, 1674 sheets, 39 bed spreads, 1175 collars and handkerchifs by the hundreds. There there were socks, pajamas, B. V. D's and such like, making the average family washing look like the proverbial 30 cents.

SAVE STEPS IN YOUR KITCHEN

One Woman Cuts Kitchen Milage in Half

By showing care in the arrangement of a kitchen(the average Iowa housewife can cut in half the number of steps that it now takes her in cooking the meals for the average farm family.

In making a study of her kitchen, the housewife should ask the following questions with regard to each suggested change: will it increase the comfort and attractiveness of the kitchen. Is is easy to clean? Will it save time? Will it save steps? Will it save strength?

In Home Economics Bulletin No. 47 Miss Gertrude Lynn, extension specialist at Iowa State College, has prepared a kitchen information sheet that can be used as a basis for a reorganization of the kitchen. Some of Miss Lynn's suggestions are to reduce the size of the kitchen from the old fashioned "half acre" kind to the compact kind, put in a floor that is easy to clean, have working surfaces the right height from the floor to save bending over, place a table along side the range, use a dish strainer, and group together those kitchen articles that are commonly used together.

"The pogsbilities for step saving thru rearrangement of equipment" says the bulletin, "have been prov ed to the satisfaction of Mr. Carl Rone of Worth county. Her kitchen was 20 feet long in the main part of the room, and much walking was necessary. There was an 8 by 10 projection to the left. Before mak ing any changes in her kitchen, Mrs. Rone wore a pedometer for 1 week while doing her kitchen work. She learned that she walked on an average of 5 miles day, or 1825 miles a year in doing her kitchen work. She and her husband carefully stud ied the kitchen and the location of thev arious articles of equipment in relation to he places where they were used. They kept in mind the two principles of grouping articles together and placing articles used oftenest in the most convenient plac es. After the changes were complet ed Mrs. Rone again wore the pedometer for a week. and found that she was walking on an average of two and one-half miles per day, or just one-half the distance walked before the changes were made."

FALL OR SPRING FRESHENED

Evidence Says Fall-Freshened Cows Produce Best

It is time for the Iowa farmer who has dairy cows to consider whether he wants them spring freshened or fall freshened, says John Shaw, associate chief of dairy husbandry, Iowa State College.

While there are a number of factors influencing milk and butterfat production such as ration, housing and care, there has been found to be a definite relationship between time of freshening and production. Summaries made from records kept in more than ten thousand cow test associations show the following correlation between the freshening and production: the average fall freshened cow gave during one complete test 6,689 pounds of milk and 268 pounds of fat; winter freshened cows gave 6,439 of milk and 258 of fat; summer freshened cows gave 5,941 of milk and 236 of fat and spring freshened cows gave 5,842 of milk and 236 of fat.

This gives fall freshened cows an advantage over spring freshened cows of 847 pounds of milk and 32 pounds of butterfat. The man who wishes to obtain the largest milk production would do well, in the opinion of Mr. Shaw, to hold off breeding his cows in September or October, waiting instead until next spring so that he can get his herd on the fall freshened basis.

BAND SAVED THE DAY

When the Ringling-Barnum show was at Sioux City a severe storm came upand pandemonium broke loose. As the crowd began to pour out of the big tent, the band, aware of the emminent danger of a panic, struck up, "Hail, Hail, the Gang's All Here," and a few minutes later when the rain began to pour in a vertible flood, the strains of the popular air. "It aint a Gonna Rain no More" floated from the bandstand. After these tunes, "Should Auld Acquaintance Be Forgot," was played, along with several others in an attempt to restrain the excied mob Gradually the people as they saw 250 circus employees calm and sure, stopped and returned to their seats, where they stayed 'til the wind and rain stopped, when a curtailed performance was presented.

Winnebago is the first Iowa county to profit by being made an accredited area in the campaign for the eradication of bovine tuberculosis. As a result, farmers of that county will receive a premium of ten cents per hundred pounds above the market price for all hogs shipped to market. The first shipment of hogs from Winnebago county to command the ten cent premium was shipped by a man who had been larg ly instrumental in putting the area plan in operation in that county.

SLMMERLESS SUMMERS PREDICTION OF PROPHET

Snow and Ice Will Be Common Every Month in Year During 1926 and 1927

Herbert J. Browne of Washington D. C.., master of oceon meterology, whose forecasts for the first six months of this year have proved more than 95 percent correct, is out with statement that he is willing to risk his reputation that his latest prediction will come true.

"Unsettled and colder" is his prediction for the coming summer, with violent and sudden changes from ex treme drought to extreme rainfall, with violent and sudden changes from extreme cold and then in 1926 and 1927 will come the years without a summer, like the memorable 1816, with frosts, snow and ice in every month in the year.

These are the forecasts of Mr. Browne.

The safety line of grain production, Mr. Browne predicts, will retreat southward, probably as much as 280 or 300 miles and all crops will suffer.

"The heat of the sun controls heat varies from year to year and can be measured by instruments perfected by scientists of Smithsonian institu tion.

"The sun's heat was above normal from 1917 until March 1922. Since then it has gradually fallen, with slight occasional variations, until, in September 1922, it recorded the low est point recorded since modern scientific observations began in 1905, and the sun's heat reaching the earth has remained a a low point ever since."

Th predictions for next year are:

"August will spring toward hot, dry weather from Missouri valley eastward to the Atlantic with severe droughts in many regions, relieved by thunderstorms, many heat records will be broken but there will be brief cold spells in both August and September. August's period of chill is due about the twenty-first along the northern border stateg.The September spell will come as far south as Nebraska and Central Iowa Illinois, Ohio, and perhaps New York and northern New England The winter will set in early and last long. There will be much severe weather and insufficiont snow to cover the winter grains. The gulf coast will see early cold waves in January. The year 1925 will repeat the disagreeable features of 1924, with a break in theCalifornia drought.

THIS GIVES US AN IDEA

Fairmont Sentinel:— That Joe Reynolds told this on one of those Minneapolis sharks who has undertaken to bust our local bakeries. The Mankato Fourth of July commit tee wrote the Minneapolis concern that visits Mankato every day (as it does Fairmont) and solicitel a subscription for their big celebration. Its big truck tears up th eroad and theg uys who own the concern are millionaires. The first letter did not even get the courtesy of a reply. So the committet wrote a second letter which met with the same fate. And yet in the face of these things our local business men paronize them daily and send a lot of Fairmont money to the big city that nevver comes back.

"The above article gives us an idea. Ringsted will have a celebration next month and it will be necessary to have a considerable amount of money to put it across. When the committee is appointed to solicit money we trust and hope they will not forget to include the several bakery companies who drive bread trucks here every day or the two ice cream trucks tha visit us ver day or two and they might profit ably call on several of our county seat stores to contribute for they get many dollars here and also, they might write our friends in Chicago, Sears Roebuck and Co., and Montgomery Ward & Co. — Ringsted Dispatch.

It takes a bat to play baseball— and love, too, according to some people's definition of it.

LIBERTY TOWNSHIP AND FIRST METHODIST CHURCHES VOTE TO TURN PROPERTY TO N. W. IOWA CONFERENCE

Proposition Carried Favorably In Both Congregations

The following question was voted upon Sunday by both the Liberty Township and the First Methodist Church of Klemme:

"Are you in favor of transfering membership and property of the Liberty Methodist church of Liberty Township, Hancock Co., Iowa, (First Methodist church of Klemme, Iowa,) to the N. W. Iowa Conference in accordance with the provisions of the Discipline?"

The proposition carried favorably in both congregations. In Liberty it carried 59 for and only 7 against. In the First Methodist church in Klemme the vote was 69 for and 22 against. Summing up the votes there are 128 who wanted to make the change and only 29 who objected to making the change. The congregations certainly showed their wish in getting away from a foreign conference.

The change to Americanism is a great thing and something to be proud of. Of course we realize a number of good, old people who have been in the church for a long number of years may feel that their rights have been somewhat stepped on, but we are Americans, we live in America and all things foreign should be put away, even though a few may find it inconvenient.

It was a step in the right direction.

NEW YORK IN FIRST PLACE

Scattered over the face of the earth is a total population of 1,804,187,631, only 7 per cent of which is in cities of more than 100,000 inhabitants, according to statistics compiled in Berlin, Germany, and based largely on 1922 census reports. Only 30 of the 70 nations listed have cities of more than 100,000 class, which is the lowest counted within the classification of "large cities."

Approximately 40,000,000 of the globe's inhabitants live in the 18 centers having a million residents or more each. About 90,000,000 live in the smaller large cities of which there are only 393 in the whole world. New York City is given as the largest city in the world, with a populaion of 5,620,048. London is second wih 4,483,249, and Berlin is third with 3,803,770.

Europe leads the continents in point of population. It has six cities in the million class, London, Berlin, Paris, Glasgow, Vienna, and Moscow. It is considered surprising that Asia has more large cities than North America. Six of the 92 Asiatic cities house more than 1,000,000 persons each. These are Shanghai, Hankow, Calcutta, Bombay, Tokyo, and Osaka.

North America follows Asia with four cities, New York, Chicago, Philadephia, and Mexico City, in the million class.

Twenty-four large cities are located in South America, Brazil having 13. Buenos Aires and Ri ode Janeiro are the only million-resident centers.

RADICALS RIOT IN REICHSTAG

Refuse to Allow Discussion of Dawes Pact or Reparations.

Berlin.—The London pact and the Dawes reparations plan were pillored in the reichstag as a "pact of slavery" and as "the delivery of the German working masses to international capitalists and exploiters" by the Communist members.

The so-called "Reds" so successfully outmaneuvered the government that they twice broke up the meeting of the reichstag and defeated the government's plan to place the London pact before the house for consideration. They finally forced the reichstag to adjourn for the day.

Paris.—A general assault on former Premier Poincare's Ruhr policy and Communist Leader Cachin's arraignment of the United States and Great Britain at "warlike imperialists" occupied a solid eight hours' debate in the chamber of deputies on the agreement reached at the London conference.

Premier Herriot defended himself frequently, enunciating the high idealistic standard that "France's right must be her strength" and blaming the admitted weakness of his negotiations upon the errors or pledges of previous governments.

Rome.—The Italian cabinet approved the work of the Italian delegation to the recent international conference in London and adopted a resolution, proposed by Premier Mussolini, conferring upon Owen D. Young, member of the Dawes committee, the Grand Cordon of the Crown of Italy in recognition of his work in connection with the Dawes reparations plan.

CHARLES W. BRYAN PLEDGES FARM AID

Twenty Thousand See Governor Notified of Nomination.

Lincoln, Nebr.—Pledging efforts to seek world peace through disarmament by international agreement, Gov. Charles W. Bryan, Democratic nominee for the vice presidency, delivered his speech in formal acceptance of the honor.

Referring to labor questions, Mr. Bryan sanctioned the stand of John W. Davis in regard to injunctions and said:

"Our party always has been the laboring man's friend."

Aid in co-operative marketing, an export marketing corporation, development of inland waterways and reclamation of western lands, were pledged the farmers. He promised to do all in his power to abolish child labor and to place women upon an equal footing with men. Prohibition law enforcement also was pledged.

"The farmer needs a Democratic administration and a congress that will not permit the Melion tax plan to relieve the multimillionaires from paying their just share of the cost of government," he announced.

Twenty thousand persons were present at the notification ceremonies. Lincoln was decorated gaily for the occasion. The notification took place at the University of Nebraska Memorial stadium.

The national committeewoman from Missouri, Mrs. Emily Newton Blair, presided at the ceremony and introduced the speakers. The notification address was delivered by Senator Pat Harrison of Mississippi, who delivered the keynote address at the convention.

REDS REAL FOE, SAYS C. G. DAWES

Declares LaFollette and Radical Backers Present the Real Issue.

Evanston, Ill.—Charles G. Dawes told the American people that the "predominant issue" of this campaign is the issue of what he termed the "progressive conservatism" of the Republican party versus the radicalism of the LaFollette movement, dominated by the Socialist party, which is marching behind LaFollette with the red flag flying.

He declared that the LaFollette movement was the real opponent of the Republican party, "although the result of the effort may be to deadlock the contest for the Presidency and make Bryanism succeed the Coolidge policy.

He asserted the Democratic ticket was composed of one conservative and one radical, "hoping to get votes by avoiding the issue," and he told his hearers that John W. Davis and Governor Bryan "will suffer only the fate which befalls those who try to straddle in a real fight."

These things he told to the nation in a speech which marks the course which the Republican national campaign will take. The enemy is LaFollette. A vote for Davis is a vote for Bryan. Such will be the slogans of the Republican party. And the first official intimation of these slogans was made by General Dawes in his speech accepting the Republican nomination for vice president—a speech which in reality, through radio and the press, was addressed to the entire nation, although nominally it was addressed to the immense crowd which packed General Dawes' "back yard" in Evanston.

On the spacious lawn, sloping down to Sheridan road, stood a throng which was estimated to number 50,000 persons. Adjacent to the Dawes home there had been erected a platform for the use of the speakers and several guests.

Premier Herriot Is Upheld by Chamber

Paris.—After a lengthy declaration before both houses of parliament explaining his policies at the London conference, Premier Herriot obtained a 320 to 209 vote in the chamber on the technical point of a continuation of debate on the protocol. This is believed to assure a favorable majority for the agreement in that body, and the senate is also expected to uphold the premier.

The minister's victory was won when a motion to refer the London accord to a commission with the provision that it should be signed first and debated later, was defeated.

Premier Herriot admitted what had been reported during the London conference, but denied that Belgium was ready to quit France, withdraw its troops from the Ruhr, and leave France entirely isolated.

DEFENSE DAY INSURES PEACE KENDALL SAYS

Governor Asks State to Observe Test Day September 12th

Governor Kendall takes a firm stand for preparedness—never for the prosecution of war but as insurance for peace—and condemns "too proud to fight" pacifism in a proclamation directing the national guard and asking Iowans generally to observe national defense test day, Sept. 12.

In his proclamation the governor reviews the situations of unpreparedness in which the United States has found itself on every occasion it has had to go to war attributing what he calls the deplorable situations to twenty-five years of a "blissful hypnotism of the sonorous rhetoric of the visionary doctrinaries proclaiming the advent of universal fraternity a thousand years in advance of the almanac."

"The president as commander in chief of the army and navy has designated Friday, September 12, 1924, as "defense test" day, to be observed throughout the United States, that the patential martial resources of the country may be ascertained. The program of the executive is intended in no sense as a gesture in the direction of militarism, but simply as an effort to establish for ourselves and before the world the possibilities for its own protection that the government can command in the event of external collision.

1917 Situation Deplorable.

"Every sensible intelligence on both hemispheres exalts peace and abhors war. Yet until mankind is more completely converted to the amicable arbitrament of international controversies, it is not expedient that our nation be wholly unequipped for conflict. Our situation when we were compelled to declare hostilities in 1917 was indeed deplorable, and redemptive wisdom for the future may be assured by correcting the asinine folly of the past. It is easily conceivable that if we had been forarmed with the stalwart sinews of effective self-defense, and had asserted early our disposition to employ them to the uttermost against unjustified aggression, no belligerent people would have ventured to violate our traditional rights. But we were unready and unprepared, without the knowledge of our strength, and without the knack to mobilize it.

Upbraids "Visionaries."

"For twenty-five years we had been blissfully hypnotized by the sonorous rhetric of the visionary doctrinaires proclaiming the advent of universal fraternity a thousand years in advance of the almanac. And when the appalling catastrophe of war was directly precipitated upon us, we suddenly recovered our sanity to perceive that the predicted millenium of our altruistic enthusiasts had not arrived, nor yet was within sensible prophesy.

"We realized at the eleventh hour that our own immunity demanded forthwith the best troops that could be enlisted from our loyal civilian body, and the best guns that could be devised by the ingenuity of man. The emergency constrained us to recognize that unless and until human nature is radically regenerated, every state of first consequence must conserve its sovereignty by maintaining an ample army, supplemented by an adequate navy,—never for the prosecution of unnecessary and unwarranted war, but always as an insurance of uninterrupted and abiding peace.

United States Has Evaded War.

"The policy of our government always has been one of pacific intention, and it will so continue. We deferred affirmative action against Spain in 1898 until the ridicule of the world was excited by our dilatoriness. We temporaized with Mexico until the braggarts on our southern border publicly denounced us as cowards. We delayel entering the conflict with Germany until every element of free institutions, here and everywhere, was vitally jeopardized.

"We are not now apprehensive of armed combat with any power, but no people can afford to be drugged into a heipless coma by a mistaken sense of their own security. In our intercourse with our neighbors we shall avoid war always where war can be avoided without the sacrifice of honor. We shall cheerfully recognize the rights of all nations in all relations, but we shall equally insist that our own rights be not invaded under any circumstances. We hold peace as the supremest blessing possible of attainment, but we are not too proud to fight in a righteous cause.

"As expressed by the president in his published pronouncement, his only purpose in inaugurating a 'defense test' is to demonstrate so that their magnitude may be appreciated the armaments which can be assembled to redress any injury that may be inflicted upon the American republic—a purpose which, I am sure will command the unqualified approval of his countrymen.

"Therefore, in view of the foregoing, I, as governor of Iowa, direct that the various national guard organizations of the state repair to their respective armories on said date at such hour as may harmonize with arrangements perfected by local authorities, and I enjoin upon the people generally to co-operate fully and patriotially toward the success of the day, that the utmost measure of our reserved military power may be manifested."

KNITTED SUIT ALWAYS IN FAVOR; USE OF DETACHABLE LACE PANEL

ALMOST have sportswear and knitted outerwear become synonymous terms so closely identified are they in the minds of fashionists and their clientele. When in doubt choose a knitted suit, is apparently the feminine modernists' way of settling the question of smart sportswear. Not so much is this whim or fancy, but rather a direct outgrowth of experience wherein knitted apparel has so worthily stood the test from every angle of practicability, wearability, style and handsome appearance.

To decide upon a knitted suit for sports and general wear, such as the picture shows, is to exercise the better part of wisdom in the choosing. There's a secret about this particular type of knitted suit, which one would never guess at a glance. It has a dual personality! At least this is true of the jacquette. At one moment a tuxedo, presto! with the deft maneuvering of a button or two, it becomes, in the twinkling of an eye, a clever double-breasted style. Of course this adds to its usefulness as well as affording a pleasing change in appearance. Broad stripes of yellow and green are the handsome autumn-like colors exploited.

The ensemble costume, which is being so widely exploited and elaborated this season, is expressed in all its fascinating moods throughout the new fall knitted models. Among the handsome knitted novelties are long tunics introducing lavish design in some instances, three-quarter-length coats as appealing as any cloth topcoat, carrying correct tailored detail of new sleeve, collar, cuffs and revers, also hip-length coats of brushed wool which compete with the most elegant fur jacquettes. There are plain surfaced heather mixtures, plaided and blocked effects, tapestry allover designs and other fanciful patternings, which being knitted cause one to marvel.

Transform your plainest frocks into a costume de luxe while you wait! That is the miracle the new detachable lace panel with collar performs. It is a transformation as instantaneous as that of Cinderella herself. Touch with the magic of a panel of lace, with collar and perhaps cuffs to match, and one's most ordinary gown assumes the airs of a "dress-up" affair. The illustration conveys the idea. One can readily appreciate the alluring possibilities in this new vogue for detachable lace trimming.

The lace and lingerie panels here shown are accessory to the costumes, and can be adjusted without sewing, unless one prefers to take a stitch here and there. The lace panel to the right is the most popular, perhaps; at least more of them are shown in the shops. It is probably forty-five inches long, for that is the usual length. Blouse panels, similar in style are also shown, twenty-two inches long. If the center be not of venise lace then it is almost certain to be of embroidered net as these are the preferred kind. There are little flutings of narrow lace, and the collar combines the two.

Of exquisitely fine batiste is the tucked and lace-inserted panel to the left. The deep flounce is very effective, the entire bespeaking the extreme of refined and exclusive workmanship and design. It is of interest to know that some of the more elaborate sets are accompanied with handsome matching cuffs, many of them being very wide.

If one be so inclined, with a bit of lace, embroidery and jet, leisure time, nimble fingers and the ability to create, there is no limit to the lovely ideas along this line which can be worked out at home.

Miss Afton Powell came Tuesday for a visit with her many Klemme friends. It will be remembered that her mother was principal in our school about seven years ago.

The Klemme Band played at the Fair at Britt yesterday. There was a large crowd of Klemme people at the evening fair. The Fair this year has some very good free attractions and at night the Hazel M. Cass Co. give an open air theatre show which is far above the ordinary. The exhibits are very good. Ellington twp. took first place for Farm Bureau Booth, Liberty second and if we remember correctly Ell took fourth place and Twin Lake fifth, however we are not sure about these two townships. The booths were all very good anl it took the judges all day to place the winners.

BROOKHART CANNOT BE HERE FOR FARMERS' DAY

Sen. Smith Brookhart, who was to have been the principal speaker in Klemme for the Farmers' Day Celebration September 11th has notified the committee in charge that it will be impossible to be here on that date. This is quite a dissapointment as he would be a great drawing card for the celebration.

However, the committee will have a well known speaker and are at this time trying hard to get a good man to speak. The next issue of The Times will no doubt be able to announce the speaker as by that time the committee will have secured a speaker for he day.

A member of the committee informed us that everything is working out fine and Farmers' Day is going to be one of the best celebrations ever put on in Klemme.

Tell all your friends about it and invite them to Klemme September 11th.

HORSE THIEVES?

Henry Swartz is of the opinion that a gang of horse thieves are at work in this vicinity.

Monday night a valuable team of horses belonging to Henry were safely parked in a pasture west of town. Tuesday morning Swartz went to the pasture to capture his steeds for their daily work-out, but observed they were conspicuous by their absence from that immediate vicinity. Where-upon Henry called the sheriff to run down the gang of horse thieves. The thieves must have heard the sheriff on the trail and turned the critters loose as they soon returned to their old haunts.

For hot weather, make yourself some orage ice. Make a sirup of four cups of water and two cups of sugar; then add two cups of orange juice and one-fourth cup of lemon; add two grated orange rinds, cool, strain and freeze.

HOT WATER AT THE TOP

By Piping to Range Boiler, Hot Water is Instaneous

The convenience of having hot water at the kitchen sink the moment the tap is turned on is possible of atainment and requires only a simple plumbing job, according to Prof. E. M. Mervine, of the agriculture engineering department, Iowa State College.

As farm homes are ordinarilly piped it is probably necesgary for the housewife to draw off, perhaps several gallons of water before it becomes hot enough to use. This is especially true where the range boiler is thirty feet of more from the sink. A little piping that the farmer can do himself will make hot watter instantly available. The remedy is to run a pipe from the sink back to the range boiler. In this way, a complete circuit is closed between the sink and the boiler and when the water is heated the hot water rises to the top and causes circulation thru the pipe to the tap at the gink and back to theb oiler.

The only objection to this system, according to Prof. Mervine, is that there is a constant radiation, from the hot pipes and much more consumption of fuel, but this is counter acted by the saving in water and time, especially where the farm has a cistern and wants to economize on water consumption.

FORD TO PUT UP BIG WORKS IN ENGLAND

A press dispatch from England says;

At a luncheon given by tht Ford Motor company at the Hotel Metropole, London, it was announced that a site had been acquired at Dagenham, on the north bank of the Thames, where works are to be erected for the manufacture of Ford cars. The site is 307 acres in extent with a water frontage of 2,300 feet and about a mile in depth from the river frontage to the main road to London to Southend.

Tht site is crosed by the L. M. & S. Railway, and also served by the River Beam and c anal, as well as, of course, having access from the Thames. The intention is to manufacture all British Ford cars, and if the enterprise at Dagenham, develops to supply from here both the British and Continental trade.

"The Dagenham sie" he went on, "will probably be occupied by a works capable of employing 10,000 people, and of producing 500 cars a day."

Today a Ford touring car in this country is 92 per cent British labor and material. Commencing in Britain with he annual sale of 1,485 cars in 1911 he demand has steadily increased, until it has reached the record figure of 40,000 cars and trucks per annum. Those figures do not include the producion for export to Antwerp, Bordeaux, Copenhagen, Cadiz, and Trieste. In June this year the ten-millionth car was produced, a figure without precedent in the history of automobile engineering.

"Good Equipment makes a Good Farmer Better

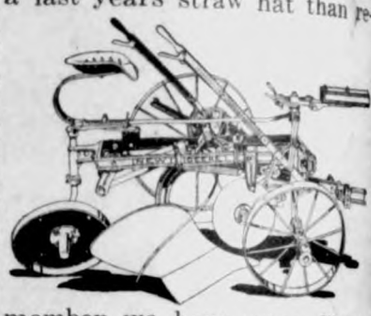
Let's have some excitement on the farm. Call for a tractor demonstration, they're free and we'd have a lot of fun. Threshing is late and you'll have to rush your plowing, get a McCormick-Deering tractor and pay for it as it makes its own payments.

We sold a "spankin brand new" Waterloo Boy tractor the other day and printed right on the back plate are these words "Do Not Use Cheap Oil." All tractor and motor companies recommend En-Ar-Co as a very good oil.

A few days ago we sold a Crosley radio, one of those new Tridyne 3R3 Receivers, a three tube machine giving the same results as a five tube. You can try one in your own home with out cost.

My fliver had the asthma;
It always coughed up hill.
Sometimes it only hit on three,
Sometimes it just stood still.

I put in some En-Ar-Co Oil,
Four Mosler plugs on top,
And now I need some 4-wheel brakes
To make my Lizzie stop.
If your gang plow looks like a last years straw hat than remember we have some slightly shop worn gangs and sulkeys that we are selling below cost.



You don't spread butter with a fork because you can't do a good job. Treat your fields right, buy a Nisco spreader.

The Crosley "Costs Less Worth More."

Mark Twain when editor of a small town paper received a letter from a superstitious subscriber, say he had found a spider in his paper and asking if that was a sign of good luck or bad. The humorist printed the following answer:
"Finding a spider in your paper was neither good luck nor bad luck for you. The spider was merely looking over the paper to see which merchant is not advertising so he can go to that store, spin his web across the door and lead a life of undistudbed peace ever afterward."

One of the record yields of oats in this vicinity this year was realized fy J. C. Arends on his farm near Alexander, when he threshed last week. Mr. Arends had 80 acres of oats, which threshed out 6,407 bushels, and average of 80 bushes to the acre.—Belmond Independent.

HARNESSING FLY POWER

When you are "in the air" listening to a broadcasting station, you are at the receiving end of one of the smallest power units of which man has made any practical use.
The controlled currents which do work in the loud speaker of telephone come from the "B" battery and thence to the receiving tube. The incoming impulses from the antenna or loop, changing with the change of voice currents or code-currents, control the larger output of the tube in the grid circuit.
The minute quanity of energy utitized by each receiver to direct and control the local battery circuit has been made significant by Dr. L. R. Whitney, director of the research labratory of the General Electric Company in the statement that: "If the amount of work done by a common house-fly in crawling up a window pane for one inch were to be put in a receiving tube as energy coming from space, it would suffice to actuate the outfit continuously for a quarter of a century.
This is the amount of energy which when amplified enables us to hear through a loud speaker or telephone headpiece.

The Bailey family held a reunion at the Layton Butcher home last Sunday in honor of Mr. John Bailey of Oklahoma. HOW ABOUT YOU?

When Abraham Lincoln was a young man he ran for legislature of Illinois and was bady swamped. He next entered business—failed—and spent 17 years of his life paying up the debts of a worthless partner.
He was in love wih a beautiful woman to whom he became engaged and then she died.
Entering politics again he ran for Congress and was badly defeated. He then tried for an appoinment in the United States land office, but failed. After this he became a candidate for the United States Senate and was defeated.
In 1856 he became a candidate for the vice presidency but lost the race. In 1858 he was once more defeated, this time by Douglas.
In the face of all this, he eventually became of he country's greatest men, if not THE greatest.
How would you stand in face of such a set back? Think it over.

ORIGIN OF "WHITE MULE"

Before the Volstead law, a farmer living in the shadow of the South Mountain, Cumberland county, Pennsylvania, defied a local option regulation by making and peddling moon shine. He drove a white mule. The mule's collar was hollow metal, Covered with leather, and held several gallons of corn juice. On the under side of the collar was a handy spigot. The farmer would stop, pat the white mule under the jaw an dserve his customers wherever he found them. It is astonishing the number of persons who stopped and wanted to swap horses or something. It was not long until a large number persons with a fondness for that internal buzzing produced by hootch knew what was meant by white mule.
This, according to the Asosciated Press, was the origin of the name for that white stuff which would make you spit in the lion's face, slap a hippo to sleep, live in heaven four minutes and wake up somewhere else The dynamic kick in "white mule" hasn't a dynamic thing to do with giving hootch that name.

We know a fellow whose hair is so oily that he thinks his head is the Teapot Dome.

ARCHMAN

SYNOPSIS.—Thrown from his auto in a New York village, a man is carried unconscious into the home of a Miss Edith Grant. A doctor discovers he has been shot, fatally. Consciousness returning, he babbles of "millions." He begs that Henry Archman, millionaire resident of the vicinity, be sent for, declaring he has important papers for him.

"Telephone?" The man had grown suddenly calm. He seemed to have recovered complete possession of his senses. "Good! Good! Telephone to him at once that Morbach—"

"Morbach!" The girl echoed the name.

"Yes, tell him that Morbach is here. Tell him to come quick. Quick! You understand?"

"Yes, I understand." The girl went to the telephone, and lifted her hand to the receiver. Then she hesitated and turned. "Is it Mr. Henry Archman or his son Harry that you wish to see?" she asked.

"Henry! Henry! What have I to do with boys? Tell Henry to come—quick!"

The girl spoke into the telephone. Morbach lay feverishly listening while she got the desired connection. "Is Mr. Archman there?" she asked. Then: "Mr. Henry Archman isn't at home," she said.

"Not at home! Oh! Is any one there who is in his confidence? Any one who has the brains?"

The girl spoke once more into the telephone. "There's a woman at the phone now," she said, a moment later. "It's his daughter. Can you tell her something about your business with Mr. Archman?"

"My business!" The man laughed gaspingly. "Tell him that I have information that is worth millions. Tell him that I die. Tell him what you please. Only tell him to come."

Again Edith spoke into the telephone; then she turned. "Miss Archman says that she will send her father's secretary, Mr. Akin, here at once," she explained, "and that she will try and reach her father and send him here also. Mr. Archman's house is two miles away, and it will take some time for either of them to get here."

"He had better come quick." The man sobbed the words. "Doctor, you will keep me alive till he comes. I must not die till he comes."

"I'll do my best." The doctor bent over him and held a teaspoonful of some potent concoction to his lips. "Take this and lie as still as you can and save your strength."

The man swallowed the liquor and lay still. An instant later the doctor left him and went to the telephone and called up the police station.

Harrison heard him and seemed galvanized to action. Quickly he turned to Miss Grant. "I must go," he said. "I suppose this Mr. Akin will be here as he promised. Do you know him?"

The girl shook her head. "No," she said.

The doctor heard the words and came over. Harrison spoke to him. "I was just wondering whether Mr. Akin could be relied upon," he said. "I've got a horse and buggy out here and perhaps I might meet him and hurry him up. Good-night!" and he turned toward the door.

"Good-night," The girl spoke softly. "Let me thank you for what you have done."

"No thanks are necessary," responded Harrison hastily. "If they are due to any one, they are to you. But I guess there are no thanks coming to either of us. Good-night." He opened the door and went out.

A moment later the doctor looked up. "That gentleman hasn't gone, has he?" he demanded.

Edith nodded. "He said he was in a hurry and that there didn't seem anything more to do."

The doctor frowned. "Did he give you his name and address?" he asked.

Edith hesitated. "He gave me his name," she said. "It is Henry Harrison. But he gave no address."

"That's bad!" The doctor frowned. "This is a case of murder, you know. His testimony will certainly be wanted. However, I suppose he can be found."

"His buggy was struck in the collision. Perhaps it was damaged. Maybe he hasn't gone yet. Shall I see?"

The girl went out through the dining-room, closing the door between the two rooms as she passed through it. She was gone a long time—or so it seemed to the doctor. When she came back she shook her head. "He's gone," she said. "The night is too dark to let one see much. He's out of sight. Gracious!"

The doorbell had rung with startling suddenness. "I suppose that is Mr. Akin," the girl said, as she turned toward the hall.

A man of medium height, muffled to his ears against the October chill, stood on the threshold of the dimly lighted hall. "Is this Mrs. Grant's?" he asked. "My name is Akin. Somebody telephoned me that a man named Morbach wanted to see me."

Edith stood aside. "Come in, Mr. Akin," she invited. "It was I who phoned. I'm glad you've come. Mr. Morbach was hurt in an accident and is very anxious to see Mr. Archman or his representative. The doctor thinks he can't live more than a few minutes longer. Will you take off your coat?"

"No, thank you." The newcomer shrank deep into his capacious collar. "Where is the man?"

"In here."

The newcomer entered the door indicated and sat down in a chair that the doctor hastily placed for him beside the wounded man. Then he bent forward. "I am Mr. Akin, Mr. Archman's secretary," he said. "You have a message for Mr. Archman, I believe."

Morbach's eyes popped open. "You have come!" he cried. "Good—we'll beat them yet." He hesitated, his eyes roving over the faces of the others. "If I could only see Henry!" he groaned. "You are his man and you are all right, but it means so much, so much. Come here, all of you—you, doctor; you, young lady; all of you listen!"

The man lay still for a moment, gathering strength. When he spoke his voice was very faint. "Tell Henry that he is dying—he whom I have served so long, and that he wants to see her—her, you understand. I cabled Henry a week ago. Then I come, too, for I fear that the cable might leak. And I think it did leak, yes—for when I landed in New York they were waiting for me. I try to dodge—yes—I get an auto and start. It is no use. They attack me. But they do not get the proofs, for I do not bring them. He would not let me bring them. He will give them only into her own hands. Henry must bring her and get them. She will be rich—oh, yes! She will have millions to fight them with. And she will need them. But she must come at once. Henry must bring her by the way he knows, or by the way told in these papers—" The dying man raised the packet feebly. "It is by—by—"

The other leaned forward. "Yes, yes!" he cried eagerly. "The way is by—"

"It's all told here!" Again Morbach raised the paper. "But let him beware!" he cried. "Let him beware!"

Nellie Had Turned Around. "Mr. Carr!" She Exclaimed, in Tones as Wondering as Those of the Man.

A shudder shook his frame. "They got me and—and—" Again his voice died away. "The papers—tell all," he said, with a last expiring effort.

"I understand." The man took the packet and slipped it into his pocket. "I'll tell Mr. Archman," he promised.

"Yes, yes; tell him all. Tell him—"

The front doorbell rang sharply, cutting across Morbach's words, and he fell back on the lounge. Edith, turning away, went hurriedly into the hall, closing the parlor door gently behind her as she did so.

CHAPTER II

A Clew Wanted.

When Edith opened the door she found standing on the steps a sweet-faced young woman, apparently little more than a girl. Behind her glimmered the twin lamps of an automobile.

Quickly Edith stepped back and opened the door wider. "Come in!" she invited.

The newcomer stepped in timidly. "Is this Miss Grant?" she asked. "I am Nellie Archman. You telephoned for my father—"

"Yes! I am so glad you have come. Your father's secretary is with Mr. Morbach now."

"Mr. Akin?" For an instant Nellie looked puzzled. Then her face cleared. "I suppose he couldn't find father and thought it best to come himself," she murmured. "I telephoned you that he would come, you know, but later we decided that he should go to look for father and that I should come here direct. I don't see how he managed to outstrip me, but I am glad he did."

Edith nodded and turned toward the closed door of the parlor. "Will you see Mr. Morbach?" she asked.

But Nellie declined. "I had rather not," she said, "if Mr. Akin is here, he will do everything. I only came in case—"

The door opened behind her and some one came in hastily. "I got your phone message," said a man's voice, "and came over at once. I—Miss Archman!"

Nellie had turned around. "Mr. Carr!" she exclaimed, in tones as wondering as those of the man.

The two faced each other. Both seemed at a loss for words. The man, especially, seemed abashed.

Nellie was the first to recover herself. "I didn't know that you lived out here," she said.

The man seemed to recover himself. He smiled ruefully. "Discovered!" he said. "I've made an awful mess of things. I'm afraid. I—oh! Well! I've got to confess now." He turned to the other woman. Edith!" he began. "Let me—"

A sudden sharp outcry behind the closed door cut across Carr's words, and he broke off. Simultaneously Edith threw open the door and hastened through it. As Nellie started to follow, the man stopped her. "You'll come with your father to the ship tomorrow, won't you?" he begged. "I can't explain now. There's no time. I've been a fool, but it was because—Good Lord! I can't tell you now. Promise me you'll come!"

Nellie nodded. "Yes, I'll come," she said slowly, in a tired, hard voice.

Inside the parlor the doctor was standing over the couch, straightening the injured man's arms. As the others entered he looked up. "It's all over," he said. "The man is dead. However, he told his story first. It sounds vague, but I suppose Mr. Archman will understand. Mr. Akin—Where is Mr. Akin?" He looked about him inquiringly.

Edith looked surprised. "I don't know," she said. "He didn't come into the front hall. He must have gone into the dining-room." She turned. "This is Miss Archman, doctor," she said. She did not introduce Carr, and Nellie, as she bowed gravely, noted that he had not entered the room.

The doctor's face cleared. "I'm glad you have come, Miss Archman," he said. "Your father's secretary was here a moment ago, but he has disappeared mysteriously. I suppose he'll turn up soon. I wish the police would come. Here they are now!" Another ring had sounded at the door.

It was not the police, however. The open door disclosed two men, one old and the other young.

The elder man's face was drawn and pale. "Morbach!" he exclaimed. "Where is he?" Then as no one spoke he went on impatiently. "You telephoned me," he rasped. "I am Mr. Archman."

"Yes, I know you, Mr. Archman." Edith stepped forward. "I'm sorry, but Mr. Morbach is dead. He died ten minutes ago. This is he!"

Archman stepped to the side of the couch and stared at the dead man's face. "I've known him forty years," he said. "And now he's dead and I'm left. How did it happen?" He looked up questioningly and saw his daughter. "Nellie!" he exclaimed. "You here? I thought I recognized the auto. How did this happen?"

Nellie glanced at the doctor, who made haste to answer. "Auto accident," he said tersely. "But that didn't kill him. He was murdered—shot through the body."

"Murdered!" Archman's lips tightened. "Good G—d! It must have been—" He clutched at the doctor's arm. "Did he leave any message—any word? They didn't get his papers, did they?"

"No! No!" The doctor shook his head consolingly. "No; your secretary got here in time. Mr. Morbach gave him papers and a message. It's all right. Your secretary has everything."

"My secretary? What fool talk is this? This is my secretary"—he indicated the younger man—"I got your message after he started, and I caught up with him at your gate."

The doctor's eyes widened. "I don't understand," he muttered. "Mr. Akin was here a moment ago. This gentleman can't be he."

"It is he. Don't you suppose I know my own secretary? If any one else is here, he's an impostor. If any one—Where is he? Let me see him!"

"He's gone!" The doctor's voice was hoarse.

"Gone! Gone! But he didn't get Morbach's papers!"

The doctor nodded. "Yes! He got them. He said he was Mr. Akin. None of us knew—"

"Nellie knew." Archman whirled on his daughter. "What does this mean, Nellie?" he cried.

The girl shook her head. "I didn't see him, father," she said. "He was with Mr. Morbach when I came and—"

The doctor interposed. "None of us knew him and none of us doubted him. Morbach gave him the papers. Were—were they very important?"

"Important! Important!" Archman's face grew so red that it was almost black. "What did he say, man? What did he say? Didn't you hear?"

The doctor nodded. "Yes; we heard," he answered. "He asked us to listen. He said that some one whom you would know was dying and wanted to see 'her.' He had cabled and then had come himself, apparently fearing that the message might have been intercepted—"

"It was. I never got it."

Why are the papers so important to the rich man? And who impersonated his secretary?

Moral and Material Value in Cleanliness

Cleanliness reacts upon the morals of people. A boy or girl brought up in a clean home grows into a better man or woman than if reared in a dirty one, and a town that is kept clean develops better citizens than one where filth is allowed to accumulate. Thus, by being partially clean, a town may get the moral effect, but to get the health-saving effect, it must be sanitarily clean. Individual cleanliness will not do. For instance, in a town of 2,000 inhabitants, suppose 1,999 keep their houses, yards and premises, streets and alleys, so clean that flies have no chance to breed in them, but the other has a horse and stable and is slovenly. He keeps an exposed manure pile, and it is evident will breed countless swarms of flies to nullify as far as possible the results of his neighbor's cleanliness. It is certain that the flies bred in that manure heap will scatter over the town to be a vexation and torture to those who are clean.

Hence, in sanitation the whole race must live or fall together. Each in ways unknown is protecting or endangering himself and others, forming the characters and making the history of unnumbered lives, and cannot live for self alone. There is no room for pedantic exclusiveness, but our deeds and words are as far-reaching as life. An epidemic in one locality endangers others, and the consequences of filth in one place may be widely scattered. As it takes social action to stamp out diseases, so cleanliness will exterminate the flies, but it must be social cleanliness. We are a part of this, and whether we realize it or not, we are living for the weal or woe of earth, and should join the longer living legion in a grand clean-up campaign to eradicate the flies and all other sources of disease, so that this globe of ours shall be a cleaner and better place as a home for the human race.—Public Health Service.

Love of Home One of Finest Human Instincts

"Love of home is one of the finest instincts and the greatest of inspirations of our people," according to Herbert Hoover, secretary of the United States Department of Commerce, who is one of the foremost advocates in the country of home ownership.

"Buying or building a home requires the best of sound judgment in seeing that the personal needs of the family are best met with the funds available," Mr. Hoover said. "It involves not only the carrying on of transactions of financing and buying or building, but it involves the proper determination of location with respect to school, to work and to neighborhood.

"Maintaining a high percentage of individual home owners is one of the searching tests that now challenges the people of the United States. The present large proportion of families that own their homes is both the foundation of a sound economic and social system and a guarantee that our society will continue to develop rationally as changing conditions demand.

"Whenever a home is bought, with few exceptions, the purchaser is, by his act of becoming a home owner, making himself a permanent citizen of the community. Such citizens are most sought after by cities."

Grounds Most Important

We need to make more attractive and beautiful our city and country homes in order that farm life and country life may be our most worthwhile occupation, then by giving greater stability and intensiveness to our rural life and activities. The well-kept and orderly appearance of the farmstead or country home is the main factor in making the place attractive. The lawn trees, shrubbery and flowers on the grounds immediately surrounding the house which form the framework for the home have much to do with the contentment and happiness of the family, and inasmuch as these grounds are, or should be, a part of the home and the home life, the importance of making these grounds attractive and beautiful needs no further discussion.

Attractive Mail Boxes

Roadside rural free delivery boxes should receive attention this month. The Post Office department urges that such mail receptacles be painted white. In the pretty suburbs near Atlanta, Ga., owners have overcome the crudeness of boxes mounted on the ends of sticks by use of a light wooden framework about the box over which vines are trained. The gabled roofs of the boxes are painted red or blue.

Leap-Year Hint

They were sitting on the beach at Revere. Moonlight silvered the quiet water. After a brief silence she turned to him and said: "Why is the ocean like June?" He thought a while, but to no purpose. "I don't know," he said finally; "why is the ocean like June?" Blushing coyly, she answered: "Because it is maritime."

We don't know what happened after that, but if there isn't another leap-year wedding that girl will certainly be disappointed.—Boston Transcript.

American War Mother

MADAME SCHUMANN-HEINK, the great German musician, but greater American war mother, recently delivered a profoundly impressive address before the American Legionnaires of Cheyenne, Wyo., in which she extolled the Legion, and in a voice still suggestive of her native land, she expressed with beautiful simplicity her sentiments for this, the land of her adoption. The war mother of Schumann-Heink spoke when she said: "Just like you boys, I simply did my bit—what every mother ought to do. I love it, America, because America took me into its arms and gave me everything. I was poor when I came. America was good to me—so good to me. It made it possible for me to educate my boys. I have—I had—six boys and two girls. I have only four boys now. When the war broke out I saw my duty, my opportunity to pay back—pay a little back—for the goodness America had been to me. I could serve these people I adore and love. I was made a better woman by the war. As long as I can I will serve the soldiers—the soldiers who were, and the soldiers now. I will serve with you any time you call."

YOUTHFUL LEGION MAN IS HONORED

Oklahoma's youngest Legionnaire is going to West Point. Not content with claiming the honor of being the state's most youthful Legion member, Frank Hosch of Cushing, Okla., just turned twenty-one, will soon enter the United States Military academy at West Point to become a future "Looey" or maybe a general with "bookoo" stars.

At fourteen, when boys are generally wont to moon over puppy love notes from little girls in pink dresses, Hosch enlisted in the United States navy to fight the Huns. Throughout the war he served as a loyal "gob," but with the signing of the armistice the young belligerent sought a more exciting field than the prosaic maritime duties on board a cruiser in times of peace. Immediately after receiving his discharge he signed up for service with the army in Siberia.

With the return of the American troops from Siberia, and with no more wars on the horizon, the two-time veteran journeyed to Cushing there to begin the hardest fight of his career—the fight to get an education and support himself at the same time.

He was handicapped by the years he had lost in serving his country, but he had gained much in perseverance and the power to concentrate on an objective until it was reached. It mattered not whether that objective entailed going to school through the day and studying and working far into the night, the objective was to be reached, and so religiously did he keep his eye on it that he took double class work at the Cushing high school and finished the four-year course in two years, with honors. Then in addition, to soothe that savage fighting breast of his, he took music lessons, and is considered an excellent violinist.

With his diploma under his arm the fighting Legionnaire declared he wasn't through with the battle for education, and that West Point was his next objective. Cushing Legionnaires helped him over the rough political terrain intervening between the obscure, parentless boy of Cushing, Okla., and an appointment to West Point, to the end that before many weeks the new objective was reached and the appointment to the war college was received.

Itinerant Vendors Get Jolt in Atlantic City

Itinerant vendors who represent themselves as ex-service men are required at Atlantic City, N. J., to obtain the endorsement of the local post of the American Legion and to have been residents of the state for at least a year before permission is granted them to peddle their wares. County Clerk Blair, who advocated the ruling, stated: "There are Legion members and ex-service men enough who are entitled to anything in the way of permits to conduct business, without wasting time with fakers who are endeavoring to capitalize on sympathy for the former soldiers. Ex-service men have been victimized on all sides through the false representation of cheats who never were in the war and have no other concern than to make money at the veterans' expense."

May Prosecute Lawyers Charging for Service

Certain San Francisco lawyers who are alleged to have been charging fees for aiding former service men in making out their adjusted compensation blanks, are threatened with exposure by Maj. A. E. Graupner, chairman of the American Legion Rehabilitation Committee of California. Several complaints have come to the state department headquarters, according to Legion officials. Major Graupner has been authorized to protect the veterans' interests and to prosecute where sufficient evidence can be secured. The federal law prohibits the charging of fees for aiding ex-service men in filling out their adjusted compensation blanks.

Do They Like Animals?

Show me a child who does not like a kitten or a puppy, and I will show you the unhealthy product of unnatural upbringing, writes Elizabeth K. Peeples in Nature Magazine of Washington. To study animals with children from seven to eleven or twelve years of age is as sure a road to happiness as taking them to a circus. Often that is a good way to begin. But even after a circus, beginners in animal study should commence with a domestic rather than a wild animal because of ease in observation and the possibilities for intimacy, if for no other reasons.

ys Learning Will Displace Laughter

An age without laughter, a somber d scientific period, when the jokes comicalities of the present day be preserved as curiosities in the y tomes of museums, was predict- as a possibility by Dr. Charles Shaw, professor of philosophy, talk before the summer school of York university.

The disappearance of laughter from world will be caused by the spread learning, Doctor Shaw said. He ued that, in a distant day, men will w too much to laugh, just as primi- men knew too little to smile.

Men no longer laugh at things they d to laugh at, Doctor Shaw pointed . Among the things which laughter passes by, he said, are: Old ds, bobbed hair, matrimony and drunken man.

PROMINENT PEOPLE

Neal Gallatin of the Spring-Builders

(1004 Oak Crest, Casper).

If a man who makes two blades of grass to grow where grew only one before is a philanthropist and benefactor, what is a woman who makes to bubble a cold, sweet, refreshing spring where was before but a wet place or a puddle? Here is the portrait of Neal Gallatin—the pen name of Mrs. Donald Ogilbee of Casper, Wyo.—one of the founders of the Spring-Builders of America, a new organization which should soon have a nation-wide membership. It has no officers, no constitution, no fees. And there is just one way of joining the elect.

You hunt up a spring—neglected, forlorn, uninviting. You dig it out. You line the bowl. You fix it so that its waters will run off and so the storm waters will not drain in. Then you mark it "Living Waters," "Spring-Builders of America," etc., according to instructions from headquarters (1004 Oak Crest, Casper). So—and so only—shall you acquire the proud title of Spring-Builder.

It being a work of love, you can go as far as you like. You can put a canopy over your spring and make a walk to it. You can plant trees, shrubs, flowers. You can set up seats, table, oven. And you can put a sign beside the hot and dusty road bearing an arrow and the magic word, "Spring."

Or you may keep your secret—except from the birds and wild things and a friend or two.

Mrs. J. W. Davis Well Known at Capital

If fate should put Mrs. John W. Davis in the White House, the nation would have a "First Lady of the Land" who is at home as an experienced and charming hostess. She also has many friends in Washington. In her husband's regime as solicitor general she was a favorite in the official and diplomatic set.

As Ellen Graham Bassel, daughter of John and Martha Bassel of Clarksburg, W. Va., she was identified as one of the "Bassel belles."

The oldest sister married Percy Goff, a son of Senator Goff, who for many years represented West Virginia. Mrs. Goff died the first week of the Democratic convention and it is for her that Mrs. Davis is now in mourning. Two other sisters married S. M. Gallaher of Charleston, W. Va., and Philip Watson of Indianapolis.

In London, as the wife of the American ambassador, for two seasons Mrs. Davis was hostess at the American Luncheon club, was honorary president of the American Woman's club as well as member of its board of managers and took an active part in other patriotic societies. Mrs. Davis is mainly identified in Washington with the Democratic National Women's club of which she is a founder-member.

Mr. Davis had been a widower twelve years when they were married. His first wife, Miss Julia McDonald of Charlestown, W. Va., died in 1900, the year after their marriage, when their daughter, Julia, was born. Julia is now Mrs. William McMillan Adams. Mr. Adams is representing the United States Rubber company in Copenhagen.

U. S.-Mexican Claims to Be Balanced

How much shall we have to pay Mexico for damages caused by the Vera Cruz occupation—which did not secure a Mexican salute to the flag—and by the Pershing punitive expedition—which did not get Villa dead or alive? It remains to be seen. And how much shall Mexico have to pay us for damages in the various revolutions from 1910 to 1920? That also remains to be seen. Anyway, Ambassador Charles B. Warren has just resigned, on the ground that his work is finished. And one result of conferences in Mexico last year in which he and John Barton Payne represented the United States is that two claims commissions are at work settling the foregoing questions.

On its part the United States government has named Nathan L. Miller (portrait herewith), former governor of New York, who was also a former judge of the Court of Appeals, for the general commission, and Ernest B. Perry of Lincoln, Neb., a former judge, for the special commission. The special commission will deal with and decide upon all claims against Mexico caused by the series of revolutions from 1910 to 1920. The general commission will adjudicate upon all claims in general. The committee of congress at Washington which investigated these claims in 1923 announced that the total amount of them would be $505,002,434.

Newlon Now Heads National Educators

Denver is taking on airs these days over the election of Jesse H. Newlon as president of the National Education association, for he was its superintendent of schools, re-elected last year under a five-year contract. The National Education association is composed of 130,000 educators representing the public school system of the country.

Newlon was born at Salem, Ind., July 16, 1882. He was graduated from Indiana university in 1907, and in 1914 from Columbia university, where he took his master's degree in school administration. After teaching in Indiana and Illinois he went to Lincoln, Neb., where he was superintendent of schools, 1917-20. Then he went to Denver. With Charles H. Johnston and Frank G. Pickell he is joint author of a book entitled: "Administration of Junior and Senior High Schools," and has contributed numerous articles to educational periodicals. He is a member of the National Council of Education and the National Society for the Study of Education. He is also a member of the Delta Upsilon, Phi Kappa Delta and Kappa Delta Phi fraternities, and of the Rotary club.

Scraps of Humor

ALL FIXED UP

An Italian was being examined in the civil service commissioner's room for a laborer's position. He was fluent in most of his answers, and it appeared he would pass without any difficulty. But his downfall came when they asked if he had been naturalized.

He seemed a bit puzzled, but at last his face lighted up and he said:

"Ah, I know whata you mean. Scratcha da arm. Yes, lasta week."

A Similar Token

Hilda (married a fortnight)—I do think it was kind of him to give us a wedding present. We scarcely knew him.

Jack—Oh, well, you see, I sent a wreath when his wife died. I suppose he remembered I thought of him in his trouble, so he would think of me in mine.

Very Good

One day a man in a show stood up and said, "I will tell any young man the name of his future wife." A bright young man out of the audience stood up.

Showman—What is your name?

Young Fellow—It is Brown.

Showman—The name of your wife will be Mrs. Brown.

JUST BY THE BARD

Wife (reading paper)—One of the prisoners in this penitentiary has published a poem.

Hubby—Remarkable—how is it signed?

Wife—Just signed "By the Barred."

Smile Away Trials

The little trials of life today,
Will live to smile and laugh away

An Unfading Mental Picture

Brown—I used to know her when she wore short dresses.

Black—I did not know you were that old.

Brown—Oh, that was only two years ago.

Another Scrap Started

Mrs. Scrapp—"John, this is our anniversary month, you remember—June, the marriage month.

Scrapp—Yes, I remember. I fell in love in March, the mad month, and proposed in the April, the fool month.

And It Wasn't Satire, Either

Her Dad—My daughter, sir, sprang from a line of peers.

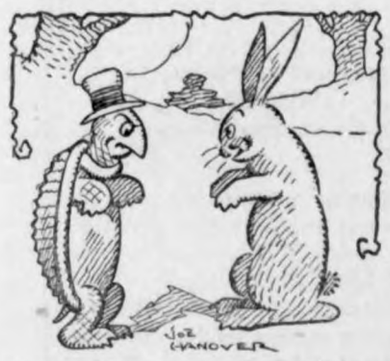
Her Sweetie—Well, I dove off a dock once.

Not Much

May—Did Anne get anything out of her breach of promise suit?

June—Nothing at all; the man decided to marry her.

A ROUGH JOB



Rabbit—What's your new job?

Turtle—I'm a washboard at the beaver's laundry!

Not Much Use

Said the old scrub bull
As he gazed through the fence,
"The man who uses me
Ain't got much sense."

Brothers, Anything to Say?

"Very talkative, isn't she?"

"Yes, her father was a barber, and her mother was a woman."

Doesn't Bother Him

Mrs. Newlywed (at breakfast)—It's really awful the way you snore, Rollo, dear. Can't something be done to stop it? It's very annoying.

Rollo—My dear Lulu, I assure you it doesn't annoy me in the least.

Had Been There Before

Wife—There are a lot of very clever people coming to dinner this evening. Be as bright as you can.

Husband—Not necessary. I've only got to listen.—Judge.

BROUGHT HOME FROM MEXICO ON STRETCHER

But Mrs. Herman Is Now in Good Health, Thanks to Tanlac.

A few years ago Mrs. M. E. Herman, 215 Hitchings St., San Antonio, Texas, "returned to the states from Monterey, Mexico," she says, "in such a low state of health that she had to be carried to her home on a stretcher."

As time went on and she still lingered in the throes of "Nerve exhaustion, stomach disorders and bodily weakness," she determined, "on the advice of her druggist," to try Tanlac, which she declares "brought back my health and strength after I had almost despaired of ever getting well."

The results of Tanlac in the case of Mrs. Herman, while indeed remarkable, are by no means unusual for Tanlac, as many hundreds of people everywhere have testified to having taken the famous medicine with no less wonderful results.

"I returned from Mexico," said Mrs. Herman, "so thin and weak that I feared my life was going to be cut short. I could neither eat or sleep in a natural way and it seemed at times that heart palpitation and nerve exhaustion would take me away.

"The makers of Tanlac will always have my heartfelt thanks, for it is to Tanlac that I attribute my recovery and present good health. Tanlac is like a blessing from heaven to me, that is the way I think about it."

Tanlac is for sale by all good druggists. Accept no substitute. Over 40 Million bottles sold.

Tanlac Vegetable Pills, for constipation, made and recommended by the manufacturers of TANLAC.

Well!

He (philosophically)—Kisses are the language of love.

She—Yes (pause); why don't you say something?

Worth Thinking About

A Giant Peak of Hawkeye Cement

IF the 4,800,000 sacks of HAWKEYE cement produced and shipped last year were stacked in one great pile you would have a peak 118 times as high as Mt. McKinley, in Alaska, the highest point on the North American continent.

One-third of all the cement used in Iowa today is HAWKEYE. Thus Iowa builders place their seal of approval on quality and uniformity. Be sure to specify and get HAWKEYE when you build.

EDITOR BACKS DOWN

A Kansas editor got gay and made caustic comment of the practice of bobbing hair. The poor editor soon found himself scorned by the women of the town. In hunger and despair the editor tried to regain the patronage and good will of the women by apologizing, and this is what he said:

"We like bobbed hair. Bobbed hair is sanitary. Bobbed hair looks cute. Bobbed hair makes business good for the barbers. Bobbed hair makes old women look older, giving them that good girlish grandmother appearance. Biscuits with hair in them are not as numerous as they were before the bobbed hair craze. If there are any, they are shorter and easier to get out. Therefore we apologize for what we have said in the past about bobbed hair."

CELEBRATION OF NATIONAL DE FENSE DAY

Big County Celebration to Be Held at Garner, Friday, Sept. 12

Preparations are being made for the proper celebration of National Defense Day, at Garner on Friday of next week, September 12. A meeting was held at Britt on Wednesday of last week at which most of the towns of the county were represented. Plans were gone over at this meeting, and it was agreed to go ahead with the celebration as talked at the Commercial Club meeting in Garner on Monday evening of last week, at which time a number of the county were present, and as was reported in tht Signal last week

The plan is this. The celebration is to be held at Garner on Friday September 12. All of the towns, rural clubs and organizations are asked to co-operate and take part Towns that have ands are askod bring their bands, arrange floats and take part in the parade which will probably be at about 10 o'clock. It is expected that it will be noon by the time the parade is over, and picnic dinners will be held.

Immediately after dinner an address will be given by Chaplain Clemmons of Owatonna, Minn, who is National Chaplain of the American Legion, and chaplain of a national guard regiment of Mninesota. A bageball game will bep layed by two teams of the county. Whc this who this will be has not yet been decided. There will be street sport, such as races of various kinds and perhaps a tug-of-war.

In the evening there will be dances for old and young, all of which will be free, and other entertainments. Many of the details have not yet been worked out. The different towns and rural organizations are asked to bring their bands and have floats in the parade, and Garner will look after the details of the celebration.

A meeting was held Monday evening at the Zeiger Hall at which most of the committees appointed by the Commercial Club were present, and made plans to carry out the celebration as talked.

The Klemme Band and American Legion are all going up to the big celebration as well as a large agregation of Klemme people. This is a National Holiday and if you are a loyal American citizen, you should be there.

We overhearl a whisper the other day say the Iowa Falls Sentinal that local banks had been flooded with checks with the uniform amount of $4.00 all of which were good. Workmen near the well are compelled to wear asbestos clothing to withstand the heat, and visitors are not allowed closer than a quarter of a mile. Even at that distance, one must yell at the top of his voice to be heard a couple of feet away—Belmond Independent.

The Public School

BY H. L. TENNY, PLYMOTH

Quite early in our country's rule,
Took shape that big idea—the school.
Now everywhere beneath our skies,
Do countless halls of learning rise
Strong bulwarks they have come to be
In this great nation of the free.
And we can only be our best,
As we uphold this interest.
Here every child has equal right
To rise to eminence and right.
Here enter by one common door,
The high, the low, the rich, the poor.
Here all proud class distinction fall,
AndGod is Maker of them all.
Here blood and money do not count,
And here the humblest one may count
To greatest place of trust and power,
And be there of the hour.
The children of the foreigner,
Who has come knocking at our door,
With our own sons and daughters blend,
And soon together they ascend.
Here Celt, and Slav, and Greek and Scotch
Are fused in one great melting pot.
All these we must some way impress,
For high ideals and righteousness;
Must teach them how they can be men,
Good parents, loyal citizen,
That they can come up straight and clean
And not descend to low or mean.
They cannot play a winning game,
By sordid deeds, with selfish aim.
That love of God and love of truth,
Becomes the manly, active youth.
For we must not stress intellect,
And culture of the heart neglect,
Nor yet make body good and strong,
And let the rest go loose and wrong.
The building of a rightly character,
Is the most important task by far,
To give us the well rounded man,
Should ever be the plan.
To train the body, mind and soul,
Is the objective and the goal.

SOME STARTLING FACTS

Here are some of the most outstanding results shown by our last census:

Out of every twenty husbands and fathers, only one provides for the care of his family after death. One man provides for his family—nineteen do not.

Eight million women in America must work to live.

Sixty-nine men out of every one hundred reach seventy years of age without a dollar.

Eighty per cent of the children who enter school at six years of age leaves school before they have finish ed the grade school because they have to go to work.

But ten per cent of the men in America leave any estate.

Thirty-five per cent of tht nation's widows are in want and ninety per cent are without the ordinary comforts of life.

Life insurane in America has reduced pauperism 33 per cent since 1880.

Only seven per cent of the economic value of human life in America is covered with life insurance.

After reading this summary estab ished through a government survey what do you think of the future old age or the saftey of your family? Are you one of the men who provide for old age and the family, or are you one of the nineteen who do not? Ponder it over and over.

And these things cost money; their operation, replacement and "living up to them," costs still more money

Money has been abundant during the past eight years, the opportunities to acquire it in large gobs by those who knew how have been endless.

Not much effort was involved on the part of these having the money making temperment and qualities, and the ease with which they got theirs aroused the cupidity and envy of their friends who tried to emulate them both in the acquisiion and the spending of money.

HOW DEAD MAN'S LAKE AT PI- LOT KNOB, GOT ITS NAME

State Park to be Dedicated Thursday, September 11

The Pilot Knob State Park four miles east of Forest City, will be dedicated Thursday September 11. At which time Gov. Kendall and several members of the State Board of Conservation will be present and take part in the ceromony. The occasion will be made a holiday in Forest City. A barbacue is being arraged by the Commercial Club, and an ox will be roasted whole at the little lake in the Park area.

Legend of Dead Man's Lake

Within the Park area is a wonderful little lake (because of the many legends attached to how it got its name) known as "Dead Man's Lake' The lake originally contained about two acres, at the time it was supposed to have taken its weierd name. There are many versions (legends) as to the origin of the name, most of them being familiar to the people of the locality, but the one now being related has never been printed before . In fact the legend has been more or less guarded, and only through a number of years of patient search has it been pierced into a whole story of how the " lake of the dead man" Indian cognomen—came by its name.

There is something weierd about the surroundings of the lake; something that is "creepy" and awe-inspiring as evening comes on; perhaps more some years ago before it was included in a state park, and before it became a rendezvous for picnic parties. There is yet a weirdness about the surroundings that make some people hesitate to remain there over night; in spite of the fact that it is more or less of a resort during all the summer days.

The fact that nature placed this little lake high up above the surrounding country, with neither inlet or outlet, so far as the water supply is concerned is a marvel for geogogical study. The lake is now about half filled with moss and peat, but is of sufficient size to attract many sightseers to the spot. It is stated, and upon fairly good authority that this lake has no bottom at its center That a great funnel like hole contains the water, the source of which is hidden in the bowels of the earth. This cannot be vouched for in this article, but certain it is, and can be be attested to by all who know the locality, that the supply of water is not effected by drouth, nd neither is it raised by local rainfalls, but remains the same level year in and year out.

Dead Man's Lake was named, and the occasion for it being so named was before the advent of the white man in this section. It is an historical fact that the Indian tribes had made this spot their headquarters for many many years, but had abondoned it a few years before the first white man came up the Winnebago river However, they did return occasionally to this particular spot, and later many of the first settlers remember these pilgrimages.

The first white man who followed the winding course of the Winnebago river (more lately dubbed Lime Creek to the point south of Pilot Knob, visited the spot because it was the highest of the range of hills in the section, that he might get a better view of the unknown wilderness that swept on and on before his view to the north and west. From the height of Pilot Knob he discovered the little lake nestling high upon the lower surrounding hills and marveled that such a body of water should be located at the apparent high elevation. When he visited the lake he also discovered that it had one lone inhabitant—an old Indian who proved to be permanent fixture there. By patient exchanging of signs and by diagram in the sandy soil on the lake bank, this white man learned much of the lore and history of the country; the tribe to which the old Indian belonged, and also that the lake was known as "Woetg la Las Joui Olu" meaning the "Lake of the Dead Man". His tribe had left him there and named his abiding place the "lake of the dead man", because he was dead so far as his tribe was concerned. The old fellow had been disapointed so it was learned, when he had mixed in the tribe's politics, and became soured—like some white men do after they have been disapointed in politics, or betrayed by their fellow politicians— this old fellow had wanted to be headpush in dispensing powered roots and herbs and mixing medicine for his tribe. His disappointment had led him to cease mingling with his tribesmen, and shortly afterwards when the Indians moved west, he refused to go with them.

At any rate he stayed at the lake —it may have been that he loved the dear old spot and fain would leave it. Then it was that his Indian tribe named the locality the 'lake of the dead man'—present day slang would have said "lame duck". The one most pecular incident in the finding of this lone Indian by the first white man, was that he was living in a near log cabin, just above the lake and to the north about two rods from the water line. It is said by some that this same log cabin is the one that now stands some ten rods north of the lake, but the truth of this is not vouched for in this article.

Here he was living when the first white man came. Here he stayed and apparently never left his solitary retreat. Just east of his wonderful log cabin on a hillside above the lake was an opening of a large cavern, a natural cave that had been formed during some early ptriod perhaps during the period when Wisconsin drift covered this section—in to which he made daily pilgrimages, the reason for which no white man ever knew. And nether dd whiteman ever set foot wthin the cave. When the old Indian died, a year or two after the coming of the first white man, his body was taken into the cave by the returning members of this tribe and buried. In leaving the locality the Indians obliterated the opening to the cave, and its exact location has never since been discovered to a certainty. For many years after there was an apparent indication of such a cave on the hillside of the lake, but of recent years it has has wholly disappeared; and a few years ago when some men tried to find the opening, they were unsuccessful. The state now refuses to allow any digging or prospecting for the old natural cave, and trees grow over the spot that once marked the opening of this little known cave that doubtless holds many Indian relics.

That is how "Dead Man's Lake" got its name. Named by the Indians dians who once inhabited this section and who called it the "Lake of the dead man". This lake is a part of the area that is to be dedicated as a state park, and on is banks ox will be roasted whole, on Thursday, September 11.

What Is It?

It is a duty both useful and necessary; it is esteemed a great virtue, but few possess it; it is found in the lower as well as the higher circles of life, and is often exhausted and as often renewed. Our sufferings are rendered lighter by it, and our trials are softened; it gives contentment to the mind and ease to the conscience, to the afflicted hope and to the mournful consolation. What is it? Baby Vamp

Walking along Hollywood boulevard one morning, an elderly lady with her little granddaughter passed before the window of a confectioner, and the old lady was importuned for a nickel for a delectable bit of display.

Speaking a little more loudly than she probably realized, the old lady said: "Grandma has no money."

A man passing overheard, and quietly slipped a coin into the hand of the little one, which was at once exchanged for the coveted morsel.

That afternoon she said: "Grandma, let's you and I go down on the boulevard, and you talk out loud."—Los Angeles Times.

"I AM AN ACTRESS"

SYNOPSIS.—Thrown from his auto in a New York village, a man is carried unconscious into the home of a Miss Edith Grant. A doctor discovers he has been shot, fatally. Consciousness returning, he babbles of "millions." He begs that Henry Archman, millionaire resident of the vicinity, be sent for, declaring he has important papers for him. Archman cannot be reached by 'phone, but word is sent that his secretary is on the way. A man announcing himself as Archman's secretary, Akin, arrives, talks with Morbach, and leaves with a package he gives him. Morbach dies. Archman's arrival, with his secretary, reveals that the man posing as Akin is an impostor.

"He said that 'they' met him and followed him and attacked him. They wanted the papers that he was supposed to carry. But he did not carry them. His—employer—would give them only into 'her' hands. You must bring her to get them. She would be rich—exceedingly rich—and able to fight for her rights. You must bring her at once, either by the way you know or by the way explained in the packet. Once more he repeated his plea for haste—and died." The doctor turned to Miss Grant. "Does your recollection agree with mine, Miss Grant?" he asked.

Edith nodded. "Yes," she said; "exactly."

Archman's jaws hardened. "And they got the papers," he muttered. "How could they? How could they have known that Akin was expected?" Archman's eyes swept suspiciously over all in the room.

"I don't know." The doctor's voice had taken on a tinge of indignation. "Perhaps they overheard Miss Grant talking to your secretary on the telephone. The line is a party one and has half a dozen other telephones on it. What she said might have been overheard at any one of them."

Archman glanced toward the door. Then his secretary pulled him by the arm and he bent to listen. "Eh! What!" he shouted. "You mean that this is the woman?" He glanced at Edith. "You're sure?"

Akin nodded. "Yes; I'm sure," he declared.

Archman glared at the girl. "So!" he grated. "So it is a plant. I might have guessed."

Edith blanched. "What—what do you mean?" she gasped.

"Mean?" Archman laughed hoarsely. "I guess you know what I mean. You're in with them, too. You think you'll beat me, do you, miss? Well, you won't. Tell your employer that, miss!"

"Are you mad?" The doctor strode forward.

"Ask her whether I'm mad. Ask her whether she isn't the acting woman who snared my son, Harry. Ask her if she wasn't sent down here to finish her work? Ask her!"

Edith stepped forward. Except for two red spots that burned in her cheeks, her face was white. "Yes!" she said. "I am an actress. But I have not tried to snare your son, Harry. I have tried to avoid him. But this is my house. And as long as you are beneath its roof, I must ask you to treat me with respect. If you cannot do that, I must ask you to go."

CHAPTER III

One Way to Break In.

A year before the day on which the mysterious Morbach had met his mysterious death, Henry Archman had moved his family from Chicago to New York.

He did not want to leave Chicago. He had lived in the Lake city all his life, and he had spread his roots deep. His father, reputed to be well connected in his native land, Denmark, had brought him and his mother to the western metropolis fifty years before, and had opened a small grocery store, which many years later Henry Archman had expanded into the enormous meat-packing business of Archman & Company.

Henry Archman was sober, industrious, hard working, fond and proud of the country in which he had lived nearly all his life. He was perfectly happy, having everything he wanted—plenty of work and power over men and things. Like many another man, however, he was the victim of his family. He fought as long as he could against their desire to move to New York, but yielded at last.

Each of the family had his or her own reasons for wanting to migrate. Mrs. Archman, for instance, wanted to break into the Four Hundred and ultimately into the aristocracy of the Old world. She hoped to marry her daughters off to dukes, earls, or counts. Her daughter, Nellie, was not keen on titles, but she did want to meet eastern men. Her son, Harry, said he wanted to get a larger outlook on life, by which he meant that he wanted to find out if the Great White Way was as bad as it was painted. Her youngest daughter, Bessie, wanted to go because she was seventeen and liked anything that was new. When they all insisted, Archman surrendered. He moved to New York, bought a marble palace on Fifth avenue and another up on the Hudson.

He had long contemplated the opening of a New York branch, and two days after he reached Manhattan he had opened an office and had settled himself in it as firmly as if he had been there all his life. The fact that he had left Chicago did not mean at all that he had stopped building up his business. In fact, once he had gotten the New York branch to running smoothly he began to plan to get control of the meat supply that was beginning to come in from Argentina. Soon he determined to divert some of his transatlantic steamships to that part of the world. He selected one of his cattle boats, the El Rio, and sent her to the Ontario docks to be overhauled and fitted up with passenger accommodations, announcing that he was going to Argentina on it to open up the business. Day after day, accompanied by his daughter, Nellie, he visited the basin to see how the work was coming on. He paid little attention to his family's social progress.

Meanwhile Mrs. Archman was storming the social citadel. To aid her, she had unlimited millions, two handsome daughters, a good-looking son, and a somewhat vague claim, on her husband's side, to an aristocratic Danish ancestry.

Bess, the younger daughter, being a hearty, healthy American girl, made much good-natured fun of her mother's social aspirations. Continually she chaffed the elder lady, a mode of attack which Mrs. Archman took in good part and even enjoyed.

Early in the evening of the day when Morbach came to his death Mrs. Archman bustled in the parlor of her big country house, where her daughters were whiling away the time till dinner should be served. She was smiling happily, so happily that Bess noticed it. "What's up, mumsy?" She laughed. "Has Mrs. Van Astorbilt thrown open the doors of the Four Hundred to you?"

Mrs. Archman blushed. Then she laughed guiltily. "Not Mrs. Van Astorbilt," she answered. "Maybe she'll be next. This letter is from Lord George Caruthers."

Bess snickered. "Hail to Lord George!" she cried. "Who is he when he is at home?"

"He's an Englishman," explained Mrs. Archman. "He incloses a letter of introduction from Sir Butler Brayne."

"And who's Sir Butler Brayne, mumsy? Another face card?"

"I met him at Mrs. Paxton's three months ago. He is engaged to Marjorie Paxton, you know. He's an attache of the British embassy in Washington. I asked him to visit us, but he had to go back to Washington. It was very kind of him to give his friend a letter of introduction to us."

"Kind? Is that what you call it? Oh! Mumsy, mumsy! Where is your western independence! Perhaps he might do for Nellie, eh, mumsy? No! No! We can buy something better than a mere baronet, even one with prospects!" The girl swung around in her seat. "Say, Nellie!" she called. "Wake up! We're talking about you. Do you want to consider baronets or need only earls apply?"

A girl who was playing softly at the piano turned toward the others. She was tall and fair, with a mass of chestnut hair and a pair of sweet, gray eyes—the sort of girl that is likely to cause trouble among the young men in the neighborhood in which she dwells. "What is it, Bess?" she asked.

The younger girl groaned. "Oh! Wake up and stop mooning," she cried. "Mother wants to know what sort of a title she shall buy you."

Mrs. Archman flushed. "Stop, Bess!" she exclaimed. "You're getting hopelessly vulgar. There's no question about buying anybody. But I do want you to know the right people."

Bess had an answer ready. Bess always did have an answer ready for anything and everything.

This time Nellie forestalled her. "But who are the right people, mother?" she asked. "Are they men who have inherited things? Or are they men—self-made Americans—who are making their own way in the world with nothing but their own hands to help them? That's the sort of man I should like to meet and marry; that I should like to stand shoulder to shoulder with."

"Good heavens!" Bess flung up her hands in pretended horror. "And this from her royal highness, Princess Nellie!" she cried. "Say, Nellie, confide in your own little sister. She won't give you away. Where did you meet him?"

Nellie did not answer. As if repenting of her outburst, she had turned back to the piano and was again fingering the keys. She thus missed seeing the expression that had appeared on Mrs. Archman's face.

That poor lady had indeed been stricken with horror. Every word that Nellie had uttered was heresy in her eyes. Her ambitions for her girls were boundless, especially for Nellie, who from her earliest days had been dainty and queenly beyond compare. That Nellie might fall in love with a poor man had never entered her mind. Bess might do it, but Nellie—oh!—it passed belief.

Desperately she rose. "Where is your father?" she stammered. "He's late. Dinner's ready, and he's not here!"

"He isn't far away." Bess had noticed her mother's dismay, and she hastened to the rescue. "I think I hear him coming. Listen!"

Afar, the siren shriek of an automobile split the air.

"Uh-huh!" said Bess. "That's him. And if I can read auto language, he's mad. Who's done anything? Have you, Harry?"

The tall, slight youth of twenty-one, who had just entered the room, flushed uneasily. "I don't know what you mean!" he protested.

"I don't, either," Bess laughed. "But we'll find out soon. Let's look and see our doom approaching." She ran to the window and stared down the drive that led from the great gateway. "What'd I tell you?" she demanded, as she saw a big auto plunging toward the house. It needed no expert to see that the man who drove it was furious.

Scarcely waiting to stop the engine he leaped out and hastened up the steps to the house. His face was grim.

Bess, however, ran to meet him. Bess was the one member of the household who was not in the least afraid of Mr. Archman. Others might pretend not to be, but their pretense was always hollow. Bess, on the other hand, never seemed to realize that she had any reason to be afraid.

It followed, naturally, that she never did have any reason to be so. It followed, also, that Archman was fonder far of her than he was of any other living creature, fonder even than he was of his wife, who, though strong-willed enough with every one else, was humble and obedient with her husband. Bess could twist the stubborn old man around her little finger.

She met him at the top of the steps. "Hello, pops!" she cried, teeth flashing, cheeks flaming, hair flying. "Hello, pops! What's it all about?"

Archman's face relaxed. An apology for a smile curved the corners of his mouth. "About six-thirty," he answered gruffly. "Time for dinner. Where's your brother?"

"Harry?" The girl planted a butterfly kiss on her father's cheek. "Poor Harry! What's he done now?"

"None of your business, miss. Send him to my study instantly."

"Won't after dinner do, dads?" the girl pleaded. "Dinner's ready and you men are always so worked up until you're fed! Wait until after dinner, won't you?"

"No, I won't!" Mr. Archman turned. "Here, James, George, whatever your name is, tell my son I want him at once. At once. Understand?"

James, George—whatever his name was—fled with a mumbled "Yessir," and Archman plunged into his study and slammed the door behind him.

Five minutes later Harry Archman followed him. Harry was slight of build and shy of manner. One who sought might trace a resemblance between his features and those of the older man, but the expressions of the two were so different that few would have guessed that they were father and son. Moreover, the boy was clearly afraid of the man.

"You wanted to see me, father?" he questioned.

Who has impersonated Akin? And why? And why is Archman so excited over the situation?

Why Blinks Had to Reach Home on Schedule Time

Promptly as the office clock struck five Blinks with unusual rapidity prepared to start for home.

As he hustled into his overcoat and made for the door his desk mate raised a surprised head. "What!" he said, "in a hurry again tonight? It's six nights now you've rushed home like this and haven't waited for a soda at the old stand. I'm beginning to think, I've offended you, or something like that."

"No," Blinks laughed. "You haven't hurt my sensitive soul, but the fact is this, we've got a cook up at the house now, and while the missus didn't mind my rolling in late the cook won't stay unless I arrive every evening on time."

All practicality has to be tempered with humanity.

New York Recognizes Value of Reforesting

New York city leads all other municipalities in the state in the matter of land reforested by cities. Data compiled by the United States forest service and the New York state bureau of municipal information gives a total of 24,050 acres reforested by municipalities in the Empire state. The chief purpose of reforestation by cities is the protection of watersheds and the public water supply, but timber for commercial purposes will be cut from most of the watersheds when the timber matures.

The planted land represents only a small portion of total city-owned forests. More than 170,000 acres of forested land are owned by the cities. Troy heads the list with the largest area of standing forests—37,000 acres. New York comes next with 48,836 acres and Rochester is third with 20,863 acres.

Nineteen thousand acres of artificially planted trees places New York in the lead in reforestation. This area is more than twelve times the acreage that New York's nearest competitor, Gloversville, with her 1,500 acres, has been able to do. Rochester ranks third with 915 acres.

Canajoharie, Johnstown, Sidney, Oneida, Syracuse, Utica, Mechanicsville, Cooperstown, Hornell, Wellsville, White Plains, Yonkers and Saratoga Springs all own municipal forests but have done no reforesting. In this group Saratoga Springs has the largest municipal forest, 3,375 acres. These figures do not include planting for 1923.

Reforesting in New York by municipalities is far greater than in any other state and represents two-thirds of the planting done by cities in the United States.

Community "Clean-Up" Idea Hard to Overwork

This would be a better world to live in if all towns could wear perpetually a "shining morning face" and be as neat as the proverbial housewife's kitchen. But towns, like small boys, are exposed to so many forms of dirt and contamination that it is almost impossible to keep them clean in all their nooks and corners. One reason why there is more dirt and disorder in towns than there is any necessity for is the failure of the people themselves to co-operate with civic and health authorities in taking care of their premises. For this reason, "Clean-Up Week" was established and is now observed every year or a day set for getting out the brooms, the mops, the pails of water, bars of soap, paint brushes, buckets of paint and other agencies for making a brighter and cleaner municipality. It is a good idea to start in advance, so the impetus will carry Mobilians through the seven "cleaning" days with a rush, and perhaps leave enough stored-up energy on hand for use during the remainder of the year.—Mobile Register.

Better Buildings

Two powerful forces now characterize American home building, according to a recent historical number of the American Builder. These tendencies—"greater liveability and improved quality"—are more pronounced than ever before. As the result the home builder of today looks more attentively to the interior of his house than formerly. Equipment which saves labor and provides comfort and convenience, and careful planning to secure maximum use of space, rank in importance with the consideration given the selection of building materials and the choice of house design.

This is truly a healthy condition, one founded on the soundest of logic—common sense—and is evolving better buildings. And, let it be emphasized here, at no sacrifice of attractiveness or ideals. The architect has kept pace with the manufacturer, so that today the average American home is as pleasing to the eye as it is comfortable to live in.

Zoning Idea Growing

Eleven states already have passed zoning enabling acts, modeled either wholly or in part on the standard state zoning act drafted by an advisory committee to the United States Department of Commerce, on which the National Association of Real Estate Boards was represented. The progress toward insuring the permanence of zoning has been made within a year of the issuance of the act in preliminary form, according to a statement of the Department of Commerce.

Similar acts have been introduced in four other states, with the promise of more to follow.

Macedonia Is for Republic

Story of Conditions There Told by Emissary From the People.

New York.—A story of conditions in Macedonia, which he ascribes to Serb and Greek domination, has been brought to this country by J. Chkatroff, representative of the Union of the Macedonian Organizations of Bulgaria for the United States and Canada, who arrived here from Sofia recently. The Macedonians, he said, want complete independence and hope that ultimately there will be a Balkan republic, with all Balkan countries federated states.

Mr. Chkatroff said he represented approximately 450,000 Macedonians in Bulgaria, who are members of 94 fraternal organizations, 34 societies of youths, a score of benevolent associations and others. He expects to bring his message of Macedonian hopes to the 60,000 natives of that country in the United States.

"In order to understand the causes of the unruly situation in the Balkans and especially in Macedonia, the country which has always been the apple of discord among the Balkan neighbors, one must not forget her struggle for liberty and political independence during the period of the Turkish domination, and the present-day policy of her new conquerors, Serbs and Greeks," he said.

"Many years ago the Macedonian people began a bloody revolutionary war, which has lasted already more than a quarter of a century, and this caused on several occasions the European chancelleries to move, and finally in 1912 the Balkan alliance was formed against the Turkish empire. Unfortunately, the first Balkan war, and the following fratricide among the Balkan allies culminating in the Treaty of Bucharest of 1913, instead of creating an independent Macedonia in accordance with the wishes of her people, and thus to establish a permanent peace in the Balkans, divided the country between the three belligerents, Serbia, Greece and Bulgaria. This actually made the Macedonian crisis worse.

Errors Are Kept Up.

"The last European war which radically changed the map of Europe and which gave us the great principles of self-determination of Woodrow Wilson, did not bring to the Macedonian question its deserved political solution. Macedonia, at that time, was waiting day and night to see those principles applied to her people, so that the latter may be able to freely determine their wishes as to the future of their country. But the Treaty of Peace of Neuilly (1919) seconded the grave errors committed by the Treaty of Bucharest.

"It is true that the great victorious powers imposed upon the governments of Serbia and Greece a treaty for the protection of minorities, which was supposed to guarantee the minimum of political, civil and national rights of the Macedonians. This treaty has now become as valueless as a scrap of paper. The Serbian and Greek governments instead of creating a normal regime in Macedonia as soon as they reoccupied the country after the great war closed by force more than 1,400 Bulgaro-Macedonian schools with 80,000 pupils and more than 4,000 teachers, which were devotedly supported and financed by the local population; seized the Macedonian churches, libraries and cultural institutions; burned all Bulgarian books and killed or banished from the country all of the Macedonian intelligentsia. Nor was the fate of our other compatriots, Turks and Rumanians, in Macedonia a better one. The heavy fetters of the Serbian and Greek tyranny are to be found today on the doors of the closed Rumanian and Turkish schools and public libraries in Macedonia.

In addition to this policy of the Serbian and Greek governments, which is directed against the moral and intellectual institutions of the Macedonian people, following the practice of former Turkish governments, they began to use new means and methods in order to artificially change the ethnographic character of the country; they resorted to a policy of colonization. Today Serbian and Greek authorities deport the native Macedonian population, plunder their property and distribute same among colonists brought from Banat and Asia Minor. To have an idea of the terrible picture one must visit the thousands of recently arrived refugees, flying from Macedonia into Bulgaria, a country economically poor, and see their tortured bodies burned with hot irons or boiling oil.

"There are two further reasons which aggravate the situation in Macedonia. First, there is a Serbian and Greek administration, whose officers are alien to the people; notorious corruption and sheer force are the only rules in the country, and it seems that the whip is their constitution. One could find out proofs of this by reading Serbian and Greek newspapers. Secondly, the newly created political frontiers tore away the economic bonds between Macedonian cities and districts. Serbian Macedonia has no sea outlet and is gradually dying. Greek Macedonia has no "hinterland," while the remaining part of Macedonia—under Bulgarian authority—has neither sea nor any convenient land communications with the interior of that country, and for this reason, is in a worse condition. The principal economical and political center in Macedonia is Saloniki, which has all the advantages of prosperity, yet at present the city gradually, but certainly, is dying. Her people do not see any more the steaming boats, the commerce is dead and the merchants are leaving the town. Pathras and Pereas are rising on her ruins. Bitolia, Prilep, Ochrid and many other towns are sharing the same fate.

"Under such heavy conditions could the Macedonian people remain quiet? With their country torn into pieces could they forget the thousands of lives sacrificed for the liberty and independence of Macedonia, ever since the days of the Turkish regime? Who could deny the right of the Macedonian to struggle for existence? Who could forbid the Macedonians the fruit of their labors so that the latter may not be plundered by Serbian and Greek authorities and the Macedonian girls and brides may not be insulted by the same?

"And the Macedonian did exactly as an American, Frenchman or an Englishman would have done. The whole people were frightened by the terror of the new tyranny and rose up to protest.

"Banished from their own country, the Macedonians found refuge in Bulgaria, America, Turkey and Rumania, where they formed strong organizations whose aim is by legal means to obtain liberty for their country. The Macedonian emigrants in all lands, who number more than half a million souls, proclaimed their faith in the traditions of past generations and now appeal continuously to the human conscience of the civilized people in the world for the creation of Macedonia into a free country.

Old Revolutionary System.

"Meanwhile in Macedonia proper, after denying the people all rights of carrying a legal political struggle or forming a national political group in the parliament of Belgrade and Athens, they resorted to the only possible action by creating anew the old secret revolutionary organization with its own postal service, courts, militia and efficiently armed military forces, with its own educational and economic policy—in other words, representing a true state organization, mysterious, yet powerful and democratic in spirit, whose ideals are the creation of an independent Macedonia with equal rights for all of her different nationalities, with Saloniki as her capital.

"The Macedonians are neither brigands nor breakers of the laws governing public order and safety, when they are ready to sacrifice their lives for the triumph of their ideals, when they gladly go to die in order to defend their wives and children, when they calmly meet death in order to save Macedonia. And in their struggle for right and freedom the Macedonians hope that they may receive the support of all civilized nations and all liberty-loving people."

Court Bars Girls Wearing Knickers

Chattanooga, Tenn.—The police matron of Chattanooga has decreed that girls must appear before his honor, the city judge, when arraigned, in proper female attire and the objection to this rule by two girls from St. Louis, aged nineteen years, who are on a tour through the country, was the basis of a pretty lively row in the matron's office. The girls wore boys' caps and shirts and knickers and it was this dress the matron objected to.

Before court the matron insisted that the girls wear skirts before they faced the judge. They refused pointblank. The matron borrowed two skirts from the Associated Charities. In spite of the girls' objections their trousers were removed with the assistance of the police department and they were brought into court attired in dresses and fined $5.

The same question has arisen before in this city court and the officers of the charities have appropriated two skirts from their supply of old clothes, so that in future all women arrested in knickers can be brought into court in feminine attire.

EXPLORERS SEEK HARDY PLANTS IN NORTH CHINA

Department of Agriculture Men Hope to Find Many Valuable Strains of Cereals There.

Washington.—To seek new plants for cultivation in this country, P. H. Dorsett, for 25 years with the office of foreign seed and plant introduction of the United States Department of Agriculure, and his son, J. H. Dorsett, left this country recently for Shanghai, where they will begin a three-year plant exploration trip in China. Mr. Dorsett is a well-known scientist and was one of the foundation builders of the bureau of plant industry.

In the course of a long stay in northern China the two investigators will search particularly for hardy plants for cultivation in this country's northern Great Plains region. The work will differ from ordinary plant exploration, it is explained, in that instead of traveling widely the scientists will concentrate on a small area and study intensively the more important crop plants there. Other investigators in China have shown that there are in the gardens, fields and orchards of that country many varieties of fruits, vegetables and field crops still unknown and which may prove valuable in this country.

"Many interesting strains of wheat, barley and other cereals are known to exist in Manchuria and northern China," says the department. "Some of these are likely to prove of great value in the United States. Soy beans, rapidly becoming an important crop in this country, are extensively cultivated in northern China, and many varieties will be introduced for trial. Hardy forage crops likely to prove of value in the Great Plains region also will be secured. The Dorsetts will search for these plants and will send roots, cuttings or seeds for propagation and trial in department gardens.

"The department has in mind hardy Chinese bush cherries, which preliminary investigations have shown to be adapted as far north as Mandan, N. D., and whose fruit is similar to the sour cherry of this country and used in the same way. Attempts will be made to find superior varieties of blight-resistant Chinese chestnuts, which the gradual destruction of the chestnuts of this country by blight has rendered important to secure.

"Attention also will be given to the introduction of hardy shade and windbreak trees able to withstand the severity of the winters of the northern Great Plains region. It is probable that Manchuria may furnish many such trees. For the Western states the explorers expect to obtain superior varieties of Japanese persimmons and of the Chinese jujube. Other Chinese fruits of probable value for which they will search are peaches, pears, apricots and plums, all of which exist in wide variety. Many varieties of these fruits are now being grown here, but large numbers of them are yet to be tested."

Horse Population Decreases

Startling figures showing the decrease in the number of horses in the United States have been given out by the National Horseshoers' Protective association. This decrease has run from 53 to 75 per cent in the last ten years and there was a falling off of more than 200,000 head in 1923 alone, when the horse population was put at 18,853,000 against 19,099,000 in 1922. In ten years the decrease of 55 per cent in Chicago and of 53 per cent in Baltimore has been slower than in any of the other large cities.

Antelope Disappearing

Antelopes, the graceful, shy little animals whose tender flesh used to delight the early settlers of the prairies and large herds of which once grazed on the site of Saskatoon, Sask., are doomed to early extinction, in the opinion of Fred Bradshaw, chief game guardian of Saskatchewan. He states in his annual report that only 250 head are left.

One day Catherine de' Medici, then the dauphine, brought her two young children, the future Francis II and the Queen of Navarre, to their grandfather, FrancisI, who was confined to his bed in what proved to be his last illness. One object of the visit was to let them see a great painting of Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden, by Titian which had recently arrived from Florence, a present to the French monarch from the Duke of Tuscany, Catherine's father.

This noble work had aroused much interest at court, but very few had seen it, for the old king, who was a great great lover and patron of arts, was greatly pleased with his gift and had caused it to be hung in his bedroom. But thec hildren had heard some of the discussion and had begged to have a look at it. Aftthey had greated their grandfather the mother turned them to the picture.

"Yon want to see Adam and Eve who are our first parents." she said "Wellfi there they are.'

Thec hildren, hand in hand ,stood for some time in silence before the masterpiece. Finally Francis nudged his sister.

"And which is Adam?" he whispered.

"I can't tell," she replied. "They haven't got their clothes on."

THE GIRL WAS MODERN

Today I fired my angry niece from this my poor abode; I placed her bird cage and valise and sunshade in the road. "You are too modern," I exclaimed, "we never could agree; you may be right, but I'll be blamed if you can live with me. You serve on juries in the courts, and think it not amiss; but I am of the old line sports who balk at things like this. "And so your baggage I have set outside the garden gate; your shaving kit, you ciragettes, your sport togs in a crate." My niece, she listened, not agagt, but with a heartless grin, "You represent." she said, "a past that is too deal to skin."—Walt Mason, in The Ohio Sate Journal.

BRITT MAN STRUCK BY LIGHTNING AT STATE FAIR

Ole G. Peterson, of Britt, Iowa and James Ralston, of Keota, Iowa, no longer wonder what a man thinks about just after he has been struck by lightning.

They tried it yesterday afternoon when things were quiet around the fair grounds and they have concluded that the victim doesn't think anything.

Peterson nl Ralston are ticket takers for the fair association. While they sat peaceably on the running board of a car a bolt of lightning struck a tree over their heads split off a large strip of bark and wood, tore a hole in the car top and pitched them both into a row of tent stakes.

Both arose a jiffy later, rubbing their legs and asked what had happened. Ralston rubbed both thighs as he reluctantly agreed to sit in the same place while a picture was taken. Mr. Peterson rubbed only one.

"Didn't it hit you in the other leg?" he was asked.

"I suppose so," he angwered, "but you see that is artificial and thank heaven I have one leg to stand on while I rub the other."—Des Moines Regigter.

THE BEAUTY OF IOWA

Travelors have their own ideas of scenic beauty. Not all of them agree. Some prefer rugged grandeur as the mountain and waterfall and tortuos bypaths. Others are pleased by sharp contrasts. And still others arec harmed by a gentler beauty. one that combines the distance and expansiveness and utility, such for example, as may be found in rural Iowa. For, after all, may not the poetry of nature express itself best in what it contributes both the the joy and sustenance of man?

One may stop on a highway just a few miles beyond the city limits and see enough square miles of cultivated land to fancy that one is looking at an empire. If one be fortunate enough to find a road that climbs a vantage point of elevation, one may see a vast expanse in every direction, field on field of growing crops. For miles the patchwork lies in varying shapes and colors. There are golds and greens of various shades with here and there the silver of a river, lake or pond. Trees dot the landscape only occasionally and there a domicile may be found. For the most part, however, the great denesne of billowing terrain is performing a service to humaity, the first that it demands, it is providing food.

The motor car helps somewhat in visualizing the beauty of Iowa's rural sections, the wonderful farm lands. One might see it to a better advantage from a great height as from an airship, and yet one may stand on the ground itself nd see enough to be thankful that it is all there to be seen and used and enjoyed. One who had seen many states that boast of their beauty and who was new to Iowa was heard to say when viewing such a landscape: 'Oh but God was certainly good to Iowa.'

We also claim the right to have Such methods are not only un-

m the real vital issue.

Foreign language, which should

Any one possessed with such Imperialistic tendencies and who would get himself up as a god having the keys to Heaven and Hell and his ecentric ideas proclaimed as a law by which all people must be gov erned, should be retired from public service or given a free pass to Mexico or South America where the people are 90 per cent illiterate and his ambitions would neither be ques tioned or denied.

A QUICK "PICK-UP"

Everybody likes an automibile with a quick "pick-up" and everyone will take his business depressions the same way.

The rapid recovery that American business is making from the latest dive into the depths is the marvel of the economicsts.

The majority of them just naturally could not see how the country could "come out of it" until after the election.

But now most of them are joining the "I told you so" chorus because peopue are showing increasing confidence and optimism.

"You can't keep the United Statts down very long" says a well known "business doctor," but this phrase expregses nothing new.

The swing of the pendulum from the high tide of prosperity to the low tide of depression and back again is gecoming shorter and shorter, because people are gradually learning that over-expansion always has its reaction.

They also know that it is to their own best interests to attemp to bring about a better adjustment of all their activities to their needs, to the end that so-called hard times will be forever removed from the horizon.

The manner in which farming is recovering is the most encouraging sign. Now and then you will hear the question exclaim, "It can't last"

But optimism and confidence in the future is bringing it back and it will remain if faith predominates, good business methods prevail and farmers and all other business men remember that over-doing anything will react unfavorably.—Northwood Anchor.

DIVERSIFIED FARMING VS. ONE CROP GAMBLING

Agricultural Director of the American Bankers Association Tells of Efforts to Solve Farmers' Problems.

One of the leading problems that is confronting many of our states is that of diversified farming, says D. H. Otis, Agricultural Director of the American Bankers' Association.

"During the past year the Agricultural Commission of the association has arranged for conferences in eight of the twelve Federal Reserve districts," he says. "At these conferences we have tried to get in touch with the agricultural needs of the respective regions and advise with the bankers and others interested as to what the banks might do to help in their solution. A resolution adopted in the Fifth District serves as an example of what is needed in many sections:

"'Encouragement of a proper system of diversified farming in which farmers will grow as far as practical all the food and feed crops necessary for feeding the family and livestock of the farm, and to keep on the farms the requisite kinds and amounts of livestock best to meet the economic needs of farming in this district.'

"The conference in the Ninth District emphasized strongly the need of greater diversification. The farmer who raises nothing but wheat is unwise, even foolish. He is one of the worst kinds of gamblers, one who gambles on the weather, on insects, on drought, and various other things that affect the quality of the product. The farmer who raises wheat and along with it the other crops and keeps a reasonable amount of livestock has something to fall back on when wheat is plentiful and cheap. He is not putting all of his eggs in one basket.

Diversification for Contentment

"In many of the states the first step in diversified farming is to get the farmer to raise sufficient livestock to feed his own family. He needs to get a cow, sow and a couple of dozen chickens so that his own needs can be supplied without going into debt at the store. Livestock used to furnish food for the family will frequently consume large amounts of feed that would otherwise go to waste. Livestock enables the family to set a better table and live under more healthful conditions. More work is furnished to the family, making possible larger family income. If the farm family is producing enough to feed itself, there will be much more contentment and much less idle time in which to criticize the government.

"The Agricultural Commission is doing all in its power to encourage a sane system of diversified farming. The subject is being discussed at various conferences, articles and editorials are being published for the purpose of acquainting bankers with the importance of this work.

Bankers Are Assisting

"It is encouraging at these conferences to find that the bankers are incorporating the subject of diversified farming in their program and laying plans in every way possible to carry it out. To this end we have records of a number of banks who are putting up money to their farmers to purchase livestock. They are encouraging boys and girls to go into club work.

"For the coming year we hope to carry on this work in greater detail and as far as possible hold conferences with the officers and members of the agricultural committee in each of the respective states at the Agricultural College. We believe that in co-ordinating this work with the college, we will reap the benefit of team effort. We are pleased with the hearty response we are receiving from the various colleges of agriculture and we believe that the opportunity is great for influencing various communities in better types of farming and in improved methods of business management."

AMERICA LEADS IN SAVING FISH

Congress Considering Problem of Conserving Nation's Salmon Supply in Alaskan Waters.

INDUSTRY IS CO-OPERATING

Greatest Possible Attention Given to Cleanliness and the Comfort of the Men Engaged in Great Fishing Industry.

The United States leads the world in salmon packing. The greatest fishing is done in the waters of the northwestern territory and along the shores of Puget Sound and the Columbia River.

Congress has long wrestled with the problem of conservation of the salmon in Alaskan waters. A bill which probably will be enacted this session, sponsored by Secretary Herbert Hoover of the Department of

Alaska Salmon Leaping Falls

Commerce, is designed to safeguard the Alaska salmon for this and future generations.

When the average housewife takes from the kitchen shelf a can of salmon for luncheon or the evening meal she probably gives little thought to the care that has been taken to insure its delivery to her in perfect condition.

Salmon is the greatest of all food products of the finny tribe. It is literally handled with white gloves and modern machinery from the time it is pulled from the waters of Alaska and other northwestern streams until it finds its way to the market.

According to William Timson, president of the Alaska Packers' Association, the oldest group engaged in the packing of salmon, every possible precaution is taken to insure a wholesome and delicious article of food.

"The salmon canneries of Alaska," said Mr. Timson, "like all other industries which prepare food products, have long recognized the need for employing the most modern methods available. Every leader of the industry takes great pride in arranging for the comfort and happiness of the men who do the actual work. Although our business is a seasonal one, which necessarily involves many troublesome problems, we spend thousands of dollars annually in making living conditions in Alaska the best possible for our workmen.

Cleanliness a Great Factor

"Our association is ever on the alert to avail itself of the most modern methods and machinery. Canneries are kept clean, and every care is taken to see that the highest state of sanitation is reached. We realize the necessity of keeping abreast of the times, and only by the most improved canning methods are we able to retain the confidence that we have long enjoyed from the public.

"The Alaska Packers Association has always been foremost in the industry in recognizing the need for carrying out well-established principles of sanitation. We believe the comfort and happiness of the men whom we employ in our Alaskan canneries is essential if we are to produce an article of food which will continue to meet the approval of the consumer."

Many of the larger canning companies in Alaska pay particular attention to hospital facilities at their canneries. The buildings are up-to-date and fitted with modern equipment. Employees and resident natives alike are treated without charge.

Curious Habits of Salmon

Red salmon are principally caught during three months of the year—June, July and August. Fleets of sailing vessels and other craft leave Pacific Coast ports each spring loaded with men who engage in the salmon fishing in Alaskan waters.

Naturally among the most prolific of the fish family, the salmon may be relied upon to reproduce its kind if given a fair chance, and this both the government officials and packers are determined the salmon shall have. The guardians of the people's interests and far-seeing men of the industry have united in an effort to obtain Federal legislation which will conserve without destroying either the fishing or the fish.

The peregrinations of the salmon after spawning in fresh water streams take them into the broad seas, where they wander about from two to six years. They then start back to their homes. As they return to the spawning areas the salmon are generally caught before they enter the rivers, because by then they have grown into the large, toothsome morsels so much coveted as food. It is said that the fish make a better food product if caught here than they would if caught when they have actually reached the spawning areas.

Four Warren County, Illinois, banks have offered a total of $200 in prizes for the beef cattle club in that county.

STILLE'S IMPLEMENT NEWS

"Good Equipment makes a Good Farmer Better

Let's have some excitement on the farm. Call for a tractor demonstration, they're free and we'd have a lot of fun. Threshing is late and you'll have to rush your plowing, get a McCormick-Deering tractor and pay for it as it makes its own payments.

We sold a "spankin brand new" Waterloo Boy tractor the other day and printed right on the back plate are these words "Do Not Use Cheap Oil." All tractor and motor companies recommend En-Ar-Co as a very good oil.

A few days ago we sold a Crosley radio, one of those new Tridyne 3R3 Receivers, a three tube machine giving the same results as a five tube. You can try one in your own home with out cost.

My fliver had the asthma;
It always coughed up hill.
Sometimes it only hit on three,
Sometimes it just stood still.
I put in some En-Ar-Co Oil,
Four Mosler plugs on top,
And now I need some 4-wheel brakes
To make my Lizzie stop .
If your gang plow looks like a last years straw hat than remember we have some slightly shop worn gangs and sulkeys that we are selling below cost.

You don't spread butter with a fork because you can't do a good job. Treat your fields right, buy a Nisco spreader.

STILL SEEKING RONDOUT LOOT

Government Sleuths Think Millions Are Hidden in Chicago.

Chicago.—Post Office Inspector William F. Fahy—often described as the best known and shrewdest sleuth in the government service—was arrested by Deputy United States Marshal Hal Carr on charges of being the "brains" of the $2,000,000 mail robbery at Rondout, Ill., on the night of June 12.

"Bill" Fahy is the inspector who sent "Big Tim" Murphy and his pals to federal prison for the Dearborn station $380,000 robbery three years ago.

His bonds were fixed at $50,000 and he was locked up in the Kane county jail.

Fahy made a brief statement in which he charged his arrest was due to a "frameup" by criminal enemies and professional rivals. He will be arraigned on September 6.

With William F. Fahy, star postal inspector, lodged in Kane county jail, apparently making no effort to gain his release on $50,000 bonds, imported government sleuths opened a new hunt for the $2,000,000 Rondout mail robbery loot, which they believe is secreted some place in Chicago.

Officials expressed the belief that Fahy and James Murray, West side politician, already under indictment in the case, are the ones in whose hands the big carload of money fell during the panic that ensued after one of the bandits was shot by another during the progress of the robbery.

Safety deposit boxes in downtown banks, to which Fahy is known to have had access were broken open under the direction of Rush Simmons, national chief postal inspector of Washington, who arrived to take charge of the investigation.

It was said that the arrest of two more alleged principals in the robbery is expected momentarily. Chief Clarahan stated, however, that the new suspects are not members of the postal service.

One of the inspectors expressed confidence that Fahy will not try to make his bond.

Three Illinoisans were named—Julius Rosenwald, Bernard A. Eckhart and Raymond Robins, former Roosevelt leader and Bull Moose candidate for United States senator in 1914.

John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers of America, is on the committee.

Among the members are:

EPIDEMIC CAUSES ALARM IN JAPAN

Mysterious Disease Resembles Sleeping Sickness.

Tokyo.—Japan is becoming alarmed at the outbreak of a mysterious epidemic in the middle west districts, of which there have been 2,500 cases in the last fortnight and 900 deaths. It is a form of sleeping sickness, in which the victims, mostly elderly, fall into a doze and cannot be awakened, finally dying.

The percentage of deaths in some localities is 70. Several leading physicians and bacteriologists in Tokyo are touring the affected regions, but are unable to trace the source of the epidemic, but believe it is a form of spinal meningitis.

Zentsuji and Kotohira, towns on Shikoku island, are the main centers where the epidemic appeared first. There were 300 deaths there, and 700 others in an unwakeable sleep. At Okayama, on the main island, there were 315 cases, with 190 deaths. At Tokoshima there were 250 cases, with 160 deaths and 11 recoveries.

New York.—Wilson & Co., Inc., one of the four largest packing concerns in the world, passed formally into the control of Julius M. Mayer, Thomas E. Wilson and Robert C. Morrell, who were appointed receivers by Judge Bondy in the United States District court.

This action, it is asserted, makes possible the working out of an orderly and equitable recapitalization, as these receivers were selected by the company and its bankers and creditors as best able to direct its affairs until the refinancing can be consummated. The way is clear for the final rehabilitation of this big packing house, which at one time was on the verge of bankruptcy.

John W. Davis Brings K. K. K. Issue to Fore

Seagirt, N. J.—The Ku Klux klan was denounced by John W. Davis, the Democratic Presidential candidate.

Premier Herriot Wins Overwhelming Victory

Paris.—The senate approved Premier Herriot's policy and the Dawes report by 204 votes to 40, thus definitely authorizing France's signature to the accords, which supply the machinery for a reparations settlement.

MRS. FERGUSON WINS IN TEXAS

Democrats Name Wife of Former Governor for Chief Executive.

Dallas, Texas.—Mrs. Miriam Ferguson, the first woman condidate for governor of Texas and wife of James E. Ferguson, former governor, was nominated at the Democratic primary, over Felix Robertson of Dallas. Judge Robertson, Ku Klux klan candidate, telegraphed Mrs. Ferguson at her home at Temple, "I sincerely congratulate you on your victory."

The Texas election bureau tabulation of the vote showed Mrs. Ferguson leading by about 70,000 and more than 725,000 ballots counted. The bureau estimated the total vote would be close to 850,000. Late reports showed it was heavier than at any previous election in Texas.

The latest figures showed, with 130 of the 252 counties heard from, 65 reporting complete, the vote to be, Mrs. Ferguson 401,520, Robertson 323,719.

When told of her victory at her home in Temple, where she is familiarly known as "Ma," Mrs. Ferguson, whose nomination is practically equivalent to election, said:

"There never was any doubt in my mind but that I would win. The people of Texas are tired of klan politics and misrepresentation. It was that issue that gave me the election.

"I am going to give Texas my best efforts to make them a true governor and execute the trust placed in me.

"There are many things to do, but I am going to take the bull by the horns and show the world that a woman can fill the governor's chair with credit to herself and the state."

Four representative models, in the group shown here, reveal the dash and spirit of the new shapes. A high velvet hat appears at the top, with uneven, rolling brim, which is very soft about the face. A large wheel of moire ribbon and a fancy ornament trim it. Another velvet hat appears at the left, with brim turning sharply up at one side. A long velvet ear, fastened with a jeweled ornament adorns it. These velvet hats are made in black and various colors.

Many of the smaller shapes and some of the larger ones are covered with corded silk and this would prove a fine medium for a shape like that at the right. The very tall, upstanding trimming at the front is of velvet fastened with one of the new ivory ornaments. Heavy ribbon is often used for these tall trimmings.

If Alice Should Write Her Memoirs

It is said that society in Washington is talking rather excitedly and a little apprehensively about a rumor that Mrs. Nicholas Longworth is engaged in writing her memoirs. If the daughter of T. R. should tell the story of social and political Washington as she has known it the book would be the best seller for a long time to come. The former Alice Roosevelt has the ability, the sense of humor, the spice of malice and the daring to tell it well. It would be an uncomfortable book for some people, probably; but a mighty interesting one for most. Perhaps Mrs. Longworth remembers the day when all sorts of yarns about her own irrepressible self were being related. She may feel that it is now her turn to get even.

Yes, Alice has plenty of nerve. In the famous 1912 convention she was an interested and most partisan spectator. In that convention, Elihu Root presided and directed the operation of the steamroller. The T. R. supporters greeted each bang of the gavel, each adverse ruling with bitterly derisive cries of "Toot, toot!" Returning to Washington on the same train with the senator, Alice encountered him in the aisle. He stood aside to let her pass, but the daughter of T. R. rose on tip-toe as if to whisper to him. The senator gravely and politely inclined his head toward her; whereupon she "toot-tooted" in his ear.

Soft Words From the "Tiger of Mexico"

Gen. Plutarcho Elias Calles—"Tiger of Mexico"—and its President-elect, is making a trip to Europe before his inauguration. He passed through the United States, from New Orleans to New York, had a consultation with Samuel Gompers and talked more or less for publication. He will spend some time in Paris to enable the women in his party to purchase the latest gowns and hats. His party of nine includes his two daughters, Natalie and Ernestina; his brother, Rodolfo, with his wife and daughters, Lydia; another brother, Arthur.

The general was optimistic about Mexico's future. He said he was one of the first "drys" in Mexico and it was largely through his efforts that Sonora, his state, went dry in 1915. He hoped to see prohibition become effective throughout Mexico and also to see the gambling along the border done away with. Concerning American oil companies operating in Mexico, the General said:

"I am absolutely in favor of oil companies owning property in Mexico, and there will be no disposition on the part of my administration, when it assumes office, to take over the property of any of these corporations. We will welcome American capital as well as other capital in the development of Mexico."

"Mexico," he says," has a special affection for the United States. The two nations should work together in sympathy and harmony. The rule of class and the era of special benefits for special classes is over in Mexico."

Texas Woman's Odd Political Campaign

Politics is a queer game, but it would be hard to find a more picturesque primary campaign than that in Texas, where Mrs. Miriam W. Ferguson ran for the Democratic nomination for governor as a vindication of her husband, James E. Ferguson, the former governor, who was impeached in 1917. Her husband managed her campaign and they spoke from the same platform. Previous to her marriage in 1899 she was Miss Miriam Wallace of Bell county.

Mrs. Ferguson got 140,906 votes and stood second to Felix D. Robertson of Dallas, 186,996 votes. So Mrs. Ferguson apparently earned a place in the run-off primary.

James Edward Ferguson, her husband, has had a varied career. He was born in Bell county, Texas, in 1871, had a district school education and spent two years on the Pacific coast and in Colorado as a laborer, teamster, miner and foreman of railroad construction gangs. Next he was a farmer in Bell county. He was admitted to the Texas bar and practiced in Belton and Temple. Next he organized a bank. Then he entered politics by being elected governor in 1914 on a "business man's ticket."

Earl Sande Says He Will Ride Again

The racing public—and it is a large one—reads every word that is printed concerning the condition of Earl Sande, convalescing in the hospital at Saratoga Springs, N. Y., after his fall at the Saratoga track. Cables from all over the world show the concern felt in this internationally famous jockey of the Rancocas stable. An X-ray photograph showed a broken rib and a leg broken in two places above the knee. It was feared at first that Sande's leg would have to be amputated. Then it was said that he would never be able to ride again. Sande grinned and said he'd "fool 'em all." At this writing there seems no reason why he should not resume his riding, though he has planned because of increasing weight, either to ride abroad or to enter the ranks of the trainers.

Sande, of course, will not be in shape to ride in the international races in the East and Kentucky that center around Epinard, the great French horse, now in training at Saratoga. And that is a pity, because he is probably the best jockey of the day. He rode Zev, it will be remembered, in his victory over Papyrus, the English champion, last fall. This fall he was slated to ride Zev again and Grey Lag. Sande has ridden the winner in every racing classic except the Futurity and his mounts have won more than a million dollars. Sande is twenty-six years old and married.

Just a Little Smile

SHE KNEW DADDY

A small child was having her first ride in a subway train. Suddenly the train passed over some points and the lights went out for a moment.

When they went up again, the little girl said:

"Did you do that, daddy?"

Daddy denied it.

"Well," replied his small daughter, "it's just the sort of thing you would do."—Rehoboth Sunday Herald.

Talk about hard luck! The men at the Creamery had their share of it the past few days just when they were real busy. The old steam boiler must have heard about Labor Day and wanted a lay off as it sprung a leak that developed into a crack and required the services of a boiler maker to fix it up. An engine from a threshing rig was called into service to keep up the supply of steam for power and othtr uses at the butter factory and everything went rosy.

After a man sows his wild oats he expects some woman to help him gather them.

By wearing a pedometer, and Iowa farm woman she usually walked 5 miles each day in preparing meaels for her family of three. With the aid of a member of the cooperative agricultural extension service of this State she studied the placing of her kitchen equipment. After arranging it to meet her particular needs more effectively, her pedometer showed, according to the United States department of agriculure, that the disance she had to walk in preparing one day's meals was but 2.5 miles, exactly half that required before, leaving her, she states, more time to read write and sew.

OLD SETTLER PASSED AWAY SATURDAY

OBITUARY OF MR. AUGUST LAU

Mr. August Carl Lau was born on April 26, 1852, in Meckelburg, Germany.. When he was but four years of age the family came to America and located on a farm near Elkport, Clayton County, Iowa. It was here that the deceased grew to manhood, attending school in season, helping his parents with the farm work that they might build up a home in the country of their adoption, and at times worked as a hired help in the neighborhood.

Mr. Lau was married to Miss Anna Boehm in 1876. Not long after this, or about forty-five years ago, the young couple turned their face toward the west, to the then almost entirely unsettled country of Hancock County. Nothing but vast stretches of prairie greeted their eye wherever they looked. No roads were laid out, no bridges spanned the streams, no advantages that accompany an old settler were theirs. However, a fellowship and friendship and the spirit of hospitality which is rather unknown today, was their heritage in those pioneer days.

They settled on a farm in German Township and lived there for twenty years, in the meantime building up a splendid home.

Upon retiring from the farm Mr. Lau entered business as a grain and stock buyer, which business he persued and later on in company with his son, Walter, until ill health compelled him to retire.

Nine children were born to them: five sons and four daughters. Of these one son and one daughter preceded the father in death. These who with his companion survive the father are: Henry, of Tracy, Minn.; Mrs. F. H. Ridder, of Klemme, Ia.; Mrs. Wesley Schuldt, of Klemme; August, of Mason City, Ia.; Benj., of Minneapolis, Minn.; Miss Minnie, of Klemme and Walter, likewise of Klemme.

Beside these he is survived by fifteen grandchildren and one great-grandchild, as well as by three brothers and two sisters.

Ordinarily Mr. Lau was a man of good hea'th and strong constitution but some time ago it became apparent that the ravage disease of cancer had taken hold of him. When this became apparent there began the waging of a battle on the part of the deceased that is rarely equalled. How he fought to regain his health' Neither money nor effort was spared to attain this, however with no avail until finally he succumbed.

He died on Saturday afternoon, September 6, 1924, at the age of 72 years, 4 months and 11 days.

Funeral services were conducted Tuesday afternoon at one o'clock by Rev. Gauger and Rev. Wessel, at the First Methodist Church. The latter pastor named was a former pastor of Mr. Lau.

Interment was made in the Klemme Cemetery.

Thus we bid farewell to another pioneer who helped to build up this community from the stage of it's infancy. We extend our sympathy to those who have sustained the loss of their beloved one.

OWE OR OWN

I must confess I'd rather dress
In overalls and blouse.
Than run in debt for what I get,
And mortgage shop and house.

I'd rather choose some common shoe
Sufficient old and wide,
To fit my feet, tho not so neat,
Than gratify my pride.

I'd rather strive to keep alive
On good corn bread and beans,
Than live so high on cake and pie,
And go beyond my means.

I'd rather own a hut of stone
Than owe for a mansion grand;
I'd rather pay my honest way,
Than owe for house and land.

I'd rather dwell in a lonely dell,
In a shack my funds can buy,
Than live in style in house of tile,
And owe for living high,
—F. D. E. in Printers Exchange.

Just Suppose

If all that we say
In a single day
With never a word left out,
Were printed each night
In clear black and white,
'Twould prove queer reading, no doubt.

And then just suppose
Ere one's eyes could close,
He must read the day's record through.
Then wouldn't one sigh,
And wouldn't he try
A great deal less talking to do?

And I more than half think
That many a kink
Would be smoother in life's tangled thread,
If one-half that we say
In a single day
Were left forever unsaid.

BULLSNAKE'S BONES MAKE SUP BERB BEADS

RED OAK,— Miss Lillian Snygg Montgomery county school teacher, his discovered the value of the bullsnake. She has manufactured two strings of beads made from the bones of a snake and they surpass the pearl for beauty and art.

Miss Snygg says she got the idea of converting snake bones into neck laces from a story told her some time ago by a Canadian, and that since then she has been on the lookout for a good sized serpent for the purpose of trying out the experiment.

Miss Snygg was motoring. She came upon a four-foot bull snake coiled in the road enjoying the warm rays of Old Sol. With a trusty club she put the reptile to sleep, then severed its head, tossed it into the car and went merrily on home with the desire of trying out the Canadian's idea.

This particular snake's tail ceased wriggling before sundown for the carcass was thrown into a kettle and cooked for an hour. When done them uscles were freed from the long slender backbone and each vertebra became a unit, ready for stringing after it had been soaked in peroxide for two davs to make it glistening white.

Miss Snygg exhibited two strands in Red Oak, strung a-la-snake bones One string was four feet nine inches in length, the other slightly less. In the two beautiful strands displayed Miss Snygg alternated three red beads with a snake vertebra in one necklace and three blue blue beads alternated with a vertebra in the other Artistic, very much so, you declare as you fumble; but of a sudden the shivers run up and down your spinal column when you are told they are snake bones.

She was offered $25 for one string but refused. Serpent necklaces come high.

And no perhaps Dame Fashion will decree that milady will not be well dressed without a serpent's spinal column encircling her dainty neck.

TIMES CELEBRATE TWENTY-NINTH BIRTHDAY

With this issue, Volumne 29, Number 1, The Klemme Times Celebrates another birthday. Looking back over some old file copies we found Volumne 1, Number1, published August 30, 1895. At that time J. R. Cline, Proprietor and Victor H. Barry, Editor, were the men who launched the Klemme Times. Since then there have been a number of Editors. It will be of interest to "Old Timers" to read a few items from that old issue of twenty-nine years ago, and so we publish some of the locals in the first issue asfollows

Wm. Elder spent Sundaywith relatives and friends at Goodell.

Rev. C. Nolte, of Goodell, was a pleasant caller at this office Tuesday morning. Mr. Nolte came up to do a job of paper hanging in town.

Our new school house is rapidly nearing completion and when finished it will be an ornament to the town and one that Klemme may well feel proud of.

Tom Blank of Hayfild has been removed from that place to this as foreman of this section of the Burlington road. He has purchased 2 1-3 acres of land and will erect a house upon the game immediately. We welcome Mr. Blank to our town

It beats all what big yields some of our farmers are getting from their crops this year. We heard a farmer say the other day that his crop of oats turned out 116 bushels to the acre. We fear that when this gentleman comes to sell his grain his 116 bushels to the acre will fall a littl short.

Last week the Goodell Journal changed hands, whereby Louis Griswold, formerly foreman of the Garner Signal, became owner. Lou is a good printr and an all round jolly good fellow and will no doubt give to the people of Goodell a good, live local paper. We wish Bro. G. the best of success.

The Topic joins their many friends in wishing them the best there is in life, long lives, happiness and prosperity.—Titonka Topic.

KLEMME SCHOOL SYSTEM NOW RUNNING SMOOTHLY

Not So Large an Enrollment in High School as Last Year

School has now been in progress nearly two weeks, and by this time nearly all the difficulties have ironed out and everything is progressing quite smoothly. There are still a few difficulties in the course of study, but Professor Neese and Miss McKahan have been doing their best to make every thing as convenient as possible.

We are somewhat surprised to find that the enrollment in high school is smaller than that of last year. It is due partly to a small Freshman class and a great many of last year's Freshmen dropping out. There are only twelve enrolled in the Freshman class this year, compared with twenty-eight last year. Out of the twenty-eight Fresh men enrolled last year, only eighteen of them have enrolled in the Sophomore class. The enrollement for the high school is as followes: Senior, 10; Junior, 17; Sophomore, 18; and Freshman, 12, making a total enrollment of 57.

The course of study offered this year is as follows:

ARBITRATION AS CURB FOR WARS

French President Agrees to Proposal Made by MacDonald.

Geneva.—Rather than risk isolation —with the little entente—Premier Herriot, speaking before the fifth assembly of the League of Nations, abandoned the objectionable military provisions of the proposed mutual assistance pact and fell in with Prime Minister MacDonald's scheme of arbitration to prevent war.

M. Heriott camouflaged his surrender by insisting that "sanctions," which are to be taken against wanton aggression, be studied and outlined by a committee which will handle the matter, but he refrained from demanding any concrete pledges of what military and naval aid would be forthcoming from the fellow members of the league against a proven offender.

The French premier concentrated his efforts on trying to keep the same committee of the league which has spent two years drafting the rejected guarantee pact to devise a new plan conforming with the British viewpoint, which is shared by a majority of the members. But since the personnel of this committee may be changed at will, the result amounts to complete acceptance of Mr. MacDonald's terms and the abandonment of the military alliances hitherto envisaged.

Berlin.—The interallied control commission and the German military authorities agreed that control of German armaments would begin at once, and the government issued a communique appealing to the people to avoid any obstruction of the commission's work, or hostile action which "would involve the danger of perpetuating the present state of affairs with all of its humiliating accompaniments.

BEGINS WARFARE ON KLAN IN WISCONSIN

Governor Suspends Grant County District Attorney.

Madison Wis. — Governor Blaine started an open fight on the Ku Klux klan when he announced an order had been issued to suspend George B. Clementson as district attorney of Grant county. The order was effective September 9, "unless you can show cause why the order should be set aside."

The letter was written as a result of a hooded demonstration at Boscobel three weeks ago and of difficulties at Muscoda, also in Grant county, as a result of which Leo Manning was shot and is in a Madison hospital.

The governor charges that Clementson failed to follow his orders regarding prosecution of those claimed to have been involved in the Boscobel demonstration when a deputy sheriff is said to have been assaulted.

The fourth ordinance annuls the regulation of boat traffic on the Rhine, and the fifth abrogates various provisions regarding the circulation of the emergency paper money in the occupied territory.

Second Hindu God

In Hindu mythology Vishnu is second god of the "trimurti," or trinity, in which he figures as the preserver of the universe, says the Detroit News. His friendship for man was manifested in his avatars, or incarnations, which according to some authorities number 10, and according to others 22. Of these avatars two principal ones were the seventh as Rama, the hero of the Ramayana, and the eighth as Krishna, the hero of the Mahabharata. Vishnu is generally represented as dark-blue man, has four arms, and is worshiped chiefly by the middle classes. He originally figured as a sun-god in the older Vedas, but gradually increased in importance until in the later Puranas became the Supreme Deity.

FATHER AND SON

SYNOPSIS.—Thrown from his auto in a New York village, a man is carried unconscious into the home of a Miss Edith Grant. A doctor discovers he has been shot, fatally. Consciousness returning, he babbles of "millions." He begs that Henry Archman, millionaire resident of the vicinity, be sent for, declaring he has important papers for him. Archman cannot be reached by 'phone, but word is sent that his secretary is on the way. A man announcing himself as Archman's secretary, Akin, arrives, talks with Morbach, and leaves with a package he gives him. Morbach dies. Archman's arrival, with his secretary, reveals that the man posing as Akin is an impostor. Archman denounces Edith Grant as a girl endeavoring to snare his son Harry. Archman, it appears, his millions made in Chicago, has yielded to the importunities of his family—his wife, daughters Nellie and Bessie (seventeen years old), and son Harry—and moved to New York in an endeavor to gain recognition by the Four Hundred. They have not succeeded. Mrs. Archman is bitter over her failure, particularly mourning the fact that she has not been "taken up" by a Mrs. Van Kull.

"Yes; I wanted to see you!" Archman was plainly trying to hold himself in check, and was as plainly failing. "Yes! I wanted to remind you of some things you seem to have forgotten. One of them is that Archman & Company doesn't play favorites. Your job isn't very important, but it's all you've got between you and the sidewalk, and I'd advise you not to throw it away and trust to the old man to play parachute, because he won't. A boy can't fool around theaters half the night and give good work to the house the next day. You've got to cut it out or Archman & Company will cut you out. In other words, it'll fire you."

Harry turned red and white. He tried to say something.

But his father gave him no chance. "That's what I want to say to you as head of the firm," he rasped. "Now I want to add something as your father and not as your employer. I've been hearing tales about you and a so-called actress—"

Harry flushed. "Akin told you, I guess," he gritted. "I heard he's been sneaking around."

"Akin didn't tell me until I asked him. He didn't need to tell me. When a boy with a rich father makes a fool of himself, there are plenty of people to pass the news along. The papers will do it if nobody else. A sort of human tadpole blew into my office today with newspaper proofs of a story about you that he was going to publish unless I paid him a thousand dollars."

"Did you do it?" The boy almost shouted the question.

"I did not. The man who tries to conciliate a polecat always gets the worst of it. The thing to do is to keep away from the place where the polecats are. You haven't done that. This Fluffy Ruffles—"

"Don't say anything against her, father. I warn you!"

"I am not going to say anything against her. She'll say it for herself soon enough. She is making a fool of you for her own ends. But I am not going to argue the point with you. I haven't time and it wouldn't be any use. I learned long ago that there aren't arguments that will reach a fool when he's in love. You'll wake up after a while. In fact, I think the husks are due to sour on your belly mighty soon. If they're still sweet, go on eating them. But you'll have to take the consequences. Cut it out or you'll lose your job! Understand?"

The boy's brief flush of anger had faded. "You're not fair, father," he pleaded. "Miss Grant is a lady. She—Oh! By George! I feel like a cad even to defend her; it seems like admitting that there was some foundation for what you say. She's the best and the dearest and the sweetest girl in the world. She's the prettiest—"

"I don't doubt it. They always are. If they weren't pretty they wouldn't be dangerous. You want to remember that there are lots of ways that a man can commit suicide that are better and more all-round satisfactory than hanging round a—"

"Father!"

"Oh! All right. It's just as well you stopped me. I'm not ready to talk. However, that's enough on that score. Now listen to me. As you know, I am going to start for Argentina in two weeks or less—as soon as the El Rio is ready. I'm not going to ask any promises of you, but I want you to remember that while I'm away you've got your mother and sisters to look after, and that you've got to be decent for their sakes. Understand?"

"Yes."

"That's all. Now come to dinner."

Giving the boy no chance for reply, Archman strode out of the library.

His mind was far from all social matters. Gradually, however, the fact was borne in upon him that his family was discussing them vigorously, probably as a means of getting over the awkwardness that had arisen from Harry's visit to the study. "I've invited Lord George to visit us," was the first thing he heard his wife say. "He has accepted, and will come very soon—perhaps tomorrow."

Mr. Archman waked up abruptly. "What's that?" he snorted.

Mrs. Archman explained. "Perhaps Lord George's visit may help us to make some really worth-while friends."

"Worth-while friends!" Henry Archman laid down his knife and fork and glared at his wife. "Look here!" he said. "I want to understand about this thing. Do you mean to say that you haven't the sort of friends you expected?"

Mrs. Archman shook her head reluctantly. "Not very many of them," she confessed.

Archman pursed up his lips. "Well, after all, why should we?" he rasped. "What have we got to offer them that they want and haven't got already? Why should they call? They'll never let you in. You've got to break in."

Mrs. Archman looked shocked. "Don't speak as if we wanted to force ourselves on people who don't want us, Henry," she said. "We're as good as any of them."

"As good! As good!" The veins came on Archman's temples. "We're a blame sight better. We're the regenerators. We're the modern equivalent of the strong, virile races who were called barbarians by the effeminates they overthrew. We modern invaders come with money and character instead of weapons, but we come all the same. We come from the cattle pens of Chicago and Kansas City, from the steel mills of Pennsylvania, the coal mines of West Virginia, and the oil wells of Texas; the sheep corrals of Wyoming, and the lumber districts of Wisconsin, and we force ourselves into the marts, the churches and the drawing-rooms of the so-called aristocrats. We've got to do it. We're drawn as irresistibly as the tides."

Mrs. Archman tried to break in. "Well, Henry," she began.

But Archman had the floor. "Of course, the East doesn't welcome us," he went on. "We annoy them, and they don't realize that our coming is the only thing that keeps them from petering out. They don't realize that it is the new blood, fresh from the soil, that renews their wornout strength. They objected to us, just as the older peoples objected to the barbarians. We've got to break in just as the barbarians had to. Only we'll do it with dollars instead of with battle-axes. I've got nine million dollars, and nine million dollars can break into New York society just as surely and a good deal more easily than nine million barbarians broke into Rome."

Mrs. Archman shook her head. "Money won't buy everything, Henry," she declared patiently.

Archman snorted. "It won't, eh? Well, show me something it won't buy. If I wasn't going to start for Argentina I'd break a way for you with it in double-quick time. I've got a good mind to do it anyway before I go. By George, I will do it!"

Mrs. Archman shook her head again. "You can't break into society that way, Henry," she insisted. "People here are exclusive. It's hard for any newcomer to get in and"—she hesitated a little—"and you know, Henry, meat is not—er—er—"

Archman's face grew red. "What's the matter with meat?" he roared. "Everybody eats it, don't they? There's money in it, lots of it. And the money don't smell, does it? I'll show you. There's old Van Kull! He owns the Ontario docks here, where my ships have laid for ten years. He's one of the Four Hundred, isn't he?"

"Yes; if his wife would call! But she—"

"But nothing! He knows what Archman & Company stands for. I'll see him tomorrow and you can expect Mrs. Van Kull the next day. No! By George! I won't wait till tomorrow. He lives only a mile or two away. I'll go and see him tonight. I'll go now." Archman swung around in his chair. "Here! James!" he called. "Have my car brought around."

Mrs. Archman protested, but feebly. Archman brushed aside her half-hearted objections, flung down his napkin and hurried to the front door. A moment after the four at the table heard the roar of the engine rise and die away in the distance.

Mrs. Archman shook her head doubtfully as she rose from the table. "Oh! I do hope everything will go well," she murmured.

"Go well!" Bess laughed. "I'll bet it'll go well. It's a new role for pops, but I'll bet he wins out. Now he's started he'll never stop till he corners the social market and undersells all competitors. You wait and see. But, say—" she turned to Harry—"what was it all about, Harry? What had you been up to 'Fess up!"

Harry, however, had risen from the table and was hurrying toward the door. "Nothing!" he called, over his shoulder, as he vanished.

"Nothing! That's just like a boy. Never mind! I'll get it out of him sooner or later. Come on, mumsy! I'll play you some ragtime." Sweeping her mother and sister before her, Bess rushed to the parlor, plumped herself down on the piano stool and plunged into the strains of "Get Out and Get Under."

"I'm referring to Mr. Van Kull when he sees dad coming," she shot over her shoulder.

Ten minutes later she ended with a crash of chords as Mr. Akin appeared in the door with inquiry on his face.

Mr. Akin was of the type that appears to have never been young and looks unlikely ever to become really old. His eyes were shifty, always avoiding those of others.

"Is Mr. Archman here?" he asked. "Some one wants to speak to him on the telephone. They are very insistent."

Bess shook her head. "Gone out!" she declared. "Tell 'em to call again."

Mr. Akin hesitated. "They are very insistent," he demurred. "There has been an accident of some sort. Somebody has been badly hurt and is dying, and wants to deliver a message to Mr. Archman; an extremely important message, the voice said."

"Father's gone to Mr. Van Kull's," explained Bess. "You might call him up there. Perhaps Harry— But, no, Harry is out of reach, too. Here! I'll come talk."

Without waiting for either objection or approval, Bess ran up the stairs to the office and picked up the telephone. A short conversation followed. At last she hung up the telephone and turned to Akin, who had stood patiently waiting.

"Mr. Akin," she ordered crisply, "please go out at once to the cottage of Miss Edith Grant, on the Hudson River road at Curwen station, and take the message Mr. Morbach has brought. I'll try to get father at Mr. Van Kull's and rush him after you."

But Nellie broke in. "No!" she said decisively. "I'll go to Miss Grant's. Mr. Akin can go to Mr. Van Kull's and bring father after me." She turned away as if the matter were settled. "Bring my electric around, James," she ordered.

No one hesitated. When Nellie gave orders she was imperious. Even Bess yielded to her without protest.

So now we have the Archmans—evidently good material for lively happenings. What next?

She Distrusted Real Motive of Boy's Visit

In the family that had moved next door to the Smiths was a boy about seven years old. The Smiths had a little girl, Virginia, just the same age. Everyone expected the two children to become playmates at once, but almost a week passed before they noticed each other. Then the boy came over to play with Virginia. Virginia, however, immediately went into the house.

"Why, what's the matter, Virginia?" her mother asked. "I thought you had been wanting to play with the new boy."

"Well, I did at first," Virginia admitted, "but I don't care so much about it now, at least, not today."

"Why don't you want to play with him?" mother asked.

"Oh, mamma!" Virginia exclaimed. "He's had a whole week to come over here and hasn't done it. Now I've got a nickel to spend for candy and I don't care whether he comes or not!"—Exchange.

IOWA LEGION MAN DRAWS PROMOTION

Outstanding work as commander of Monahan post of the American Legion at Sioux City, Iowa, in 1923, when that post shattered all membership records and became the second largest post in the world, won for Horace F. Wulf the commandership of the Eleventh Congressional district of the Iowa department. Wulf has just been advanced to the district commandership from the vice commandership. His predecessor, O. P. Bennet, resigned to make the race for county attorney of Monona county, Iowa.

The new district commander has been very active in the work of the Legion ever since his discharge from Camp Hospital No. 6 on July 15, 1919.

Horace F. Wulf.

He became sergeant at arms of Monahan post, the editor of the Monahan Post News, then post commander. During his term of office as commander, the post signed up 2,042 members.

Wulf saw 17 months of army service. Eight of these he spent in training at Camp Cody, New Mexico, where he was with the Thirty-fourth or Sandstorm division. He served overseas for nine months.

Born and reared in Sioux City, Wulf is a graduate of Morningside college. He is engaged in newspaper work in that city.

Scalpers Will Lose Out in Endeavor to Profit

After the passage of the adjusted compensation bill recently, came rumors that "scalpers" were attempting to buy up for cash at large discounts the adjusted compensation certificates of World war veterans. Such "purchases" by scalpers will be met by drastic action on the part of the veterans' bureau, and will result in the scalper finding himself with only "a scrap of paper," was the declaration of Gen. Frank Hines, director of the veterans' bureau, to representatives of the American Legion.

Attention of the veterans' bureau was called to an advertisement in which a veteran offered to sell his certificate "to the highest cash bidder." Bureau officials were also advised of reports that a huge financial pool is being organized for the purpose of buying up compensation certificates in the hope of large profits at the expense of the veteran and of the government.

In reply to the above reports, the following telegram was sent by General Hines: "No certificate issued or right conferred under the World war compensation act shall be negotiable or assignable; neither will such certificate or any right conferred serve as security for any loan except as provided in section 502 of the act, which provides for loans from banks under certain conditions. Any other negotiations or assignments are void."

Legion Home Company, New Ohio Institution

The American Legion Home company, of Conneaut, Ohio, was recently incorporated at Conneaut, under the state laws of Ohio and received its charter in which the following provisions were included: "This corporation is formed for the purpose of promoting, assisting and fostering civic organizations, for the support and advancement of patriotic principles through local and community groups and societies organized for charity, education and recreation." According to a Legion official, the company has $11,000 with which to start the ball rolling on its Community Betterment campaign.

Soldier Peddler Law Is Regarded as Unfair

The so-called "soldier peddlers' law" in effect in the state of Minnesota should be repealed, according to a resolution passed by the state legislative committee of the American Legion of Minnesota. The law enables former service men to peddle without a license. The Legion points out that under the law many outsiders have come into the state at various times and competed with local merchants who are paying taxes and who are deserving of the patronage of the consumer. The Legion legislative body also suggested that a law prohibiting aliens from teaching in the grade schools be passed.

Camping by Automobile

Probably the most remarkable thing about a camping trip in a motorcar is that, although such a trip is quite practical, there are still many motorists who do not know what camping and vacationing means. It is not a rich man's game. Anyone with a car of moderate power can strike out and live by the wayside absolutely independent of hotel or village. It is the best kind of a vacation, and the expense will be practically the cost of gasoline, bacon, cornmeal and a few other things, which includes the equipment necessary for cooking and sleeping.—Automobile Digest.

CONTRARINESS

I did not c are for c ustard pie, to any great extent; this luxury might pass me by, and I'd raise no lament. I saw it on the bill of fare where to I chanced to eat, but for that dish I didn't care, to me it was no treat. I wondered oft how other guys could eat it every day, for there were nobler, grander pies, in every good cafe. Then by diseases I was wrung, with symptons fierce and vile, the doctor came and eyed my tongue, and felt my pulse a while. "You are," he said, "in parlous case, to diet will be wise; whate'er you do don't feed your face with any custard pies. Of other pies I speak no ill, but custard pies are banned; so take this large, three cornered pill composed of glue and sand." No sooner was the doctor gone than I began to sigh, and kept on sighing till the dawn, for the verboten pie. With luscious jam ann chicken soup kind neighbors round me thronged, but for such things I cared no whoop —for custard pie I longed. My neighbors climb the picket fence to reach my stricken home, they bring me myrrh and frankencense, and honey from the comb; they'd stir my jaded appetite with rich and costly things, canaries' livers fried just right and boiled mosquitoes' wings; they bring me peppers stuffed in Spain and pickled dragon's eyes, and I rise on my couch of pain and cry for custard pies.— Walt Mason.

THE FARMER'S "FULL DAY"

(Original poem read by "Bill" Cunningham in Hayes township, Ida county, Iowa.)

Down on the farm 'bout half past four.
I slip on my clothes and sneak out the door,
Out to the yard I run like the dickens,
To milk ten cows and feed the chickens,
Clean out the barn, curry Nance and Jiggs,
Separate the cream and slop all the pigs,
Work two hours, then eat like a Turk,
And by heck, I'm ready for a full day's work.

Then I grease the wagon and put on the rack,
Throw a jug of water in an old grain sack,
Hitch up the horses hustle down the lane,
Must get in the hay for it looks like rain.
But look over yonder, sure as I am born,
Cattle's on the rampage, cows are in the corn;
Start across the medder, run a mile or two,
Heavin' like I'm windbroke and get wet clean through.
With my joints all squeaking and muscles in a jerk,
I m fit as a fiddler for a full day's work.

Soon get to pitchin5 the hay on the rack,
Lightnin' gets to flashing, thunder gives a crack;
Clouds roll up, black across the dell
Starts in raining, and rains like— well,
I don't care, don't even frown,
Rest fixing fence while the rain comes down,
Just get to resting, then for recompense;
Nance got straddle the barbed wire fence;
Clothes all wet, so slip off my shirt,
And by heck, I'm ready for a full day's work.

Work all summer 'till the winter is nigh,
Then I figure up the books and heave a sigh,
Worked all year, didn't make a thing
And I've got less money than I had last spring.
Now some people say that there ain't no hell,
But they never farmed, so they can't tell.
When the spring rolls 'round I'll take another chance,
While the fringe grows longer on my pants.
Give my 'spenders a hitch, belt another jerk,
And by heck, I'm ready for a full year's work.

WHAT'S THE FARE

A cable from Rome says that Italian producers have so much wine on hand, and are so short of casks in which to store it that they now charge only five cents for the privelodge of entering their cellars and drinking as much wine as desired. The present supply on hand is estimated at 52,000,000 retrolliters. A hetroliter is about 26½ gallons.

YOUNG MEN OF PAST AND THE YOUTHS OF TODAY

A few days ago in speaking before the Rotary Club of Algona, J. W. Sullivan, the widely known and successful lawyer of that place said:

"I was about to give old and failing memory, as an excuse, but I am reminded by everyday experience that in these times youth more than old oge seems subject to memory lapses, thoughtlessnegs, and in difference in keeping appointments and business obligations.

Young Men of Past

"It seems but a short time ago that most if not all great achievements were accompolished by young men. Webster was but a boy when he made that masterful speech in reply to Hayne. Jefferson was at the age of the present college youth when he wrote that famous immortal document, the Declaration of Independence, the textbook of all patriots. Byran was but a beardless youth when he secured the nomination for the presidency from one of the greatest political parties by his speech on the 'cross of gold' and 'crown of thorns.' Patrick Henry was only a "kid" when he fired the whole world with, 'Caesar had his Brutus, Charles the First his Cromwell, and George II—may profit by their example!'. .

"I might go on to point out without end the achievements of young men of the past so outstanling that the achievements of older men were overshadowed. In fact, old age once seemingly became so valueless that an eminent surgeon advocated that all men be chloroformed when they reached sixty.

Times Have Changed

"Today, however, things are changed. Youth is not keeping up with the procession—not even making a respectable showing in the affairs of the world. Can any reader call t mind any young man now an outstanding figure in the nation or in the world affairs? View for a moment the members of our present congress, and you will observe that outside of Smoot, Undtrwood, Lodge and a few others tottering with age, you cannot recall one who receives mention outside the papers of his own district unlegs in connection of some questionable escapade. Compare the members from Iowa with those of even 20 years ago, and you will be obligtd to throw up our hand in despair. ?

"There must be some reason for this decadence, and it should be the determined effort of all clubs, civic societies and private persons to find the reason and endeavor to correct the stuation.

"Were I asked to say what I thot the reason is, Ishould be obliged from my present information to say it is largely idleness and luxurious living, with their trial of evil tendencies in youth. 'An idle brain is the Devil's workshop is as true now as when it was first uttered.

Youth of Today Scored

"The average high school youth of the present days seems to have no care or responsibility. He makes his home a place simply to sleep, eat, and procure funds for dances, week-end parties, and "petting" partie. Then to college he goes to join some fraternity, where mone counts more than brains. During his college he devotes the greater part of his time to social affairs and instead of acquiring an education, as we old 'discards' understand the term, follows the line of least resistance, finally, if indeed he makes his grade, emerging from school merely an educated fop.

"There are, of course, a great many exceptions to this rule, but the rule is supported by alas too many of our young men, who, if properly trained, would be a credit to themgelves, to their parents, and to the college that sends them forth Is it ny wonder that a youth, brot up in such an atmosphere, leaving college with neither knowltdge or teh inclination to work, when he is thrown on his own resources tries to find an occupation in which he can pick up some easy money, even stopping to become a lecturer or organizer for the most un-American un-Christian organization that ever disgraced the land?"—Titonka Topic.

PROHIBITION IS SOUND

Sac City Sun— Much that is printed about prohibition, both for and against, is an appeal to prejudice. Therefore, it is refreshing to hear the reasoned opinion of an authority in economics and sociology who is neither a fanatic against liquor ot a lover of the bottle. Professor Thomas N. Carver, of Harvard, has just published a treatise, entitled "The Greatest Social Experiment of Modern Times." In demonstrating his belief that prohibition is econom ically sound and should be maintained, he writes as follows:

"It is safe to say that, other things being equal, the nation that makes the greatest economy of its human resources — that is, that wastes the smallest proportion of its manpower or that economizes and directs its manpower most economically—will outgrow in numbers, prosperity and general strength the nation that does the opposite.

"So long as all the rival nations are wasting resources and manpower in drink there may be no differential advantages in favor of any one or against any one of the others but when one nation, such as the United States, makes a definite advance in this form of economy, unless it indulges in some folly that will neutralize the advantages has gained there is no reason to doubt that it will gain on all others, year by year, decade by decade and century by century, and eventually dominate the civilization of the world. They who refuse to take this great step forward in the economy of human resources whether they understand it or no, are definately choosing to occupy a secondary position in the civilized world.

"If a prohibition law were not difficult to enforce, there would be no strong reason for having such a law —that is to say, if it were not difficult to nforce i, it would argue there was no strong desire to drink liquor.

NEW SEED IS BEST

Churchill Advises Picking Seed Corn Before Frost Gets in its Work This Fall

Next year something over two million bushels of seed corn will be required to plant the acreage devoted to corn in Iowa. According to F. G. Churchill, farm crops specialist, Iowa State College, there is very little old seed corn available and most of the 1923 crib corn is not guitable for seed purposes. In fact taking one year with another, it is bttter to use new seed corn if good seed can possibly be secured.

Corn, when it has reached the early dent stage, can be saved for seed purposes. Corn picked at this stage must be cartfully dried and protected from any severe freezes until it has become thoroly dry. In practically every locality fields can be found where seed corn can be picked satisfactorily. These fields should be located and seed secured from them.

Very careful watch should be kept of the condition of the corn in the field and of the local weather conditions. As soon as there appears to be danger of frost enough seed to plant the required acreage should be selected. If there is no freezing weather for some time, it may be advisable to make another selection of the corn after it has become more mature.

The all important thing is to remember that the early selected corn when properly taken care of, will give a much better stand than corn is allowed to be injurred by frost, or by th old corn that is not of good quality.

If the women ever should take it into their heads that they really want to vote, there will be a lot of political loafers looking for jobs.

When Winter Comes---

Nowadays it is not necessary to "put up the car for the winter." Modern automobile equipment, accessories and mechanical perfection make it unnecessary to deprive yourself of one day's use of your car. But Winter Driving puts a severe test upon any automobile. Due to dangers of over-heating, battery trouble, faulty valves, and carburetion a careful inspection by us before the cold weather sets in and overhauling after the long season of summer driving, will put your car in shape for the cold months. This will enable us to accommodate all visitors that wish to attend the Sunday and evening services.

IOWA LEADS IN T. B. WORK

Almost as Many Cattle Being Tested in One Month as in U. S. Six Years Ago.

Iowa is far away in the lead among all other states in the number of cattle being tested for tuberculosis, with Wisconsin second in the list The remarkable increase in the number of cattle tested since 1918 is the subject of a chart prepared by th Bureau of Animal Husbandry, United States Department of Agriculture. During the year 1918 federal and state veterinarians in the United States made official tests of 134,143 cattle under the uniform plan for tuberculosis eradication. Iowa, during the first six months of 1924 tested 384,453 cattle, or almost thre times as many as the entire United States did in 1918.

Last year the entire United States tested a total of 3,460,849 cattle or nearly 30 times as many as were tested in 1918. Iowa in the month of June, 1924 tested 93,264 cattle. Among he 384,453 head tested during th first six months of 1924 there were represented 27,451 herds thus showing the widespread distribution of the testing work.

Winnebago county is the first Iowa county to be put on the accredited list because of the number of cows tested. As a result the hog raisers are receiving a bonus of 10 cents per hundred pounds of their hogs becaus of the eradication of tuberculosis among cattle.

FRIEND BETTER THAN ENEMY

Fact That Man Who Would Make Way Up the Ladder of Success Should Remember.

The ideal is very often at sharp variance with the actual. In other words, "what ought to be" is kept out of its place by "what is." Merit ought to be the sole test for promotion. In practice, however, merit plus influence is what pushes a man or woman up the ladder of success, says a writer for London Answers.

Certain sorts of "influence" must, of course, be condemned; but there is nothing wrong in cultivating and—at the proper moment—calling on a right "influence" to be exerted. This is really but an additional testimonial, personally presented on your behalf. And it rarely fails! Where merit, minus "influence," goes unrewarded, or has to wait, merit plus influence gets its reward, and quickly.

How can you command "influence"? Not by fawning yourself into favor! Some do it, but it is lowering, and deteriorates character. The secret is to impress your personality on those who have influence. Some men who have merit and efficiency have no personality. They don't impress; they are somewhat dull.

Without being disagreeable, they cannot impress others as being bright, amiable, agreeable, charming. They tread the beaten path, and don't go out of their way to show that they have a personality. They would take an opportunity that came to them; but they do not see that to command influence they must make opportunities to cultivate it, so that ultimately it can be used to help them.

Cynics would say that there is little or no gratitude in the world. They are wrong. There is much! Do good, and gratitude is not always ended with a "thank you." The payment is made by "influence" later on.

That holds the moral that one should never make an enemy, but should cultivate friendships.

Your friend X. may have no influence himself, but his friend Y, has a friend Z. The latter has "influence," and to oblige Y., who wishes to oblige X., who wishes to help you, that influence is yours. The word in season is spoken, and up you go!

The first is to develop your personality, so that you stand out distinctly from the crowd; the second is to cultivate friendships. Thus you influence others, and they will use their "influence" for you.

You may have to ask for it, but, is that to be condemned? You are but asking that your merit should have its due reward.

Moving Day in Northern Virginia.

Among the volunteers who fought in the first battle of Bull Run was John A. Logan, then a member of congress from Illinois and later a major general and a senator from Illinois. As soon as General Logan saw that there was going to be some actual fighting near Washington he left the capital, got hold of a musket and walked all the way to Bull Run. There he joined Colonel Richardson's regiment and though he was in ordinary dress stood his ground as valiantly as anyone—and longer than most. In the end, however, there was nothing for him to do except to join the retreat. He found himself back in Washington the next morning.

Going up to the capitol, he was soon surrounded by a score or two of congressmen to whom he was describing incidents of the battle and of the rout.

"Who told you about all this?" asked one congressman who had come up too late to hear the beginning of Logan's story.

"Why, I was there myself," was the reply.

"You were there?" exclaimed the congressman. "Why, were the cars running out that way?"

"No," said Logan with a grim smile. "The cars were not running, but everything else in my vicinity was."—Youth's Companion.

Old Southern Hospitality.

In 1852 my father left Bavaria for America. "Go south," was the recommendation. Acting on this suggestion, he went to Oglethorpe, Ga. Through acquaintances he made a connection with two brothers, Kaufman, who plied the peddlers' trade. They owned a peddlers' wagon, with which they dispensed through the several counties of the state an assortment of dry goods and what were known as Yankee notions.

It was not like the peddling of today. Because of slavery there were on the large plantations often more colored people than there were whites living in the near-by villages. The itinerant merchant, therefore, filled a real want, and his vocation was looked upon as quite dignified. Provided only, therefore, that the peddler proved himself an honorable, upright man who conscientiously treated his customers with fairness and made no misrepresentations regarding his wares, he was treated as an honored guest by the plantation owners—certainly a spirit of true democracy.—Oscar S. Straus, in the Outlook.

Uninjured.

The toughest customer in Bloody Gulch had been hurled from an automobile into a ditch and lay unconscious for a couple of hours. He came to life to find the face of a friend bending anxiously over him.

"Are you hurt, old man?" gasped the friend.

"Not a bit," replied the hardy guy, "only a little spill. But say, Bill, will you help me pull this bone back into my sleeve?"—American Legion Weekly.

Wild Animals Costly.

Menageries are not in much demand in Germany, though the collection of wild animals founded by the late Carl Hagenbeck at Stellingen, near Hamburg, is still supplying the world with specimens. John Hagenbeck, brother of the founder of the Hamburg collection, has recently stocked zoological gardens at Chicago and St. Louis. British and Americans had control of the wild animal business during the World war, but now German hunters are again at work in Rhodesia, South Africa; Portuguese, East Africa, and the Belgian Congo. Hagenbeck employs Dutchmen in India, and intends to lead an expedition himself in that wide territory before long. He introduced lions from Africa into the state of Gwalior, at the request of the maharajah. Prices are at top-notch, says Hagenbeck, and a good lion fetches $1,250. An elephant is worth from $1,500 to $2,500, a boa constrictor cannot be bought for much less than $500, a giraffe brings $5,000, and a hippopotamus from $2,500 to $5,000.

Would Be Popular Today.

This is from a French manual for the guidance of youth, first published in 1713, which ran through 50 editions In the course of the Eighteenth century. "For the sake of cleanliness it is well to rub the face every morning with a white towel in order to remove the dirt. It is not advisable to wash with water, for this exposes the face to the chills of winter and the heats of summer." A similar work, published in 1667, warns children that "to wash the face in water injures the eyesight, brings on toothaches and colds and engenders pallor."

Explorers Find Race of Gigantic Indians

Huge seven-foot Indians, dominated by half-mad fanatic witch-doctors, were discovered on the Goagiro peninsula, South America, by the Capt. Marshall Field Expedition of the Field Museum of Natural History of Chicago. After weeks of elaborate preparations and visits by a native guide, the expedition waited outside the camp three hours before gifts of knives, straw hats, beads and shiny objects won the confidence and good will of these headhunters. The women of the tribe refused to pose for a photograph.

Prominent People

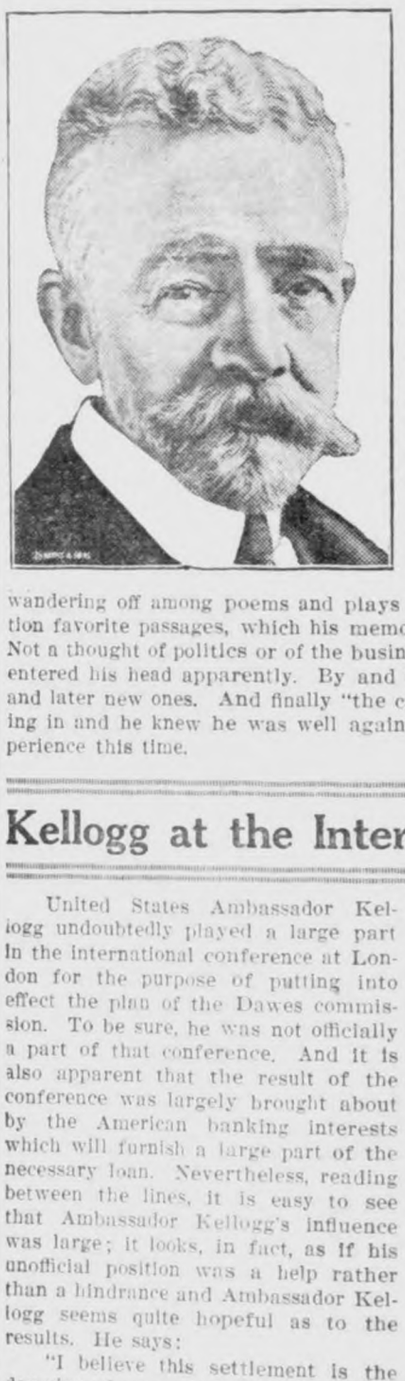
"Shaver the Sphinx" Is Far From Dumb

It seems there are two Sphinxes in the Presidential campaign—the "Silent Sphinx" of Pat Harrison's keynote speech at the Democratic convention and the ordinary garden variety of Sphinx. Anyway, "Shaver the Sphinx" is what the West Virginians call the chairman of the Democratic National committee. They say he's a regular tightwad when it comes to words. Just the same there are several subjects on which Clem L. (Clement Lawrence) Shaver is far from being dumb. Among them are the great outdoors, bass fishing, fox hunting, farming and American history.

"Hobbies?" says "Shaver the Sphinx." "I haven't any, unless you call fishing, fox hunting and love of nature hobbies. I love nothing better than fishing for bass in Buffalo creek, one of the tributaries to the south fork of the Potomac. I have two fishing camps on that watershed. American history is also a 'hobby.' I'm very anxious to have the early history of West Virginia preserved. My great-great-grandfather was Peter Shaver, one of those hardy Virginians who followed the deer trails into the wilderness of West Virginia.

"And I like farming so well," he continued, "that I have four farms. There I raise chickens and thoroughbred cattle. I have developed a strain of foxhounds that have been named after me."

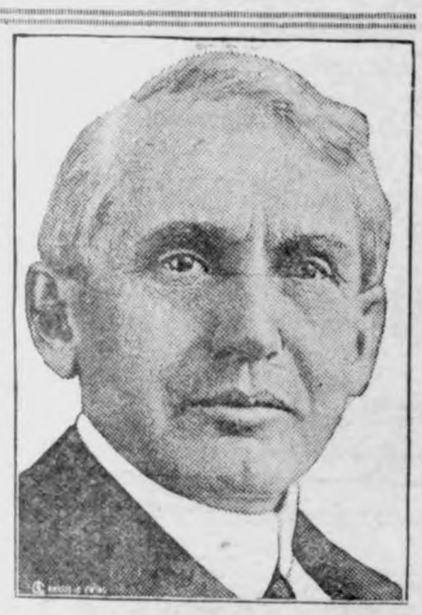
Literary Mind of Henry Cabot Lodge



United States Senator Henry Cabot Lodge of Massachusetts, who has been in congress so long—four terms in the house, and in the senate since 1893—that he almost seems a part of the capitol, is convalescent from an operation in a Boston hospital. Ten years ago he had an operation. And this moved the Boston Sunday Globe to reprint from Scribner's Magazine of that time an article by Senator Lodge with the title, "The Diversions of a Convalescent." Senator Lodge was born in Boston in 1850. The Congressional Directory's biography says, "Profession, that of literature." He is the author of works to the number of a score or more.

The article reprinted from Scribner's Magazine is a remarkable exposition of the workings of what one might call "the literary mind." For almost as soon as consciousness had returned his mind occupied itself in wandering off among poems and plays centuries old, recalling of its own volition favorite passages, which his memory faithfully recited for his enjoyment. Not a thought of politics or of the business of government or of personal affairs entered his head apparently. By and by he began to read, at first old books and later new ones. And finally "the cares which infest the day" came crowding in and he knew he was well again. One wonders if he had the same experience this time.

Kellogg at the International Conference

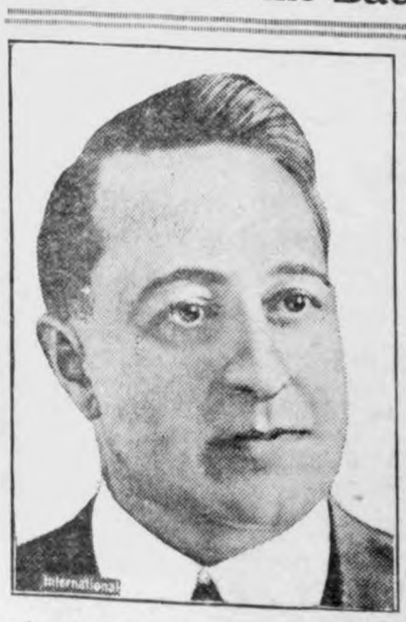


United States Ambassador Kellogg undoubtedly played a large part in the international conference at London for the purpose of putting into effect the plan of the Dawes commission. To be sure, he was not officially a part of that conference. And it is also apparent that the result of the conference was largely brought about by the American banking interests which will furnish a large part of the necessary loan. Nevertheless, reading between the lines, it is easy to see that Ambassador Kellogg's influence was large; it looks, in fact, as if his unofficial position was a help rather than a hindrance and Ambassador Kellogg seems quite hopeful as to the results. He says:

"I believe this settlement is the dawning of a new day, the hope of millions of people, the revival of industry and prosperity so necessary to the happiness and progress of mankind. Animosities engendered by the war cannot continue. Nations, as individuals, must live in amity, and this conference is the beginning of the harmony which presages the brighter future."

Frank Billings Kellogg was born in 1856 at Potsdam, N. Y., and went to Minnesota with his parents in 1865. He was admitted to the bar in 1877 and married Clara M. Cook of Rochester, Minn., in 1896. He moved to St. Paul in 1887. He served in the United States senate, 1917-23. He was president of the American Bar association, 1912-13. He was appointed ambassador to the Court of St. James in 1924.

Walton's Come-Back Shames Fiction



If you read it in fiction you'd say "Bosh!"—a career like that of John Calloway Walton. For he was ousted from the governorship of Oklahoma by legislative impeachment and now he has been nominated at the very next primary election—for the United States senatorship. Where is there anything like it in American politics.

Walton was impeached and removed from office last November, the charges against him involving corruption in office, willful neglect of duty, incompetency and moral turpitude. Undismayed, he started his effort at a political comeback. He announced his candidacy for the Democratic senatorial nomination and carried his cause directly to the voters, charging that his impeachment had been "framed" and was largely the result of the bitter fight he had waged against the Ku Klux klan. In his campaign he said he recognized the klan as "the only issue" and denounced it in all his speeches. His Republican opponent in the November election will be W. B. Pine, Okmulgee oil millionaire, who had the indorsement of the klan, and in the coming campaign the klan is expected to be the predominant issue, with party lines relegated to the background.

Walton was inaugurated January 8, 1922. A gigantic barbecue at the state fair grounds, attended by approximately 100,000 persons, was one feature of the inaugural.

Speaking of Snakes—

"We'll tell the world, and everybody else who has time to listen," says the Tifton Gazette, "that if we had been the girl who found a rattler under her dresser, we would have given up that room and all parts adjacent to the rattler. We never did much admire snakes, no way."

Which recalls the story of the Georgia farmer who was awakened from a sound sleep by his wife, who had seen a snake crawling from under the cover at his feet. He glanced at the snake and said: "No harm in it. Can't you see it's a kingsnake? Never wake me up again for less than a rattlesnake!"—Atlanta Constitution.

Ice Drifts Far South

An unusual occurrence of ice in the North Pacific has been reported to the United States hydrographic office by the master of the American steamer West Jessup, who relates having seen "a large and a small piece of drift ice" in latitude 41 degrees 38 minutes north, and longitude 144 degrees 2 minutes east. This is about 100 miles off the coast of Japan. Ice is seldom seen in the North Pacific anything like as far south as this; and the report indicates conditions along the east Asian coast exactly opposite to those prevailing along the east North American coast where icebergs and drift ice were rarer this spring than for many years.

Community Building

Capital Might Well Be Model for All Cities

Nearly every city is a patchwork founded upon an accidental beginning. No city complete has not existed. In spite of the rapid strides of science, trade, transportation and the enormous increases in population—all of which this country has experienced simultaneously—the city complete cannot yet be expected, but there are enough facts about cities now in existence to form the basis for a few definitive generalizations.

We at least know that the best laid-out city on earth, either of ancient or modern times, is only 228 miles from New York, and that the plan was made in 1791 by Pierre Charles l'Enfant, a French engineer, who served in the Revolutionary war, and approved by George Washington, writes Felix Isman in the Saturday Evening Post. We know that the city of Washington began as a mere village and that it has grown to be of the foremost cities of the world without altering the truth of the statement that it is the best laid-out city on earth.

The streets vary in width from 80 to 160 feet and are, on the whole, the widest streets of any city in all time. They are adorned with more than 30,000 trees, so that a bird's-eye view of the national capital gives the impression of a beautiful park, with the roofs of buildings showing indistinctly amid a wealth of verdure. The majestic transverse avenues form irregular intersections with the rectangular streets, resulting in 302 squares and circles, comprising 407 parks, the most important of which is the capitol grounds.

The height of buildings in both the residence and the business districts is restricted. The result has been a healthy tendency to spread out rather than to grow perpendicularly, as New York has done with such uncomfortable results for those who must spend their working days in its damp, dark, crowded canyons.

If the city plan of Washington has not made the impression it deserves to have had upon other municipalities, it certainly has stood the test of those best qualified to pass upon it—the residents of Washington.

Clean Community Worth All Cost and Trouble

The "clean-up" means hot water and soap and sunshine, perhaps paint and the whitewash brush. It may mean inconvenience while the work is "on," but it is sure to mean satisfaction when it is done.

The dark corners, the closet, the privet and every place where disease germs might live should be thoroughly cleaned.

It is well to plan beforehand; to systematize that time may be saved and effort lessened.

Fresh air is better than disinfectants.

Sunshine is the "blue ribbon" germ killer.

The city, town or village needs a "clean-up" just as much as the individual home. Vacant lots should be put in order, gutters cleaned and all objectionable piles of refuse removed.

Be clean, the streets, gutters, lots and all places under community control should be kept in good condition.

Stagnant water breeds mosquitoes.

Mosquitoes convey malaria.

Dump piles breed flies.

Flies spread disease germs.

Sanitary excellence means co-operation of the householder and author-ity.

Paving With Walnuts

A novel plan has been presented to the county supervisors and the Automobile association of San Joaquin as means of both beautifying new California roads and paying a profit, if not paying the cost of the roads. L. H. Taylor, a walnut grower, makes the suggestion.

The scheme is to plant walnut trees on either side of the roadways at intervals of about 100 feet. The trees are to be cared for as ordinary shade trees at the expense of the county. At the end of ten years, declares Mr. Taylor, the trees ought to bear about fifty pounds of walnuts each. There are more than 250 miles of roadways already paved, and the walnut trees would occupy about the equivalent of more than 1,368 acres in extent.

In ten years, at the average of fifty pounds of walnuts from each tree, there would be 13,000,000 pounds of walnuts, which could probably be sold for 15 cents a pound, net, or about $2,000,000, and this sum would pay a large part of the county's taxes and road upkeep.

Shrubbery

Many home owners have thrown out bushes which they considered dead in the spring, which would, if given the proper chance, have developed into sturdy stock. The cold winter and late spring resulted in holding back the shrubs to a point where the majority of owners had given up all hope of their coming to life. It is well to give your shrubbery sufficient time to come out of its winter sleep, and do not condemn it, for if it comes through the test it will result in much hardier growth.

NEW STYLE IN MILLINERY; SIMPLE SWEATER IS POPULAR

JUST now plain, smart felt hats and simple tailored hats are selling freely—for school girls must be hatted and everyone else equipped for the interim between summer and winter. In the meantime, behind the scenes in millinery shops, preparations are going forward for the first displays of winter millinery. They are due to arrive in September or very early in October.

A decided change in millinery styles will greet those enterprising women who go out to meet the mode at the opening events. No longer the little, close-fitting hat flaunts its leadership. Its place has been usurped by more spirited hats, high crowned and brimmed. Tall, square crowns with varied brims, helmets, sailors and soft picture hats, have lured our wayward fancies away from the simple cloche. It remains only in company with a little brim which usually turns saucily up at the front and which adds to the charm.

A glimpse of the incoming modes is provided by the group of hats pictured here. Hatters' plush and other plushes, velvet, felt, velours, corded silks, afford the backgrounds for the season's rich but simple trimmings. These are of ostrich or other feathers, in many fancy motives with pompons and "feather dusters" the favorites. Ostrich, in soft plumes, fringes and fancies, leads all the rest. Wide or narrow ribbons, new ornaments and odd embroideries are the main contributors of other trimmings.

DISTINCTIVE STYLES IN HATS

At the top of the group a velvet hat is shown with a scarf trimming of metallic silk ending in ostrich fringe. At the left a felt shape is swathed in wide ribbon with upstanding loops at the front. A velvet-covered, helmet shape is covered with a coque head and shower of feathers, made of ostrich flues. The little felt hat next has decorations of narrow ribbon, and the model of corded silk is finished with a band of ribbon edged with narrow braid and adorned with Chinese embroidery.

To women of fashion, this simple sweater type is an outstanding note of smart appeal this season. In fact, with those who lead in the art of dress, the idea of unaffected knitted outfits, has become a hobby, to the extent that the simple sweater, call it slipon, jumper or pullover, as you please, with pleated skirt declares style personified.

A charming sight it is to note women high in social status, and of means unlimited, clad, as they are so often these days, in white woolen skirts over-bloused with sweaters of white wool, bespeaking naive simplicity.

While all white knitted apparel is of outstanding importance and is assured a continuance of favor throughout the coming months, there is also a decided inclination toward warm colors which tone in with the autumn landscape. The radiant tomato red, pinstriped with plain knit white, the chosen color scheme for the sweater in the picture, seems to reflect the very sunset glow of harvest time. It is one of the newest jumper models acclaimed by fashion authorities. Knitted of the finest of mohair, it gives a cobweb appearance, yet it is amazingly serviceable. It attains a tailored aspect in that plain knit-bindings and border finish the V-neck, long snug-fitting sleeves, hip-band and girdle.

SIMPLE SWEATER TYPE

A distinctively new and effective color combination is light blue with purple trimmings.

Among the startling new effects are sheered wool trims on sweaters and knitted suits as well. When developed in grays and tans the appearance is that of fur. If not in the fur colorings, then these new trimmings, which promise to feature big from now on, are of accurate match color to the foundational color of the garment which it embellishes.

"One dollar, please," said the doctor.

"What!" cried the good woman, "$1 for painting my husband's back, and I can get my whole kitchen done for $2.50."

FEELS IT HIS DUTY TO TELL THE FACTS

"Tanlac has meant so much to me in the way of improved health that I feel it a duty, as well as a pleasure, to recommend it," is the appreciative statement of J. M. Freeman, well-known resident of 307 Camden St., San Antonio, Texas.

"About a year ago my stomach and digestion got all out of fix and I soon became badly run-down. My appetite went back on me and the little I did eat failed to nourish me. Constipation troubled me nearly all the time and I also had bilious spells and attacks of dizziness.

"My sleep was unsound and I got up mornings with a mean, sickening taste in my mouth and a dull headache that lasted me almost through the day. I lost considerable weight and that tired, draggy feeling was on me all the time.

"After a few days' use of Tanlac I noticed a marked improvement in my appetite, digestion and general condition. So I took four bottles and by that time I was eating as heartily as I ever did and digesting everything fine.

"My liver went to work right, my headaches stopped and I was able to sleep like a log. I had gone down to only 143 pounds, but I am now a strong man of 215 pounds, and my health is the best it has been in years. A friend of mine took four bottles of Tanlac at the same time I did and got fine results, too. As a builder of health and strength Tanlac is certainly without an equal."

Tanlac is for sale by all good druggists. Accept no substitute. Over 40 Million bottles sold.

Few Physically Normal

According to examinations made by school medical inspectors of New York state during 1922-23, 47 per cent of the children living in cities, 48.9 per cent of those living in small towns and villages, and only 27.4 per cent of those living in rural districts are physically normal.

80 Percent of Crop is Growing in Corn of Stevenson Says

Dr. W. H. Stevengon head of the farm crops and soils department, Iowa State college, in giving the address of welcome to the 300 soybean enthusiasts who attended the fifth annual field meeting of the National Soy bean Grower's Association at Ames, August 29 and 30, told the visitors that Iowa is growing half a million acres of soybeans this year of which 80 per cent is growing in growing in corn.

J. N. Horlacher, of Storm Lake, Iowa, explained a soybean wheat combination for northern Iowa. Mr. Horlacher explains that northern Iowa requires a quite hardy winter wheat and protection from blowing. He grows Manchu soybeans and after harvesting the crop of soybeans he drills the wheat in the soybean stubble serves as protection for young wheat seedlings against blowing and blasts.

Sobeans have been found to be the cheapest source of protein feed for dairy cattle, according to experimnts at the Iowa Station, Prof. E. Weaver, of the dairy husbandry department, told the soybean men that no unfavorable results either on the cow or on the butter was in evidence Soybeans, is a protein supplement he said, were found to be worth 30 percent more, pound per pound than oilmeal.

LEMME CELEBRATION WAS SUCCESSFUL ENTERTAINMENT

On Account of Rain Was Postponed From Thursday to Saturday

The big Klemme celebration, which was to have been staged last Thursday, was postponed until Saturday on account or the rain. It would have been one of the best celebrations ever put on if it could have been Thursday, as by postponing the event a number of the free street acts and attractions were left out on.

Saturday was an ideal day and crowds began coming in early in the forenoon and by noon a large crowd had assembled. With the exception of the free street acts everything went off as scheduled on the former program. There was plenty of music by the Klemme Band who played throughout the day and gave an evening concert. A fast and interesting ball game between Klemme and Boone Valley was played, the result eing 5 to 4 in favor of the visitors. A number of otherevents took place at the ball diamond. A pony potato race was put on and Carl Stromer took first for gathering the most spuds; Henry Palmby second, and Clarence Tanner third. In the horse race Verle Starnes came in first; Luther Tanner second and A. A. Schmidt's horse, third. In the pony race Arnold Memple captured first p lace, Donald Newberger second, and ——— Greimann third.

Later the doings a t t he ball diamond a wrestling match was put on from a platform on Main Street between Hans Willer of Klemme and Alstaldt of Mason City. This was a fast, even match. Willer threw his man for the first fall. Alstadt came back and captured the second fall . Then they went at it in real ernest and after a gruelling battle and both men were visa- tired out Hans Willer gave the match to his opponent. Willer was not up to his usual form as he had not been wrestling for some time. It was a good exhibition.

A bowery dance in the evening on Greimann's floor attracted a big crowd of the younger folks.

There were plenty of concessions on the street, a merry-go-round for the kids and lots of fun.

THE LOST WAS FOUND

"When I was a little boy," sweetly piped the hard-boiled sergeant, "I had a set of wooden soldiers. One day I lost those soldiers, and I cried very much, but my mother said, 'Never mind Johnny. Some day you will get your wooden soldiers back." And believe me, you bunch of wooden-headed dumbbells, that day has come."

We wonder why you never find in the life history of a successful man: "During his younger days he was interested chiefly in jazz music, dancing and a good time."

The Man on the Job

You can't make hay by loafin'; its

But t hey've always come to failure at t he finish of the year,
If you're always pleasure chasin',
you will have a gloomy face
When the banks comes around to Ask you 'bout the mortgage on the place.

Sometimes things don't seem equal
as the wheel o' fortune turns,
But the fact is t hat a feller gets
About just what he earns,
I ain't advisin' humans to sell all their joys for gold
Or never go on fishin' trips, or Wait 'til they get old
Afore they turn to pleasure—that's a foolish waste o' fun,
But you can't succeed by playin'
When there's work that should be

SERIOUS AUTO ACCIDENT SUNDAY ON HIGHWAY

A bad auto smash-up took place on the Wilson Hizaway two mi south of Klemme Sunday morning about 10:00 o lo k when the Chevrolet touring car driven by Verle Stares and the Ford Sedan driven by Fred Schmidt collided. Verle Starnes, accompanied by Lee Luick, were driving south on their way to Belmond. Fred Schmidt and family and W C Schmidt were riding in the Ford Sedan and were coming from the west onto the highway and as they approached they stopped to let a car go by coming from the suoth and t hen started across the highway Starnes presumed they were waiting for him which caused the the confusion and before he could stop the cars had hit. The Luick boy was thrown against the steering wheel and suffered internal injuries. Starnes escaped with a few minor bruises. W. C. Schmidt in the Ford car got a bad scalp wound but the other occupants were not injured. The cars locked wheels and this kept them from rolling over, but both were badly wrecked. The Luick boy's injuries were so severe that an operation had to be preformed at a Mason City hospital Tuesday evening. At last reports he is getting along fairly well.

THE BAND BOYS SQUARE UP ACCOUNTS

One Member Fainted When He Heard the Amount He Was To Receive For His Work

The Band boys held their business meeting at the First National Bank Monday evening to close up the season's business. The greater part of the evening was spent in figuring the business of the season and figuring what each player should receive, based on attendance at concerts and rehearsals. Finally it was found that each player would get exactly 22 cents for each rehearsal and concert for the summer. Don Gibbs, altoist of the band felt over when the amount was read, but recovered. It was a great shock to think that 22 cents was the allotment. The boys took everything good naturedly and didn't give a hang. The highest check paid to any member was $14.09 which was for all the concerts, rehearsals, fair job, celebrations, etc., so if anyone thinks a band can get rich we invite them to play a season. The boys decided to take a two week's lay off and then go into rehearsals again for the winter so that Klemme can boast of a real band in the spring. Director Poort then told the boys to go to the restaurant where a feed was waiting them to which they done justice in fast march time. It was a great meeting and all had a good time. It's the spirit that keeps those fellows going and they are going to show North Iowa that Klemme can have one of the best bands in the state next year. Boost the band!

BAND GAVE LAST CONCERT IN PARK SUNDAY

The Klemme Band gave their closing concert in the Park Sunday which brought out an immense crowd. Cars were parked solid on three sides of the park and the benches in the park were all occupied also.

We have heard many complinents on the fine concert the boys gave Sunday as their closing concert for the summer season.

The boys have made wonderful progress under the direction of Mr. J. J. Poort. They are getting into the better class of band music and really play some difficult pieces.

The best compliment we heard came from the lips of an out of town visitor who said, "Klemme should feel proud that they have such an organization that many larger cities cannot begin to e qual."

It was decided by the club girls that the club should be held the first Saturday of every month. After the business meeting came the sewing hour. After that a delicious lunch was served consisting of pickles, sandwiches, coffee and cake. The next meeting will be held Saturday, October 4, 1924 at t he home of Gertie Trampel

The Laundry's Despair.

In days of old
When knights were bold,
And sheet-iron trousers wore,
They lived in peace
For then a crease
Would last five years or more.
In those old days
They had a craze
For steel shirts and they wore them.
And there was bliss
Enough in this—
The laundy never tore them.

MILLIONS RALLY TO DEFENSE CALL

President Reviews Marching Citizens—Exercises Held Throughout U. S.

Washington.—Reports to the War department from the nine corps area headquarters indicated an aggregate civilian participation of more than 16,000,000 in 6,535 local Defense day exercises all over the country.

These included both the one-day volunteers who turned out to fill up the ranks of the regular army, National Guard and organized reserves, and also the civilians who otherwise took part in parades and exercises, exclusive of the crowds along the streets which watched the demonstrations.

Corps area commanders were unanimous in declaring the day highly successful and asserting that the public generally was enthusiastic in the indorsement of the national defense program.

An ununiformed army of plain American citizens tramped past a reviewing stand here to be greeted by the plain citizen who is commander in chief of all the armed forces of the nation—the President.

For an hour and a half the tide of marching men flowed up Pennsylvania avenue with the orderly, steady, unbroken movement of a great river. It was fringed with the uniforms of the regular, National Guardsmen, marines, and sailors, who gave the spectacle a little of the color of a military ceremony, and was supplemented by groups of patriotic women.

At the White House reviewing stand President and Mrs. Coolidge stood through all the time the column was passing, flanked by Secretary Weeks and General Pershing and other high government officials.

When the last unit had moved by to its place on the ellipse, the President and Mrs. Coolidge returned to the White House, while Secretary Weeks and General Pershing stayed to express their gratitude to the waiting host.

General Pershing told its marchers that "without your support, the country would soon drop back into our pre-war attitude of inaction and neglect."

"Remember that these plans contemplate a citizen army composed of men who in peace times go about their ordinary business; otherwise, in their stead a much larger standing army would be required," he said.

"And so, after this small beginning the people of this district and all over the country should not fail to give their personal and public encouragement to all those who are willing to volunteer to serve in one of the local units of this defensive force."

Before the parade, the trio of American world-girdling planes, piloted by the officers who have carried them practically around the world against every obstacle, circled over the city in an aerial parade of their own honor of Defense day.

Concluding the program in radio addresses, Secretary Weeks and General Pershing spoke over telephone lines connecting over 38,000 miles of wire from coast to coast, their remarks being picked up for radio broadcasting at points from New York to San Francisco and border to border. It was estimated that not less than 20,000,000 persons "listened in."

Washington.—National Fire Prevention day has been proclaimed by President Coolidge Thursday, October 9, which is the fifty-third anniversary of the Chicago fire. "The problem of combating the stupendous waste of national resources is of national importance," the President said in his proclamation. "If it is to be diminished, a special effort must be made to educate the public mind and conscience to the necessity of improving building construction, increasing a spirit of national carefulness. The preservation of thousands of lives and valuable property is a task worthy of our constant endeavor and wholesome cooperation."

LOEB, LEOPOLD GET LIFE PRISON TERMS

Slayers of Robert Franks Also Given 99 Years.

Chicago.—Richard Loeb and Nathan Leopold, Jr., were sentenced to life in the Joliet penitentiary for the murder of little Robert Franks.

In addition, they were given a 99-year sentence on the kidnaping charge.

Judge John R. Caverly gave his decision in the sensational murder case.

Judge Caverly recommended that the state department of public welfare never admit the murderers to parole, and that they thus be condemned to die in prison.

As soon as the decision was announced, Sheriff Hoffman ordered the boys taken to Joliet at once. They were hurried back to the county jail and prepared for an immediate trip to the prison.

The two prisoners showed extreme emotion when they realized the judge had tempered justice with mercy and had spared their lives.

Judge Caverly announced that he showed mercy solely for the reason that the boys were under twenty-one years of age and therefore legal minors.

He said that there was no mitigation proven and that the plea of guilty had not helped the defendants any.

He said that never in the history of Illinois had a minor been sentenced to hang on a plea of guilty. For this reason, he declared, he took the entire responsibility on his shoulders for saving them from the gallows and sending them to prison for life.

Judge Caverly also declared that he believed the boys were abnormal, otherwise they would not have committed the crime.

Couzens Renominated Over Tuttle in Michigan

Detroit, Mich.—Senator James Couzens, nominated in Tuesday's primary election as the Republican candidate for United States senator, has increased to 53,651 his lead over his closest rival, Federal Judge Arthur J. Tuttle.

With only 235 of the state's 2,763 precincts missing, the vote stood 333,367 for Couzens and 279,716 for Tuttle.

In the seven-cornered Republican gubernatorial contest, Gov. Alex J. Groesbeck, seeking a third term, had a 200,000-vote lead over his nearest competitor, James Hamilton. The vote, with 2,509 precincts reported, gave Groesbeck 321,328 and Hamilton 120,204.

PERSHING QUITS AFTER 42 YEARS

General Believes Service Is Highest Gift of Individual to His Country.

New York.—After 42 years' active service, John J. Pershing, general of all the armies of the United States and commander of the A. E. F., believes that "service is the highest gift of the individual to his country."

He expressed this belief in a signed statement, addressed to soldiers on the eve of his retirement, published in the army's official paper, Recruiting News, which made it public.

"To participate in ceremonies attendant upon the retirement of officers and enlisted men," General Pershing states, "as I have done numberless times, gives one no adequate idea of his feelings when his own turn comes. But even in severing an association that has lasted as long as mine, there are some compensations.

"I can look back over that period and see the evolution of the army from a small body of highly specialized Indian fighters, for the most part remote both physically and mentally from the great mass of their fellow citizens, into the army of today—regulars, National Guard and reserves—two-thirds of which are civilians participating in the business, political, and social lives of their various communities, but none the less integral factors in the national scheme of defense.

"The old regular army was the equal of any similar body in the world. Its officers were hard working, conscientious, and efficient, the men well trained, without fear, and possessed of a splendid spirit of loyalty and pride in the service. But the army was a thing apart from the everyday life of the nation. What it did or thought was of little interest to the ordinary citizen—unless the headlines told of battles and bloodshed.

"But the great war which put so many of our young men into their country's uniform awakened in patriotic breasts a feeling for the army, and interest in it and an understanding of its real aims and purposes.

"On Defense day, September 12, the date which marks my retirement, I shall have another consolation, one that will mitigate the thought of parting, through the realization that the country has not allowed the lessons that cost so dearly in the World war to be forgotten. With no malice, but with forethought that marks the wise man, we shall, I hope, look at ourselves in time of fair weather to see how we might fare in a storm.

"What a turning out of A. E. F. veterans the twelfth will see! It would not be modesty but affectation if I did not recall with satisfaction having commanded the nation's great armies in the World war. And what patriotic, brave and aggressive men! What sacrifices and hardships they endured, that first American army that ever trod a battlefield of the Old world! Such thoughts have been potent in inspiring the new spirit in the regular army. May that spirit continue to bring us the realization that service is the highest gift of the individual to his country."

Troops Menace Peking; Ruled by Military Body

Shanghai.—Advices from the north stated that Gen. Chang Tso-Lin would open his attack on Gen. Wu Pei-Fu at Shanghaikwan at once. Shanghaikwan is at the eastern end of the great wall of China and is on the line of the Mukden railroad. It was said Chang had sent six armies of 30,000 men each for a drive against Peking.

London.—The Peking cabinet has been taken over by a military council, cables from Peking say. Great activity prevails in government departments. The finance minister is trying to raise funds for military purposes. Shanghai merchants have wired Peking bankers not to advance the money, as it would lengthen the war.

U. S. Trade Balance Favorable in August

Washington.—America's favorable trade balance was restored during August, when exports increased and imports declined. Exports totaled $331,000,000, against $278,000,000 in July and $311,000,000 in August, 1923. Imports fell to the lowest level, with the exception of September, 1923, since July, 1922, aggregating but $270,000,000, against $278,000,000 in July and $275,400,000 in August, last year.

Exports were the largest since May this year. The favorable trade balance this month was about $61,000,000, compared to $35,500,000 in August, 1923, and an unfavorable trade balance of $400,000 in July of this year.

SUFFERED MANY YEARS WITH FEMALE TROUBLE

PE-RU-NA LIKE A GIFT FROM HEAVEN

Mrs. Katie Scheffel, R. F. D. No. 5. Lowell, Ohio

"I have been suffering for years with female trouble. Was operated on five years ago. It relieved me some but I did not regain my strength. Two years later was taken sick and bedfast several months. I treated a long while without much relief. I was discouraged, my mind affected, so nervous I could neither eat or sleep and unable to do anything.

We tried several doctors but one after another gave up my case as hopeless. Finally a good friend advised me to try Pe-ru-na. I did. It relieved me almost immediately. Your medical department said I was suffering from chronic catarrh of the system. I began taking your medicine in March, 1914, and continued until August. I took ten bottles of Pe-ru-na and three bottles of Man-a-lin and felt like a new person. Your medicine seemed like a gift from Heaven. It was like coming from darkness into light.

We have used your medicine since for coughs, colds and grip with good results. We will always keep it on hand. I weigh twenty-five pounds more than I ever did, eat and sleep well and can do a good day's work. Everybody says I look fine. Even the doctors are surprised. I cannot thank you enough and will always recommend Pe-ru-na to sufferers from catarrh."

MRS. KATIE SCHEFFEL, R. F. D. No. 5, Lowell, O.

Mrs. Scheffel is only one of many thousand women in the world, who owe their present health to Pe-ru-na. The record of this medicine is a proud one as Pe-ru-na has held the confidence of both sexes for fifty years or more.

If your trouble is due to a catarrhal inflammation in any organ or part of the body, do like Mrs. Scheffel. Try Pe-ru-na. Insist upon having the original and reliable remedy for catarrhal conditions. You won't be sorry.

"JAMES CARR!"

SYNOPSIS.—Thrown from his auto in a New York village, a man is carried unconscious into the home of a Miss Edith Grant. A doctor discovers he has been shot, fatally. Consciousness returning, he babbles of "millions." He begs that Henry Archman, millionaire resident of the vicinity, be sent for, declaring he has important papers for him. Archman cannot be reached by phone, but word is sent that his secretary is on the way. A man announcing himself as Archman's secretary, Akin, arrives, talks with Morbach, and leaves with a package he gives him. Morbach dies. Archman's arrival, with his secretary, reveals that the man posing as Akin is an impostor. Archman denounces Edith Grant as a girl endeavoring to snare his son Harry. Archman, it appears, his millions made in Chicago, has yielded to the importunities of his family—his wife, daughters Nellie and Bessie (seventeen years old), and son Harry—and moved to New York in an endeavor to gain recognition by the Four Hundred. They have not succeeded. Mrs. Archman is bitter over her failure, particularly mourning the fact that she has not been "taken up" by a Mrs. Van Kull. Archman orders Nellie to get ready for a long journey with him. He refuses to reveal their destination to his wife, declaring it is "not his secret." Nellie tells Bess she is in love with James Carr, a youth working on Archman's ship, El Rio. She gives Bess a message for him. Archman and Nellie depart.

CHAPTER IV

Quick Decisions.

Muttering wrathfully to himself, Henry Archman strode out of the Grant cottage and sprang into his car. Nellie Archman, though as much exercised as her father, both by the accusations he had brought against Miss Grant and by the as yet unexplained presence of Carr, and his ambiguous admissions, yet lingered for a moment to take a formal leave. Conventions bind women more tightly than they do men.

"I am sorry," she said. "I cannot believe that father is justified in speaking as he did. I am sure he will tell you so himself later, and will thank you for your efforts to enable him to hear what Mr. Morbach wanted to say. Good-night."

Edith bowed. "Thank you, Miss Archman," she said gratefully. "This is not the time nor the place for explanations, but I can assure you that your faith is not misplaced. Good-night."

As Nellie came out of the door Archman called to her impatiently. "Get in here, Nellie," he ordered sharply. "Akin can follow in your car. I want to talk to you."

Nellie obeyed in silence. She expected her father to refer to the scenes at the cottage and she was ready and indeed curious to listen and learn.

Archman, however, disappointed her. He threw over the lever and the automobile leaped away like a live thing, splitting space like a hand-guided cannon ball. No swifter could it have gone had its driver been possessed by the seven devils of Scripture. No man could drive at such a pace and spare any attention to anything else. Nellie knew it and settled herself back to wait.

Not till the gates of his big stone house were reached did Archman slacken speed and turn to the girl. "I'm going to take you on a trip with me, Nellie," he said. "We start in an hour. Pack a suitcase with what you need most. We don't take any trunks."

Nellie's eyes widened. "Good gracious! Father—" she began.

"I can't discuss the matter. It's an emergency. Get ready!"

"But, father, where are we going? When will ge be back?"

"God knows. Not for weeks, certainly."

Nellie's face blanched. "I can't go away like that, father," she protested. "You must go. You heard the doctor's version of Morbach's message. You are the girl I am to bring. There's no time to lose. I must get you there before 'he' dies."

"Before who dies?" demanded the girl.

"I can't tell you now. It would take too long. Besides, I am not sure myself. And it is 'his' secret, not mine. The matter is imperative. Get ready at once."

Archman's tones had lost their irritability. They were subdued, and even solemn. Nellie's protest died on her lips. Never before had she seen her father awe-stricken.

The car rolled up to the steps of the house. Archman stopped it and jumped out and helped Nellie to descend. "Hurry, daughter!" he said. Then he turned to the footman who came hastening out. "Leave the car here, James," he ordered. "Fill the gas tank and see that it's in good shape. I'll want it again tonight." He turned and hurried into the house before which Nellie had already preceded him.

Bess met him at the steps. "Oh, father!" she cried. "What's it all about?"

Archman half paused. "I can't talk now, Bess," he answered, as he passed. "Ask Akin. He's just behind. Or ask Nellie. She'll want you to help her pack, anyway. Where's Harry?"

Bess clutched at her head. "Help Nellie to pack!" she echoed. "Good gracious! Harry isn't home! He went out just after you did."

Archman's brows darkened. "I guessed as much," he growled. "Tell your mother I want to see her in five minutes. And help Nellie to get ready." He passed on up the stairs.

Bess started after him. Then she ran to seek her mother and deliver the message. This done, she raced up the stairs to Nellie's room.

Meanwhile Archman had hurried into his office and sat down at his desk. He jerked the telephone toward him. "Long distance," he ordered curtly. "Give me New York—Desbrosses, 58641. Quick, central!"

A moment later the phone tinkled and he picked it up. "Hello! Is this Captain Bunker? Good! Do you know my voice, captain? Hush! No names. This phone may leak. It's leaked once tonight already, or it's got the credit of it. When can you put to sea? Yes! I know you need coal and stores and all that. What I want to know is the earliest possible moment you can be ready for a two thousand-mile trip. Five days! Five days! D—n! Oh, very well! If you can't you can't. Now listen. I'll be at your house some time before morning. Wait up for me. I'll give you instructions then. Understand? All right. Make no mistake. That's all."

Archman slammed the receiver back upon the hook and looked around. "Come in!" he ordered irascibly. "Come in, Martha!" he called. "I want to talk to you. The summons has come at last."

"What!"

"Yes! It's come at last. It didn't reach me. The messenger was murdered and his papers have been stolen. But I've had warnings, and I can guess what he wanted to say. I've got to start at once."

Mrs. Archman paled. "Murdered!" she gasped. "Will you be in danger?"

Archman jerked his shoulders impatiently. "Of course not," he rasped. "Now, Martha, don't you go to worrying. Everything will be all right."

"But where are you going?"

"I can't tell you. It's not my secret."

"But when will you be back?"

"I don't know. I may go to Argentina first. I'll try to keep you informed as to my movements, but you mustn't worry if I fail to do so. I may take Nellie on with me or send her back."

"Nellie! You're taking Nellie?"

Archman's eyes widened. "Yes! I thought you understood. It's for Nellie that I'm going."

Mrs. Archman's pleasant face grew paler. "You've never explained about Nellie," she began.

"I've explained all that I could or can. The secret isn't mine. When I brought the child home I told you that it was only for a time—that some day she would be required of us. The time's been slow in coming, but it's come at last."

"But why tonight! Can't you wait till tomorrow?"

"Tomorrow will be too late. I've got to try to outrun the thieves who stole that paper. I'm going south by railroad and on by any means that offer. I can't tell you how. The El Rio will follow as quickly as it can—probably in five days. Get Nellie's trunks packed and send them on board. I don't know whether I will come back myself or go on to Argentina. I don't know anything except that I must get Nellie away before the thieves have time to watch and follow us."

"But who are the thieves?"

"I can't tell you. That is, I can't tell you who is behind the thing, though I guess. I know the actual thief. It's that Grant woman."

"Who?"

"An actress who calls herself Edith Grant. She's snared Harry—"

"Harry! My Harry!"

"Yes! Your Harry." Archman spoke grimly. "I don't blame the boy very much. They chose their agent well. Morbach died in her house. Harry's mad about her. That's what I was talking to him about tonight."

"He—he isn't planning to marry her, is he?"

"Maybe he is. But you can bet your last dollar that she isn't planning to marry him. No! Don't worry about that. She'll drop him when she gets through with him. And, after all, the quickest way to cure a fool is to give him his head."

Mrs. Archman did not pursue the subject. She had unbounded faith in her ability to manage her son. "I haven't been troubled about Harry," she said. "But I have been about Nellie."

"Nellie! Nonsense!"

"It isn't nonsense." Mrs. Archman hesitated, then went on. "Only tonight she told me that her idea of happiness was to stand shoulder to shoulder with her husband and fight the world with him. She was thinking about some particular man, Henry."

"Nonsense!" Archman spoke vigorously, but his eyes were troubled. "It's only girl's talk. You women are always seeing things."

Mrs. Archman shook her head doubtfully. "I'm not so sure," she said. "I've been thinking. She's been going to your ship a good deal. Is there any one there who—"

"Nonsense!" Archman reiterated the word, but his tones were more uneasy than before. "Well!" he said. "It doesn't matter, after all. She'll have time to forget before we get back. Is Nellie ready?"

"I'll see." Mrs. Archman went to the door, then hesitated, and came back. "Did—did you see Mr. Van Kull?" she asked timidly.

Archman's face drew dark. "Yes! I saw him." He choked. "He—he—You were right, Martha. He snubbed me. Good Lord! If I wasn't going away! But I've got to go! I'll be back, though, and then if I don't make things warm for Mr. Van Kull, I'll eat the toughest bull in the yards, and that's saying a lot. Is Nellie ready?"

"I'll see."

Meanwhile Nellie, aided by Bess, was dressing and packing madly. Suddenly she threw up her hands and dropped into a chair. "Oh!" she wailed. "How can I go and leave him this way?"

"Leave who?" Bess stared blankly.

"Leave Jim. Oh! I've got to tell you Bess. You've got to help me. There's a young man—"

"Oh, Nellie!"

"Yes." The girl spoke desperately. "He's in charge of some of the repairs on father's ship. I've seen him nearly every day. He's poor, of course, and you know mother wants me to marry a duke or something, and of course Jim isn't a duke and—and— He hasn't said anything definite, but I thought—thought—"

"Oh, Nellie! You darling!" Bess threw her arms about the other. "Of course he meant it. Nobody could help meaning it where you were concerned. What is he like?"

Nellie's face lit up. "He's the most splendid man I ever saw," she breathed. "He's magnificent. But it's his eyes that I love. They're deep brown and soft, and yet they look as if—as if—Oh! I don't know how they look—like those of a young god going into battle, I suppose. Of course, you'll think I'm silly, but—"

"I don't! I don't! It's wonderful. Go on."

But Nellie was off on another track. "And then tonight he came into Miss Grant's cottage. Yes! He did! It seemed that she had telephoned for him. He turned quite white when he saw me. Then he said—said some dreadful things if he mean't them as they sounded. I won't let myself believe that he did mean them that way, and yet—Oh, Bess! I'll die if he did mean them that way. Then he begged me to be sure to come to the ship tomorrow so that he could explain something. Of course, I haven't any right to ask explanations, and I couldn't go there to see him after what happened tonight. But—"

"Nellie!" Mrs. Archman's voice was calling outside the door.

Nellie snatched at her sister. "Go to the ship tomorrow, Bess," she begged. "See him and tell him I had to go away. And find out what he wanted to tell me. If it's got anything to do with Miss Grant, I'll die! You will go, Bess, won't you?"

"Of course, I will. You poor thing. What's his name?"

"James Carr! You'll find him on the El Rio."

The door opened and Mrs. Archman appeared. "Come, Nellie," she said. "Your father is ready."

Ten minutes later good-bys had been said and Archman and Nellie and Akin were in the car, rolling down the road to New York. Fifteen minutes later the engine stopped and refused to go again.

Swearing mad, Archman jumped out and began to investigate. He discovered that the gasoline tank was empty. "Humph!" he grunted. "They want me to miss the train, do they? This is the first gun of the fight. Well, there'll be plenty more. Here, Akin, you go back toward the house and hunt for gasoline, while I scout ahead of us."

Half an hour later Akin got back. But he found an empty car. Archman and Nellie had vanished. The morning mail, however, brought a note of explanation to Mrs. Archman.

"Tell Akin that Nellie and I couldn't wait for him. Fire James for not filling the gas tank. I guess he got his pay for not doing it. Anyway, fire him. I'm off.

"HENRY."

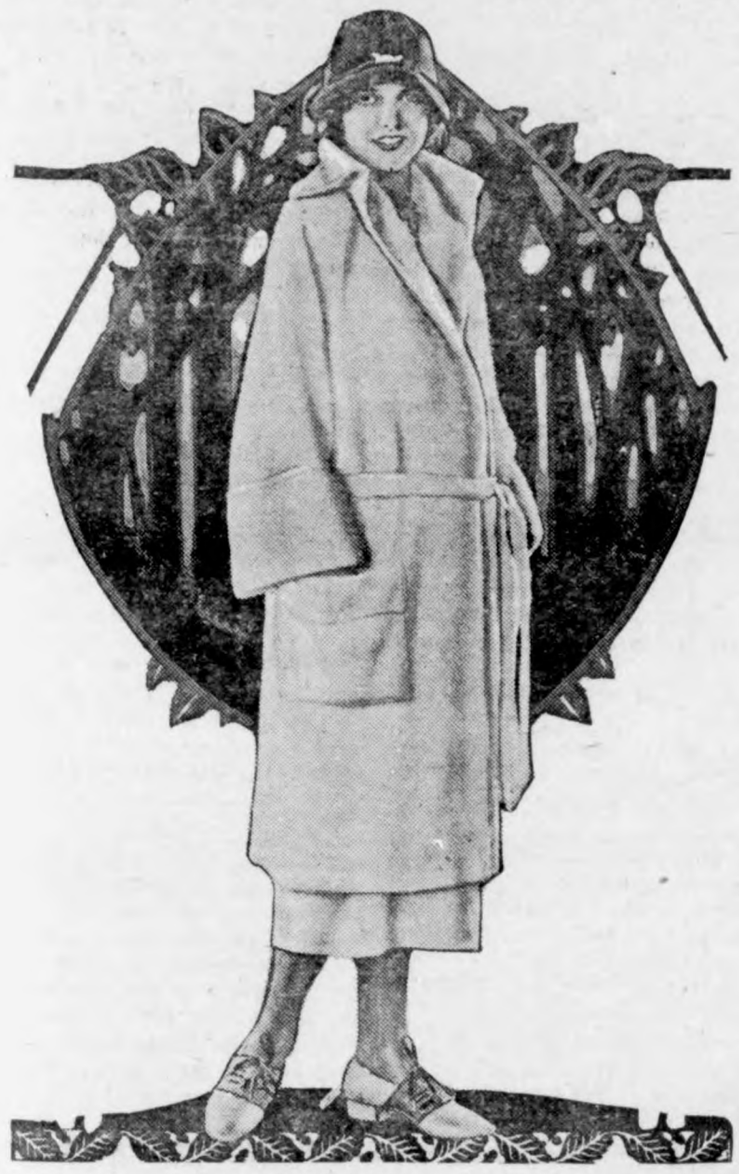
TOPCOATS OF BRUSH WOOL; SOME PRETTY ACCESSORIES

FASHION'S latest? Luxurious topcoats knitted of downy brushed wool. White is first selection, for the all-white ensemble of wrap and hat is making smart appeal this season.

Among the handsomest white coats for immediate wear, the knitted kind are especially fetching in appearance. Representative of this new vogue for the all-white coat is the three-quarter length model shown in the picture. It is exquisitely soft and downy, knitted as it is of brushed wool according to latest style mandate. Of course, if one prefers, one may purchase this coat in any of the leading new shades, for brilliant color, as well as white, is being featured throughout all knitted outerwear this fall. Lanvin green, titian browns, grays and tans are all popular.



HANDSOME WHITE COAT

The favor, however, for white knitted togs is evident to a marked degree. In the way of a jacquette, nothing is of more fascinating appeal than those knitted of snowy white lightweight brushed wool, collared generously with sheered wool, which bears a very close resemblance to fur.

White knitted scarf and hat sets are also very popular. Worn with a coat similar to the model here pictured, the ensemble proves most entrancing.

Typical of the prevailing all-white mode are the swagger knitted suits, some of which consist of skirt and three-quarter length coat. Others stress the long knitted coat posed over a straightline one-piece dress, also knitted. Handsome effects are variously expressed by bordering plain mohair knit-coats and skirts with bands of brushed wool. Sheered or clipped zephyr or yarn trimmings on brushed wool strikes a really new note of interest in knitted fashions.

White pull-over sweaters, long since an important factor in knitted outerwear, bid fair to "keep on keeping on" along their course of popularity. These are worn with plaited white cloth skirts, and for outdoor sports they are ideal if worn with knickers.

The shops abound with fascinating dress accessories—scarfs, collars vestees, girdles, bracelets, costume jewelry and all sorts of pretty furbelows. With a vogue for the limit of simplicity in frocks all these become more and more important, taking on new responsibilities. We must look to them to give character and distinction to simple dresses—as much alike as buttons—but happily admitting of much variation by means of accessories.

Neckwear is the foremost of the telltale finishing touches that make (or fail to make) the success of the daytime frock. It is shown in sheer and dainty collar and cuff sets, vestees and bibs of fine batiste, embroidered or plain, and usually made up with lace, also in net and lace combinations. The fine lace collar, in round or long developments, never made its imperishable class and beauty more strongly felt, but even the least expensive collars share with it the charm of freshness and wholesome daintiness.

Boudoir and breakfast caps still assemble laces, nets, ribbons, chiffons and tiny flowers into confections that will put any beholder in a good humor. One of them is pictured here made of dotted swiss—used for the crown—gathered into a wide band of lace and finished with a net frill. There is a twist of narrow ribbon at each side of the band, which straightens itself out to make a frivolous double bow at the nape of the neck. A little silk jacket worn with it employs crepe de chine in any light color and looks to val lace and satin ribbon for the prettiest embellishment. By way of being amusing it has an absurd but captivating pocket.

FASCINATING ACCESSORIES

The little cap of narrow ribbons tied together is a "wave retainer" for the bobbed-haired girl—or anyone else who must look to the beauty parlor for wavy locks.

Back Given Out?

It's hard to do one's work when every day brings morning lameness, throbbing backache and a dull, tired feeling. If you suffer thus, why not find out the cause? Likely it's your kidneys. A group of visitors was going through the county jail, and a burly negro trusty was called to open doors for them.

"How do you like it here?" asked one of the women.

"Like it, ma'am? I evah Ah gets out, Ah'll go so fer from here it'll take $9.00 to sen' me a postal card."

Negro Sam sought to sell to Negro Mose an old mule. The animal was found lying down in the stall, with its eyes closed. After some effort the mule was forced to get up. Then Mose insisted that he be shown the livestock in action. Sam chased the mule into the yard. In a few minutes the animal crashed head first into a tree. Then he backed off, turned and hit another tree.

"Say," said Mose, "that 'er mule is blind. I doan want 'im."

"Listen her man, that mule ain't blind." responded the owner, 'he just don't give a dam.'

"Yesshir," replied George "I was jusht down tryin' her out."

LICKED

An angry subscriber called upon the editor of a paper in the Middle West—and gav him a licking.

The editor promptly licked his printer—and the printer licked the assistant.

The trouble arose over the fact that the subscriber told the reporter that he was raising chicks. It appeared in the paper that he was raising checks.

NO REHEARSALS

"Who's dead?" asked the stranger, as he viewed the very elaborate funeral.

"The bloke what's inside the coffin," answered the small boy.

"Who is it?" pursued the stranger.

"It's our late mayor," was the reply.

"So the mayor is dead, is he? mused the stranger.

"Sure he's dead," said the small boy, withering. "You didn't think he was having a rehearsal, did you?

SAYS THE NASTY MAN

"Marriage is an exclusive female institution. It is run by women for women only. Women invented it and women keep it up and keep at it. Marriage is a female profession—her job—her way of making a living. Marriage with a man is youthful indiscretion, which is the result of a profound inexperiencee in life. That is why most men must be caught early—or not at all."

TELL IT TO THE OPERATOD

A farmer moved into town. His wife had not been used to using a telephone. One morning, when things were going wrong she looked over the book and saw the black-faced letter line which head. "To call the Trouble Clerk, ask for No. 77,777."

She called No. 77,777 and reported as follows:

"Trouble clerk?" she asked.

"Yes madam."

"Well, I only want to report that our cat got drowned in the cistern this morning, the baby is cutting a new tooth, the cook left without notice, we are out of sugar and starch, the stove pipe fell down, the milkman left only a pint of milk instead of a quart today, the bread won't raise, my oldest child is down with the measles and the plumbing leaks. That's all there is today, but if anything happens later, I'll call you up and tell you about it.

REDEEMING FEATURE

The merchants say of William Wight, "He always keeps his credit bright he pays his bills on time; so what care we if men impute to this pernickety galoot all kinds of sin and crime? Men say he knocks the speed laws cold; he travels, insolent and bold, at an atrocious speed; but when he buys a bale of hay we know that we will get the pay upon the date agreed. When the assessor comes along this William springs a dance and song that knocks the truth askew; so say his critics, but his bills don't cause disaster to our tills—he pays them when they're due. We hear that, greatly to his shame, he sometimes plays a little game of cards with sinful men; but while he's prompt to pay the freight we shall not chide or berate, and he may play again." Thus men will pardon and explain the little sins of any swain who pays up what he owes; they know he'll pay up what he owes; they know he'll pay thec harged up sums, and so they bless him when he comes, and cheer him when he goes. And it is strange and sad but true that men who dodge the bills long due find no defenders near, when they're accused of this or that, of poisoinng a neighbors cat, or brewing lawless beer. Their moral characters may glow, as stainless as the driven snow on far Alaska's hills, but when we'd hand them wreaths of praise, there comes a cry from sullen jays, "They do not pay their bills!"—Walt Mason.

When a young man complains that a young lady has no heart, it is pretty certain that she has his.

SUCCESSFUL OPERATIONS

A friend of mine was operated upon a few months ago by skilled surgeons. He died that day. The surgeons announced to the world the operation was highly successful. Another friend went to a dentist to have his eye teeth lengthened because every gold brick that was tossed his way he bit on. His wife divorced him very soon after because he would not come across for a new hat. Another friend hired a lawyer to defend him. The lawyer won the suit but took every cent the friend had for his fee. I once knew a woman with a brilliant mind but her body was out of proportion. She had a crooked nose, was cross-eyed, her mouth opened on the bias, her lips thin, chin without dimples, her ears flapped when the wind blew, neck short and thick, her bust flat and bony, hips prominent and irregular her legs so crooked she never visited the bathing beaches and her toes pointed inward. The brilliant woman went to a plastic surgeon to be made over. Not one of her friends and relatives recognized her when she came home from the hospital. She had nothing left she could call her own except her brilliant mind. She inhaled gas with suicidal intent. She left a note requesting her relatives to have the undertaker and the surgeon make her look "natural" so St. Peter would identify.

The farmers were operated upon four years ago for their bank account. Some died, others took the suicide route, many went bankrupt, here and there they hung on by their eyebrows and a few pulled through unscathed. The operation was successful.—A. J. Banks in Des Moines Register.

ROOSEVELT CABIN IN DAKOTA MAY BE HOUSED IN STONE

The Roosevelt cabin, once occupied by Theodore Roosevelt when recuperating at the old Maltese ranch seven miles south of the village of Medora in the Little Missoure bad lands of North Dakota, is to be preserved in a fitting shrine, according to the State Historical Society of North Dakota.

Lewis F. Crawford, curator of th society, is preparing plans for a stone shrine of stately and substantial design to be erected over the building. Assistance through popular subscription from every state is being considered, Mr. Crawford states, owing to requests from all sections for the shrine's esttablishment.

The cabin has historical interest in North Dakoto and the northwest No other building in the state has traveled as much. It was taken from the Maltese ranch, where it had stood for more than twenty years, and shipped to the St. Louis exposition in 1904. At the close of the exposition, the cabin was returned here and set up on the capitol grounds.

The building is constructed of pine logs, cut on the upper waters of the Little Missouri in 1880-81—The Des Moines Sundy Register.

OSBORNE APPEALS CASE

Refuses to Stand For Clear Lake Decision

Clear Lake, Ia.—Dr. C. F. Osborne of Hampton who was fined $100 in justice court here last week on the charge of disorderly conduct, has appealed the case to the district court, his attorneys claiming that he could not get justice here because of the recent "drive against speeders" by local officials.

The complaint was made by Anglo Lombardo, who claimed that Osborne crowded his car off the paved road while on the way to Clear Lake one evening during the Mason City Fair. Osborne had been at the fair grounds looking after his herd of Swigs cattle, which were being placed on exhibit at the fair. He denies crowding Lombardo or any one else off the road, and says that if Lombardo was crowded off the road that evening it was by some other party.

GUIDE U. S. MAIL PILOTS

The brightest electric lights in Iowa are at Iowa City. They can be seen from a proper altitude in five states. These are the powerful searchlights maintained at the United State flying field for the guidance of the pilots, who fly the postal service craft across the state at night time. They can be seen at a distance of 150 miles from Iowa City. Within this distance would be included besides Iowa, the states of Minnesota, Wisconsin, Illinois and Missouri. If one were at a proper altitude, the flash could be seen above Guthrie Center on the west.

From the ground flashes can be seen plainly by travelors along the Great White Way through Washington, 30 miles to the south and have been seen at Mt. Pleasant 50 miles south.

These lights are kept circling during the time the mail planes are operating between Chicago and Omaha. They are operated after the plans leave Iowa City and until they arrive at Omaha or Chicago so that the pilots, should they encounter storms or other difficulties, can find their way back to Iowa City.

Besides furnishing energy for the searchlights the Iowa City Light & Power Co. supplies the field with power and with energy for lights which illuminate the flying field. The buildings on the field are brilliantly illuminated so that t he pilots will not crash into t hem.

The most powerful of the searchlights has a wattage of approximate ly 15,000 watts.

The mail service also maintains at the Iowa City field a radio broadcasting station to dispatch flyers and to, broadcast market reports and other government data.

INDIAN HEAD BLUFF NEAR SPRING PARK IN MITCHELL COUNTY

There is always a peculiar fascination in the discovery of a fancied resemblance of cliff faces to human profiles. And when those resemblances are more real than fancied, the interest is doubled. Poets have been inspired often with such cliff faces as themes, and the story of the "Great Stone Face," by Hawthorne, has awakened many a reader to sincere appreciation both of the original "Stone Face" and of the story as a piece of literature. In Mitchell county, Iowa, however there is a great "Stone Face" which is so definite and so real that it deserves much greater popularity than it has thus far enjoyed.

Near Sprink Park about one mile west of Osage the Cedar River makes a great curve. On the east side of the river is a bank more than 70 feet in height. It is in reality, a limestone cliff. It is very jagged, it is one of the most picturesque cliffs of the Cedar for many miles Along one crag, whose face juts out beyond the remaining part of the cliff, sufficiently to give it more than ordinary prominence, is the so-called "Indian Head Bluff." The face is distinct and well proportioned. It stands perhaps a third of the way up the bluff, and the face itself is about eight feet high.

Near the cliff, which outlines the face of the scarred Indian brave of other days is a small cave which is known as Indian Head Cave. It is merely a small crevice in the limestone layers and goes back only a few yards. From the same ledge which forms the opening stones for the cave floor is a peculiar opening which climbs upward through a cavern, and opens to t he light again, about twelve feet further up the cliff face.

The botanic interests of the place are worth nothing. A forester in going through Spring Pork close by said that hec ounted over sixty species of trees in a half an hour. Mrs. F. May Tuttle, locally known as the Plant Woman and the discoverer of Indian Head Bluff, said that the colony if purple turtle-head (chelona glabra), which all botanists say is pink or white, only, is only a little way down the stream. On the opposite side of the Cedar, too, and near the purple turtle-head, is a colony of the gray or yellow birch which is so very rare in this part of the United States.These rare birch trees are located on the steep cliffs of the river, having been left there when the glaciers retreated from Mitchell county, thousands of yars ago.—H. Clark Brown in the Iowa Magazine.

SHARP SILAGE KNIVES PAY

Reduce Power Requirement—Terrific Speed Not Essential.

Dull knives in a silage cutter, according to experiments at the agriculture engineering department, Iowa State College, mean a tremendous increase in the power requirement and consequent extra cost of silo filling. It may take a few hours to sharpen the knives, but sharp knives are likely to save many hour of cutting time when the whole crew is considered. Dull knives necessitate the use of a larger engine and even then there would be chances that the feed would not be thoroly chopped up.

In using machines of 14 inch or larger size, the Wisconsin Experiment Station has found that with two men throwing off(as is the usual practice, it was mare satisfactory to run the machine at from 575 to 600 revolutions per minute. When the machine was speeded up to 750 r. p. m. one-third more power was required and the amount cut in one hour was actually decreased, apparently because the men worked against themselves in their haste to keep up with the machine. From both the standpoint of power and efficiency the lower speed is therefore desirble. A test on one machine also indicated that elevattion was not as good at excessive speeds as at more moderate speeds.

The individual banker should be much more than a mere lender of money, much more than a mere collector of interest. More than any man in his community, he has the opportunity to guide the farmer along lines of safe progress and toward substantial achievement. The banker in an agricultural district must know agriculture if he is to loan money to farmers and upon agricultural security. In addition to that, the banker is in touch with the activities of the business world. He has correspondent banks in the larger cities; he must, of necessity for the protection of his own business, look beyond the horizon of his immediate vicinity in order to foresee imminent changes in business conditions. The banker has the opportunity to be the point of contact between the farmer and these many other activities of the business world with which the farmer's business is so closely connected. The field is wide, the opportunity is great, the reward of confidence of one's patrons and neighbors—gained by service in their behalf—is worth the effort.—Walter W. Head, President American Bankars Association.

STRENGTH IN RESERVE

Nation's Financial Resources Mobilized for General Good When Need Comes.

There are more than thirty thousand banks in the United States, largely owned by residents of the cities, towns and villages in which they operate. They receive deposits of coin, currency or credits for the current use of business and for safekeeping, and they loan out these funds at interest to proper and profitable business enterprises, agricultural, industrial or commercial, always bearing in mind the necessity of having on hand, or quickly available, sufficient funds to meet the demands of such customers as desire to make withdrawals.

To meet the demands of such customers and others upon the funds in their care bankers must maintain reserves—in their vaults, on deposit with other banks, invested in securities which command a ready market, or it may be in the form of call loans, payment of which they can demand at will.

Before the establishment of the Federal Reserve System—in 1907, in 1896, in 1873 and many times before—the banks of the nation were unable to assist each other when panic threatened. There was no provision for effective leadership, and co-operative action was out of the question. Bank reserves, carried with other banks which were no less embarrassed, were least available when they were needed most.

Every country bank had reserves in one or more of the larger cities in its section as well as in the great centers of population, and since the correspondent banks paid interest on such deposits they were compelled to loan them out, usually at call. Whenever panic or the growing fear of it led any bank to draw upon its reserves—and panic usually led every bank to do so—the correspondent, in order to meet such demands, was compelled to withdraw the money from active service and the thousands of such withdrawals, aggregating many millions of dollars, only made the general situation worse by restricting essential business operations and in many cases compelling the sale of securities, perhaps at grievous loss.

The direct result in more than one instance was a complete breakdown of the country's banking machinery and a prolonged period of resultant depression in industry and commerce.

The great achievement of the Federal Reserve System has been the massing of the nation's monetary armies. By this means it has rendered financial panic impossible in America and has eliminated the worst features of business depression.

STRAIGHT TALKS WITH AUNT EMMY

ON BEING A SMALL INVESTOR

"It seems to me, Aunt Emmy," said Jane, "that it is rather silly for us to be talking about investments when all we can save is about $500 a year after all our expenses and life insurance are paid."

"You're wrong there. If you save $500 a year you are doing very well indeed, and remember that the insurance you speak of is in the nature of an investment itself."

"Well, I know, Aunty, but somehow investments always seem to mean dealing in lots of money, thousands and thousands of dollars. There certainly can't be many good securities which people with so little money as we have could buy."

"Indeed, there are a number of good investments for the small investor," said Aunt Emmy. "Even if you could only set aside five or ten dollars a month you can be sure of one investment that you can safely make on your own responsibility and that is putting your money in a savings bank, the safest and most conservative way of making it work for you. Even though the interest will be moderate, you will feel safe. Then there are other securities you can buy, but don't buy any before getting sound advice from some trust company or bank. These investments are real estate mortgages, industrial corporation securities, public utility corporation securities, government securities—any one of these securities may be bought on the installment plan. You may pay as little as five dollars a month for them or as much as you want to invest.

"Of course you can never be actually positive that an investment will turn out well. Human affairs are uncertain at best. When you invest money, what you really do is entrust your money to business men to use in a paying business. If your bank gives a good account of the corporation whose securities you desire to buy you are comparatively safe. But never use a cent of your capital for speculation. No matter who comes to you and tells you that a certain stock is going up, that it is a sure thing, don't speculate on it. Speculating in stocks is not for our kind. You'd never believe it, but some people who are supposed to have common sense will mortgage their homes and ruin themselves in wild speculations. The best thing for you is to buy securities on monthly payments."

"Can you do that, Aunt Emmy?"

"Certainly, and if you start to do it you'll soon find that you'll be willing to do without lots of little catch-penny things for the sake of owning a nice comfortable bond."—Anne B. Aymes.

ON MAKING SAVINGS EASY

Helen met Aunt Emmy on the street. "Where are you going, Aunty? May I come, too?" she asked.

"Of course you may, dear. I'm just going to the savings bank with my weekly deposit."

"Oh, Aunty, I didn't know you saved money regularly. I wish I could."

"Anybody can who really wants to," said Aunt Emmy dryly. "It's easy enough if you have some system about it."

"But it doesn't seem at all interesting to go to the bank once a week with just so much," Helen said. "There's no fun in saving that way."

"Nonsense!" replied Aunt Emmy. "It's good fun to see your interest marked up on the book. But if you want an interesting way to save I'll tell you one. You and Maud do it together. You put away a cent for each day of the month. Suppose you begin today. This is the sixth. All right, then, you each put six cents into a little box. Tomorrow you put in seven cents and so on up to the thirty-first of the month. Then you begin again with one cent. The most you will have to put away any one day is thirty-one cents, and you know how easily that goes for candy or some other useless trash."

"Yes, but how much would we save by the end of the year, Aunty?"

"Enough to pay for a nice little vacation or to make a fine Christmas—about sixty dollars, without knowing it almost," Aunt Emmy said.

"Why, Aunty, that is a great plan. I shall tell Maud tonight," Helen said. "If we do it right along at the end of the year we shall have more than we ever had in our lives all at once."

"Exactly—but remember, the main thing is regularity—until finally saving will become a habit," Aunt Emmy said.—Anne B. Aymes.

LESSON IN SALESMANSHIP

Jimmy, the Bootblack, Shows Youngsters How to Sell Shine to Difficult Customer.

When sightseers alight from the Fifth avenue busses on Washington square and begin to look on the environs of Greenwich village, if they pause for a moment they are beset by a band of young boys offering to shine their shoes.

These youngsters show promise of becoming successful business men some day. They never let up on a pedestrian until he either succumbs to their demands or else moves off the square.

Jimmy, a boy about ten years old, is the leader of the crowd. An onlooker one day watched the others with their boxes gravitate around him and seek his advice. He determined to see their tactics with an obdurate patron.

He sat down on one of the benches near by where Jimmy was industriously brushing a pair of shoes. He was not surprised when the boy finished to see him head in his direction, though several boys had already been refused.

"Shine, mister?" Jimmy asked, pausing and dropping his box suggestively.

"Nope, not today," he answered, looking out as though intensely interested in a ball game going on a few feet away.

A few minutes later a string of boys started by him asking the same question. The visitor smiled and saw, glancing toward Jimmy, that the youngster was sending them around one at a time.

Then he came back himself.

"I'll only charge you a dime," he said.

"Nope."

"Well, I'll do it for a nickel, then."

"I don't need a shine, sonny."

"Well, I tell you what I'll do. I'll shine 'em an' if you don't like the job I won't charge you nothing."

And Jimmy grinned and looked around smiling at the gang, several of whom crowded around him to see him do a very excellent job.—New York Sun and Globe.

To Advise Albania.

The council of the League of Nations went to far off Java to choose its representative as financial adviser to the little kingdom of Albania. J. D. Hunger, former governor of Batavia, has been selected by the league to take up the task of setting Albania on its financial feet.

Recent reports of the richness of Albanian oil fields and the rumors that many great international interests are seeking concessions there have probably caused the appointment of a more or less neutral Hollander to this important post. Mr. Hunger has been in his country's official service for many years, and his record in Java commended him strongly to the league.—New York Herald.

CO-OPS SELL A BILLION'S WORTH

According to the 1920 census figures, $721,983,639 worth of farm products was sold through co-operative marketing associations. The greatest growth in co-operative marketing has come since that time, so that it is safe to assume that much more than a billion dollars worth of products are sold co-operatively at the present time. A general survey shows that the larger co-operatives in fruit are handling nearly $200,000,000 worth of business annually. The large scale milk co-operatives do a total business of about $150,000,000 annually, while the tobacco group is doing a combined business of more than $100,000,000 annually. The cotton group has also passed the $100,000,000 mark.

Community Building

Heart Interest Counts in Establishing Home

Too many homes are built merely of wood, concrete, brick and stone when the fact of the matter is you have just a house and not a real home at all.

It is true that these concrete materials are necessary yet it is equally true that it requires more—much more than these—to build a real home.

With the wood and stone and mortar one must mix a liberal amount of careful consideration, personal planning and real heart interest, else you will have a house—not a home.

Build your home on paper first—carefully plan every room, take into consideration the years that you and your loved ones will probably occupy this home.

In the choice of the materials one must be guided by personal preference. If you finally decide that a frame construction is the type best suited to your needs, then by all means that is the kind of house you should build.

If on the other hand, you decide that you prefer some other kind of material, the choice is yours, but it is well to give this angle of the nome you are going to build considerable study and be absolutely sure.

Then comes the type of home or rather the style of the building you will erect. It is a good plan to go around and see the different types, thus getting a fairly good idea as to just how any particular style will look.

When you have done this and finally decided, then go over and check up on all of the details and see if there is anything you have missed or not considered. Get every detail of the new home firmly fixed in your mind—then build, and you may be sure that you will not only have a house, but a home as well.—Indianapolis Star.

Money Expended on Paint Well Laid Out

Paint, says an authority, is an essential factor to sanitary conditions as well as to surface-saving properties. Paint, when used inside and out, will protect a building, prevent deterioration and practically eliminate repair bills. Compared with the value of the property, the cost of the insurance paint gives one is slight.

"You always pay dearly for the painting you do not do," he asserts. "Unprotected surfaces quickly rot, boards split and joints become loose. Rundown buildings sooner or later need repairs, which are always expensive. From an investment standpoint, whatever you spend for painting and decorating always pays big returns. Paint and redecorate—it is the most economical thing you can do. Decorating makes new homes out of old ones.

"Property that is painted and decorated is always worth more because it looks better. From a selling standpoint, a building with a good appearance is always much more desirable than an unkept one. You will be proud of the appearance and the ownership of your building and convinced that the outlay for painting and decorating is money well spent. If you are not satisfied with the interior of your home, redecorating should go a long way toward remedying your feeling."

Turn to Regional Planning

City planning, especially in large cities, sometimes involves tremendous expenditures. It may be described as a big job of replanning and reconstruction. It means correcting past errors, changing things to meet new and unexpected conditions.

A notable example of city planning was that undertaken in Paris in 1853 under the leadership of the emperor Napoleon III, and under the strong hand of Baron Haussmann, says Frederick A. Delano in National Municipal Review.

Regional planning, on the other hand, is planning for the future in the suburbs and the open country. This is the sort of planning that has been carried on so successfully in Europe.

Trees on Highways

The American Tree association predicts that tree planting, especially that along roadsides, will set a new record this year. The enrollment in the association now has reached 72,000, the association announces, and every member is active either in planting new growths or in preserving old ones. The European scheme of roadside beautification might well be followed in this country, where tourists and sightseers travel in far greater numbers than in the Old world. The walnut, for instance, is a vanishing specimen which once was almost as common as the oak. It is a tree with a high commercial value and has few peers for beauty.—Meriden Record.

Canadian City's Boast

Weston, Ont., with a population of but 4,500, has what is probably the best "White Way" of any community of its size in North America. For nearly two miles Main street is now lighted by the most modern street-lighting fixtures. These are placed 110 feet apart through the business section and 180 feet apart in the residential section. These lighting units consist of fluted iron poles with urn-shaped translucent globes at the top inclosing either 350 or 400 watt electric lamps.

Devil Dogs Out on Their Annual Maneuvers

Three thousand United States marines, commanded by Gen. Dion Williams, encamped at Sharpsburg, Md., prepared to restage the historic battle of Antietam of Civil war days on the original battle ground. Some of the devil dogs are shown here shining their shoes before the daily inspection.

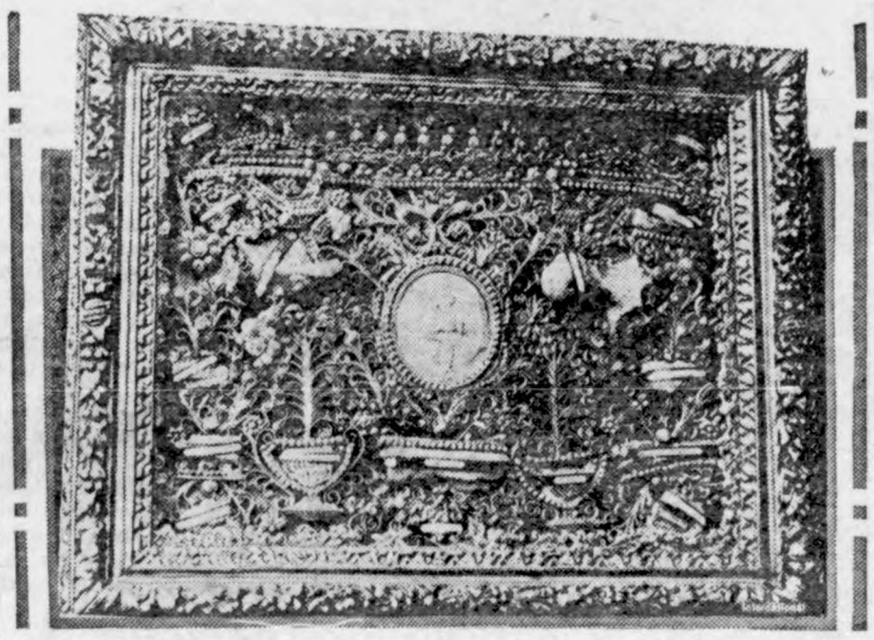
Bringing in Shore End of New Atlantic Cable

The American shore end of an entirely new type of submarine cable, which will transmit signals at several times the speed of any long cable now in existence and which will utilize important new discoveries in electrical science, was landed at Rockaway beach, New York, the other day. The illustration shows the workers bringing in the cable end, and, at the left, watching the operation, Edward Morse Field, whose father laid the first transatlantic cable.

Jew Is Honored by Ku Klux Klan

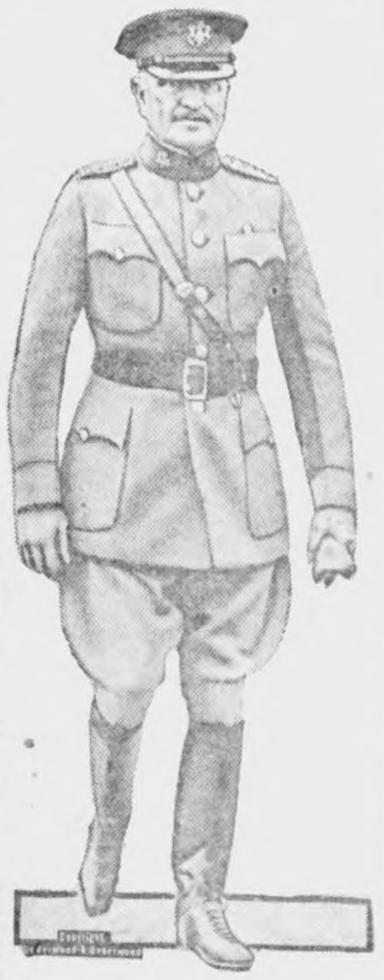
Fifty years ago this week Emanuel Steiner opened a little clothing store in Fairfield, Ill. "Manny" became a leading citizen of the town, a member of the city council, a bank director, for 37 years treasurer of the Masons and for 33 years treasurer of the Odd Fellows. While he was celebrating his fiftieth anniversary in business the other day, with 15,000 persons as guests, forty members of the Ku Klux klan appeared and their spokesman, the Presbyterian pastor, gave Steiner warm praise and a huge basket of roses.

Peronne's Gold Relic Is Recovered



A religious relic of great value, many hundreds of years old and containing the bones of 17 early Christian saints and martyrs, set in a golden case and carved frame and sealed by Pope Clement the Twelfth, has been brought to public light after lying in a London bank for four years. This relic is now in the possession of a former soldier living at Thornton Heath. It is said the relic was formerly in the ancient church at Peronne, where it was on loan from the Vatican. During the shelling of the town in 1918 the church was reduced to ruins and it was then that the British soldier discovered the golden case.

GEN. PERSHING RETIRED



Gen. John J. Pershing, chief of the United States armies, retired on September 12 at the age of sixty-four, is still the "snappy" American soldier that he was twenty years ago. "The typical American soldier" he has often been called, and everything in his bearing typifies just that.

FIND JOHNSON IS ORPHANS' FRIEND

Orphans of soldiers of the World war have found in Dr. O. G. Johnson of Fostoria, Mich., a devoted and far-seeing friend—the sort of friend who makes his interest count for the maximum in good works. Doctor Johnson, who is now manager and medical director of the American Legion Children's Billet No. 1, at Otter Lake, Mich., has been connected with the development of that haven of refuge for the waifs of war since the inception of the idea which found expression in it.

After the Michigan department in 1922 approved the idea, which was conceived by Mark T. McKee, the Seventh Michigan district sought a site for the billet. Doctor Johnson was chairman of the commitete appointed to raise funds for its purchase. Donations of $11,500 were secured and the grounds were bought. The department accepted them.

Through the efforts of Dr. Johnson, who is a state senator, and of Senator Gansser, the latter of Bay City, Mich., a bill appropriating $50,000 to be used by the Legion in construction work was passed by the state legislature in 1923. Building operations were started soon after. The billet was formally dedicated recently, and there are now under its sheltering care 27 children.

Dr. O. G. Johnson.

Doctor Johnson, enlisting on July 12, 1917, was ordered overseas 17 days later. He was placed in command of Saumur Artillery School hospital at Saumur, France. When the hospital was disbanded on February 6, 1918, he was ordered to Base Hospital 103 at Dijon. He returned with the hospital and was discharged on August 26, 1919.

The post of the Legion at Fostoria was organized by Doctor Johnson. He has been active in its work and in that of the state department since that time.

Unique and Impressive Memorial Is Unveiled

Perhaps one of the most unique and impressive memorial monuments ever unveiled was dedicated by the American Legion of Manchester, Massachusetts, recently. The American Legion monument at Manchester does not glorify war; it shows it stark and terrible, but as the crucible from which evolves the dawn of a new and brighter day. This is done through two medallions appearing on opposite sides of the monument. One called "Night" pictures a skeleton hanging on the barbed-wire before the trenches, every line making it seem to swing and rattle as the winds play about it. Beneath the skeleton are the words, "Lest We Forget." On the opposite side of the monument is a medallion called "Dawn." There, brother has met brother with gripped palms while the sun of a new era is illumining the world, and in the clouds, depicted through the forms of naked babes, the spirit of a generation yet unborn proclaims the new era and the ideals for which the World war was fought.

Docked for Lost Time; Will Try to Change Law

At a meeting of the American Legion at Lowell, Mass., recently a movement was set on foot to change the existing city ordinance whereby city employees who observe Memorial day by refraining from work on that day are "docked," to the effect that employees may observe the day without loss of pay. Several veterans, who did not work on Memorial day out of respect to their departed buddies, had their pay "docked" by the city as a result. The Legion sought the advice of Department Judge Advocate Joseph M. Bartlett, who advised that the city acted within its rights under the law, whereupon the local post took steps to amend the law.

To Aid Tuberculosis Victims

Convalescent homes for tubercular veterans in New Jersey will be placed under the direction of a central committee of Legionnaires, if plans under consideration are adopted. Accommodations for tuberculosis victims in arrested stages will be provided at the Huntsberg convalescent home conducted by the Legion, the medical advisory staff has decided.

Mothers of Ailing Daughters, Attention

How Two Mothers Helped Their Daughters by Giving them Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Every mother possesses information of vital importance to her young daughter, and the responsibility for the girl's future is largely in her hands.

When a school girl's thoughts become sluggish, when she suffers the consequences of wet feet, pain, headaches, fainting spells, loss of sleep and appetite and is irregular, her mother should have a care for her physical condition and give her Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, which has proved a reliable aid to nature for just such conditions in so many cases.

First Bottle Helped Her

Richmond, Indiana.—"I am sending this letter to tell you how much good Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound did my daughter. She was troubled with nervousness so that she was restless at night, and then she could not sleep and she was afraid of everything. She could not work as she was not strong enough, and she had to quit school at 14 because she was ill so much. The doctor said she had a nervous breakdown and her system was all run down. She had pains in her right side and through her back, and the medicine she took did her no good at all. I saw Lydia E. Pinkham's advertisement in our paper, telling all that the Vegetable Compound had done for other women, so I said, 'We will try it out and see what it does.' She had not taken the first bottle before it began to help her, and we will always say that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is the best medicine she ever took."—Mrs. E. DARBY, 911 N. 16th Street, Richmond, Indiana.

An Ohio Mother Reports

Columbus, Ohio. — "When my daughter became 14 years of age she was ailing very much. The doctor gave her medicine, but she was very weak, and he always had to write excuses for her as she could not attend the 'gym' classes, and I often had to keep her home from school. I had taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for my nerves and run-down condition, so I gave her three doses daily, and also Lydia E. Pinkham's Blood Medicine. Our friends are surprised to see how fine and tall she is getting and how well she is. I will gladly answer letters and give you a fine recommendation for other mothers." — Mrs. MARIE MIELKE, 814 Ebner Street, Columbus, Ohio.

Over 100,000 women have so far replied to our question, "Have you received benefit from taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound?"

98 per cent. of these replies answer "Yes." That means that 98 out of every 100 women who have taken this medicine have been helped by it. For sale by druggists everywhere.

PEOPLE TALKED ABOUT

"Caveat Emptor," as the Law Books Say

Grand Duke Cyril Vladimirovitch, cousin of the late czar and first in the present legal succession, now in Coburg, has issued a statement on the British loan to the soviet government. He warns that if a counter revolution puts the Reds out the loan will not be paid, not if he heads the new government, and probably not if a republic takes the place of the despotism.

He thinks the Red terror is transitory. He does not know what the succeeding form of government will be. It may be a republic. It will be, he says, eventually, what the people of Russia want it to be, and it will not be an oligarchy imposed by force.

"If I had so much as a ray of hope," he says, "that the impending loan would be used for the restoration of devastated Russia or the succor of her starving people, I should welcome this aid with delight without consideration of the hands of the Russian government through which it passed." He says he has no such hope. He says the loan will be used for the promotion of the Red cause and to give the Third Internationale power in Europe, Asia and Africa.

He warns that it will be repudiated by any government of which he is the head, if Russia returns to the dynasty, and he thinks that no truly national Russian government will recognize it.

Miss B. M. West Honored by University

Miss Bina M. West, internationally known as one of the greatest women fraternalists in America, has had the honorary degree of Master of Arts conferred on her by the University of Michigan. This degree is a reward for her courage in pioneering a woman's insurance institution to success. Miss West was born in Michigan and was graduated from high school at sixteen. She taught school until 1891. She organized in 1892 the Woman's Benefit association, the largest society of its kind in the world. She represented the National Council of Women of the United States at the International Council of Women in Geneva, Switzerland, 1908. She is chairman, child welfare division of Michigan Council, National Defense. She is Republican national committeewoman for Michigan and a member of the Republican national executive committee. Miss West has personally supervised the disbursement and investment in safe municipal bonds of over forty-five millions of dollars representing the savings of provident women for the protection of the homes of this country. She has been since 1895 editor of Ladies' Review, official magazine of the Woman's Benefit association. She is a member of the D. A. R., Eastern Star and Woman's Relief corps and a life member of the Congressional Country club, Washington.

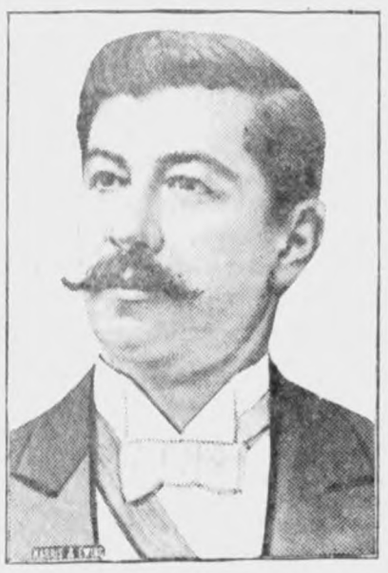
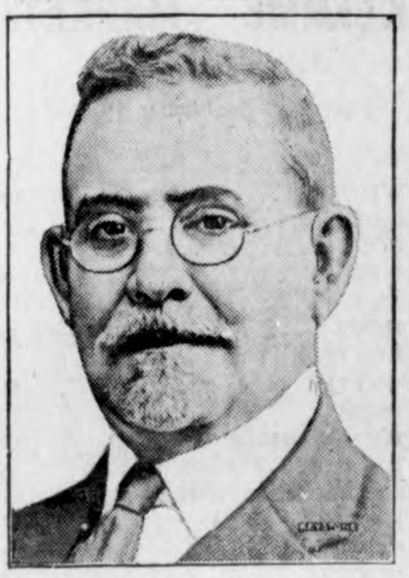
Juan V. Gomez, Dictator of Venezuela



The soundness of the government of Venezuela is based on the faith and trust of the people just as is the soundness of government anywhere. But here it is beyond doubt a faith in the power and continuity of the government of one man. Today this man is Juan Vincente Gomez. Yesterday it was another, tomorrow it may be a yet newer dictator. Gomez has given peace. He has given great business opportunity. He has made politics of the Latin American type unwise and unpopular. He has, in a measure, educated his people. All this, but tomorrow there would be a revolution if there was not apprehension of his power, and today there would be panic if there was not faith in his ability to survive, personally and politically. The menace seems to be only that there will be unfortunate times when he goes, until another dictator can rise in his place.

The comparison of the Venezuela of President Gomez to the Mexico of Porfirio Diaz is inevitable. General Gomez is of a later school. In many ways he is following a wiser course than General Diaz. He has a better constitution, for a dictatorship, than had Diaz. The saying goes in Venezuela that the administration of President Gomez rests firmly on a tripod—the three feet are the sound position of the national finances, the army, and the friendship of the United States.

President Vasquez to Show the World



It is up to Gen. Horacio Vasquez, the new President of Santo Domingo, to show the world that he and his people can govern themselves. Eight years ago the republic was in such a mess that President Jiminez sent out a distress signal to the United States. Thereupon Uncle Sam took control. Now, after eight years, he is getting out, bag and baggage. It cost the lives of many of the United States marines, but in many respects it has remade the country. Santo Domingo now has good roads connecting the principal towns, hospitals, sanitation systems and other modern improvements. There is a treasury department and the foreign debt has been reduced to $13,000,000. A native police force of some thousands has been organized and trained. American methods of education have been inaugurated.

Is Santo Domingo grateful? Probably not. It is a fairly good guess, in the opinion of experts, that Uncle Sam has no real friends anywhere south of the Rio Grande and Key West. Oddly enough, there are Americans, who hold that the United States' occupation has not been justified and that it should also get out of Haiti at once.

WHOLE FAMILY ENDORSE TANLAC AS BEST TONIC

"Tanlac has been our constant friend for years, and my wife and myself and eight children are all enjoying wonderful health, largely due to this medicine," is the remarkable statement of Harry H. Pistole, 310 Archer St., Waco, Texas.

"In my own case Tanlac has done what seemed to be impossible. When I began taking it my stomach was in such a bad fix that I had to live on a milk and egg diet and I was almost a skeleton. I had been flat on my back in bed and under treatment for 18 months and felt that my time was about up.

"After my case had been given up as hopeless and I thought I was beyond redemption a relative put me on to Tanlac, and the result is, I gained 20 pounds, and enjoy as good health as anybody could wish.

"My wife was all broken down in health. But now she weighs 155 pounds, and is strong and well and I am giving Tanlac credit for it. We give Tanlac to the children to tone them up and make them grow, and nobody ever had a healthier set of children than we have.

"Tanlac is certainly the greatest medicine on earth for anyone whose life is wrecked by bad health. We sure do have a great deal to praise Tanlac for at my house."

Quite a number of Klemme folks went to Garner last Friday to take in the County Defense Day celebration. The Klemme Band went up in the afternoon. The day was not altogether what we would call "a howling success." The speaker was very good and delivered a fine address. The only bands in the county to show up were the Klemme and Kanawha bands. Garner could not even raise a band for the celebration and only three or four Garner band boys showed up.

Tuesday J. J. Poort and family, and R. A. Jorgenson and family drove to Joice, Iowa for a visit at the home of Mayor W. H. Wheeler and family. Joice had a fall festival celebration on that day and Mr. Poort and Mr. Jorgenson played in the Joice Band. Mr. H. J. Joice puts on a celebration every year in the fall.

Ben Griemann brought in some fine big plums to the Times Office Monday morning that he had just picked off the tree. The plums that Ben raises are even larger than the Idaho prunes you see in boxes at th stores, so it will give you an idea as to their size. Mr. Griemann has been experimenting with plum grafting for several years now and by next year he will have some nice plums ready for the market. The quality of the plums is also above the ordinary; they are juicy and sweet.

Howard Doyle came from Waterloo Monday for a visit with his wife and baby here, who are visiting at the Tom Rhodes home.

The County Treasurer received the new auto plates for 1925 and John was a busy oy Monday sorting them out.This year he ordered 4200 sets of plates. For 1924 he ordered 3800 sets and only has about fifty left. The new plates are just opposite in color from this year's design, being light background and a black number. Treasurer Suurballe will begin issuing new plates Dec. 1st.

Blessed be the man that knows the number of things which he can afford to let alone, and knowing, is happy.

OME TIPS ON SILAGE CORN

t of Corn Should Be Dented and One-Fourth of Leaves Turning Brown.

Experts are agreed that cornsi- e should be cut when most of the rnels are dented and so hard that moisture can be squeezed out of m and when one-fourth of the er leaves are turning brown. rn cut too green makes dark col- ed sour silage, which is apt to use animals to scour. Futher- re it does not contain as much rishment as corn more fully ma- red.

m one-half to one inch in length the practice recommended in cut- g silage. Cut this small, t he sil- is more palatable, and packs bet thus eliminating air and promot thoro fermentation, essentiol to d silage.

Where a silage making outfit has do the work for many farmers Iowa Experiment Station recom- nds that after the silage has set- for eight or ten days anothe set made and t he silo refilled tothe after removing the top layer of te from the first filling. Where outfit is used only on one farm is an advantage to allow the sil- to settle or a day or two and n continue filling.

ual distribution and packing are ential. By keeping the sides er than the center best results attained because t he sides us- y sttle more since they receiv tramping. Thoro packing a- the sides prevents loss from ding. If silage is too dry to k well, water should be added. fter the silo is filled the silage uld be covered to prevent spoil- By using three or four loads corn or sorghum stalks from ch the grain has been removed suitable covering is made. Oat ff or cut straw may be used, ked with water and seeded with s, which germinate and form a k covering. The top covering uld never be used.

he corn may be used for feeding rposes immediatly after the silo filled, thus eliminating waste and necessity for a top covering. In case it will be several days be- the real silage is reached, be se the corn does not become sil- until it has gone thru the heat- process.

TURRIBLE! TURRIBLE!

One Sunday two lovers went to rch. When the collection was g taken up the young man ex- ed his pockets and finding noth- whispered to his sweethart, "I en't a cent, I changed my pants.' nwhile the girl had been search her bag and finding nothing shed a rosy red and said, "I'm he same predicament."

PICK SEED CORN BEFORE KILLING FROST

Will the farmers of Kossuth county experience a seed corn shortage next spring similiar to the one they had in 1917? Only two things can prevent it—if a killing frost keeps away until the first part of October, or if the farmers will pick their seed corn before the frost.

The light frost which we had the night of September 8th was a warning that we can expect a killing frost most any time. While no serious damage was done over the County in general, certain fields have suffered badly. In the north part of Lottis Creek township entire fielus have already been severly injurd.

"There is no reason why every farmer shoul dnot have sufficient seed corn of good quality next spring," says county agent Maakestad. "Every community has corn that is already dented. This, if picked and stored carefully, will make excelent seed. Corn picked in the roasting ear stage wil grow 100 per cent if planted under good conditions. In this case, however the kernels are so shriveled that it is difficult to use them in the planter.'"

A circular which is being sent out by th farm bureau office this week summarizes seed corn gaspel under the following headings:

Hints on Selection

1. Gather during the last half of September.
2. Choose ears of medium size.
3. Select from strong stalks.
4. Pick ears at medium height.
5. Select from two or three stalk hills.
6. Avoid diseased stalks or ears.

Method of Storing Seed

1. Wire hangers. (made from fencing.)
2. Twine method.
3. Patent Hangers.
4. Lath rack.
5. Wire rack.
6. Nail system (on studdinfs, rafters, etc.)

Places to Store Seed Corn

Desirable.

1. Dry shed.
2. Furnace room.
3. Corn curing house.
4. Attic or heated spare room.
5. Tool room or shed

Undesirable

1. On trees, windmill or fence.
2. Outside of granary or barn.
3. Over grain bing.
4. In buildings where stock is kept.
5. Damp cellar.

EVERY ELIZABETH HAS AN EPIC ALL HER OWN

Ford humorists have struck a "new line" this season.

Instead of passing their witticism along by word of mouth they are preserving them in printed legends on the backs of their flivvers for the edification of those behind them.

Following is a collection picked up on a tour over Minnesota's trunk highways:

"Pray as you enter".
"Left Flat—no Pump."
"I'm Old and Slow now, butI was Fast When I was Young.
"No Chickens Aloud."
"Henry's Handsome Cab."
"Lincoln's Leavin's."
"What Was left of My Old Tin Roof."
"The Baby's Got a Rattle.'
"Tin Talks."
"Dangerous but Passile."
"A Modern Tintype."
"One car of Ten Million"
"Pair o' Dice Lost"
"One Born Every Minute."
"Imagine! Our Lizzie Manhandled."

PASSING THE BUCK

Anxious wife: —Abie have you done anything about that horrible Black Hand letter?'

Abie—Oh, ain't I though. I turned it over to my insurance company. They got $20,000 tied up in me, let them worry.'

OH, WHY SHOULD THE SPIRIT OF MORTAL BE PROUD?

NOTE: This immortal poem was President Lincoln's favorite, and he was fond of repeating it. He never knew who its outhor was, but it was William Knox, a Scotch poet who died in 1825 and whom Walter Scott thought highly of. The poem is one of the sort which bears many . re-reading as the years go by—Editors.

Oh, why should the spirit of mortal be proud?
Like a swift-fleeting meteor, a fast flying cloud,
A flash of the lightning, a break of the wave,
Man pagses from life tohis rest in the grave.

The leaves of the oak and the willow shall fade,
Be scattered around and together be laid;
And the young and the old, and the low and the high,
Shall molder to dust and together shall lie.

The infant a mother attended and loved,
The mother that infant's affection who proved,
The husband that mother and infant who blessed.
Each, all, are away to their dwellings of rest.

The maid on whose cheek, on whose brow, in whose eye,
Shone beauty and pleasure—her triumphs are by;
And the memory of those who loved her and praised,
Are alike from the minds of the living erased.

The hand of the king that the scepter hath borne,
The brow the the priest that the miter hath worn,
The eye of the gage, and the heart of the brave,
Are hidden and lost on the depths of the grave.

Thep easant whose lot was to sow and to reap,
The herdsman who climbed with his goats up the steep,
The beggar who wandered in search of his bread,
Have faded away like the grass that we tread

The saint who e njoyed the communion of heaven
The sinner who dared to remain unforgiven,
The wise and the foolish, the guilty and just,
Have quietly mingled their bones in the dust.

So the multitude goes, like the flower and weed,
That wither away to let others suceed;
So the multitudes come, even those we behold
To repeat every tale that has often been told.

For we are the same that our fathers have been;
We see the same sights that our fathers have seen,
We drink the same stream, and view the same sun,
And run the same course that our fathers have run.

The thoughts we are thinking our fathers would think;
From the death we are shrinking from, they too would shrink;
To the life we are clinging to, they too would cling;
But it speeds for us all like a bird on the wing.

They loved, but their story we cannot unfold;
They scorned, but the heart of the haughty is cold;
They grieved, but no wall from their slumbers will come;
They joyed, but the voice of their gladness is dumb.

They died—ay! they died: and we things that are now
Who walk on the turf that lies over our brow,
Who make in their dwellings a transient abode,
Meet the changes they met on their pilgrimage road

Yea! hope and despondency, pleasure and pain,
Are mingled together in sunshine and rain;
And the smile and the tear, the song and the dirge,
Still follow each other, like surge upon surge.

'Tis the twink of an eye, 'tis the draft of a breath,
From the blossom to the paleness of death,
From he gilded saloon to the bier and the shroud—
Oh, why should the spirit of mortal be proud?

OBITUARY

Memoir of Mrs. Garland Hoffman

This community was wholly unprepared to receive the sad and shocking news of the sudden sad death of the subject of this memoir. As was still the tender morning hour of the day of her death, so was still the ever brightening morning hour of her life growing towards the radiance of the full orbed noonday when suddenly the thread that bound her to this life was snapped.

It was that wistful hour so full of hope and joy and anticipation when a brave woman enters motherhood. How she and hers had looked forward to and made plans for this hour, when suddenly all was brought to naught. And, while we are mute today and fail to under stand we know that the all-wise Father doeth all things well. We know that sometime we shall understand.

Mrs. Lula Lora Newberger Hoffman was born on February 11, 1902 in Ripley Township, Butler County Iowa. She was the oldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Lew Newberger and came with them in the spring of 1915 to make their home in the vicinity of Klemme. Here it was that she grew to beautiful womanhood, attending school to do her grade work and then entered the Klemme High School where she finished the eleventh grade. She graduated an efficient student from the Garner H S. having qualified to teach she taught with visible success ater leaving school.

On March 8, 1921, she was married to Mr. Garland Hoffman. They seemed especially suited to e ach other and their married life was very happy and companionable only to be abruptly terminated after a few short years.

She was a lover of music, and beside having a cheerful disposition, she brought cheer wherever she was

She i s survived by her griefstricken companion, her parents, by three brothers and two sisters, as well as by her grandparents. She also leaves a host of friends who mourn her untimely death.

She died on Sept., 20, 1924, at the a ge of 22 years, 7 months, and 9 days.

Funeral services were held in the Klemme Methodist Church conducted by the pastor, Rev. Gauger. Interment was made in t he Klemme cemetery.

Card Of Thanks

I wish to thank all who so kindly assisted me during my recent bereavement; for the beautiful floral offrings and words and acts of sincere sympathy extended.

OLDEST WHITE CHILD BORN IN IOWA DIES AT ALGONA

Mrs. George W. Duryea Born 96 .. Years Ago at Dubuque

Algona, Sept. 19—Mrs. George W. Duryea, who claimed to be the oldest white child born in Iowa, died here at 1:30 o'clock this morning. She was 96 years old, and was born at Dubuque in October, 1828. Her early education was received in a convent in Dubuque.

She was the daughter of George Kennedy. During the land sales before the Civil war, the family moved to Osage where she was married to G. W. Duryea in 1858, who at that time was driving a stage from Dubuque to St. Paul. They later ran a livery stable there. In 1873 the family moved to Goodell, in Hancock county, then called Amsterdam, and later to Britt. Fifteen years ago they moved to Algona where they have since resided. Five children were born to them: George who died in 1921, James, Mary, Nina and Mrs. Frankt Africa of Kanawha.

The funeral will be held tomorriw afternoon, and interment will be made in the Riverview cemetery.

They say a divorced woman is the shrewdest sort of woman, but then a widow ain't so foolish, either.

HANCOCK MOURNS ANDERSON DEATH

Although a Democrat He Was Supervisor in Republican County

Garner, Sept. 20— Hancock county lost one of its most widely known and respected citizens in the death of Andrew Anderson at his home in Garner Thursday eve Sept. 18 following a second stroke of paralysis.

Few men of foreign birth become most thoroughly Americanized or thoroughly actively loyal in our institutions than Mr. Anderson, and few attain the personal popularity that he earned and has enjoyed in this county for more than thirty-five years. Born in Denmark in 1858, he came with his parents to the United States at t he age of 9, his mother dying the year of their arrival. The family came first to Cedar Falls and after living there for a time moved to Michigan for a few years.

Returned to Iowa

They returned to Iowa when Andrew was 20 and settled on land in the vicinity of Goodell, where thrift and industry brought them a large degree of prosperity. The father died a few years ago, but his second wife, now past 80 is still living, in Red Cloud, Nebr. Andrew Anderson was married to Miss Mary Anderson in 1884, and until five years ago they lived on one of their farms near Goodell. At that time they bought property on the Main street in Garner, opposite the courthouse, where they have lived ever since.

Besides the widow three sons live; Elmer, Verdie and William J., all now farming near Goodell. A son and a daughter died in infancy. An own brother of Mr. Anderson of Mr. Anderson is living in Mass. Four half-brothers and Four half-sisters also survive; Mr. Elmer Anderson of Forest City, Mrs. Christine Hanson of Bancroft, and six others whose homes are in Nebraska and Colorado.

Elected to Office . .

Andrew Anderson, in addition to being a most successful farmer took a large interest in public matters, and his great personal popularity brought him recognition in county affairs. Although a democrat in politics in a strongly republican county he was elected and twice re-elected to the county board of supervisors, serving the county faithfully and well for three terms, and maintained a reputation for absolute integrity, careful admistration of county business, and devotion to t he interests of the tax payers who had given him their confidence. He was known and loved all over the county for his great friendliness and unfailing courtesy, and his personal friends were only limited by the number of his acquaintances. For more than 20 years he had been an honored member of the United Brethern church in Goodell was for many years an office-bearer, and was one of the most liberal supporters when that church erected its present building.

Flattery Does It

"'Waiter; there's a hair in this soup!'

"'Why, so there is, sir. I'm very, very sorry. But don't you think it must have fluttered off your head, sir?'"

Thousands Have Kidney Trouble and Never Suspect It

Applicants for Insurance Should Use Swamp-Root

Judging from reports from druggists who are constantly in direct touch with the public, there is one preparation that has been very successful in overcoming these conditions. The mild and healing influence of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root is soon realized. It stands the highest for its remarkable record of success.

An examining physician for one of the prominent Life Insurance Companies, in an interview of the subject, made the astonishing statement that one reason why so many applicants for insurance are rejected is because kidney trouble is so common to the American people, and the large majority of those whose applications are declined do not even suspect that they have the disease. Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root is on sale at all drug stores in bottles of two sizes, medium and large.

However, if you wish first to test this great preparation, send ten cents to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., for a sample bottle. When writing, be sure and mention this paper.—Advertisement.

Much Honey in Tree Trunk

In taking up a big black oak on an Orwell (Vt.) farm, A. A. Saunders and his son Dorus found a cavity in its trunk twenty inches in diameter and six feet in length completely filled with honey. Two hundred pounds were taken from the tree, and the owner of the farm, Frank Charlton, was present when the bees were transferred from the tree, and received for his share two ten-gallon milk cans full of honey.

Pencil Marks 45 Years Old

Pencil marks on a beach pole at Cape May, N. J., supposedly written June 28, 1879, have weathered the elements without fading, according to Frank Digman there, who recently discovered the old pole when tearing down the tower of a beach bathhouse. The rains, sun and wind of 45 years have hardly dimmed the writing, he says.

President's Greeting

A message of greeting from President Coolidge to members of the 28 posts of the American Legion in the District of Columbia as representative of the Legion's membership in probably every state, was read at the opening of the sixth annual convention of the District department of the Legion recently.

The president's message stated in part; 'In their intimate contact with government agencies dealing with the great national army of former service men, the Legion has shown uniform loyalty and readiness to sustain the efforts of the government."

WILL SPEED WORK TO AID VETERANS

Decentralization of the United States veterans' bureau, whereby medical claims and compensation awards affecting thousands of World war veterans can now be made in the field, has been ordered by Frank T. Hines, director of the bureau, in a general order calling for the organization of fifty-one regional offices in as many cities where the bureau's activities are greatest.

The Reed-Johnson veterans' bill, sponsored by the American Legion and passed by the last congress, called for the decentralization of the bureau's activities. It was pointed out by Watson B. Miller, chairman of the American Legion national rehabilitation committee, in framing the Reed-Johnson bill, that the regional system of handling disabled veteran cases would speed up the work and enable the bureau to pass upon more cases than could otherwise be handled.

Decentralization will supplant the "paper rating" system, which has been in vogue, whereby a veteran's case is passed upon without the claimant ever having had personal contact with the bureau officials deciding his claim.

The new regional offices will be charged with the proper conduct of the bureau's business in the territory for which they are designated and will have, subject to final action by the director in case of appeal, the following powers:

1. Examining of claimants and beneficiaries, the making of medical ratings and awarding of compensation claims.

2. Granting of vocational training, supervision of training and obtaining employment opportunities.

3. Granting of medical, surgical, dental, hospital care, convalescent care and necessary and reasonable after-care.

4. When specifically authorized, making payments for compensation, training allowance and for administration expenditures.

Frank Luke, Jr., Post Bears Name of a Hero

The Frank Luke, Jr., post of the American Legion of Phoenix, Ariz., bears the name of a hero of the World war, according to a letter which was received by the post adjutant recently from a comrade of Luke's at the front in France. The letter read:

"I have just learned that your post is named after a brave man who was in my outfit in France. Frank Luke was one of our flying officers, while I was merely a mechanic, but we rejoiced in his victories and shared in them in our modest way. When these boys failed to return to our aerodrome by dark, we spent the better part of the night shooting flares to direct them to our field. Then when the news finally reached us that Frank Luke had had a forced landing behind the German lines, that rather than be made a prisoner, he stood the Huns off with his automatic until a Mauser bullet struck him low, we suffered a glorious sorrow and enshrined Frank Luke in our hearts and memories. Gentlemen, I wish to ask if it would be possible to admit to your organization and post one of Frank Luke's humblest admirers.

Sincerely,
JOHN B. DAVERON,
Ray, Ariz."

Legion Men Help Fight California Forest Fires

The American Legion and the Native Sons of the Golden West recently were active in fighting the forest fires that have been ravaging California's timber lands and redwood forests. James F. Collins, department commander of the Legion, and Edward J. Lynch, grand president of the N. S. G. W., in a communication to the people of the state, declared:

"The magnificent forests of California must be preserved. California's redwoods are making their last stand against the encroachments of civilization on the oldest living things on earth. They have thrived on California soil, but their existence is now menaced. All loyal Californians must aid in this great work, and, if we can secure the co-operation of the army in patrolling the forests, timber areas and national parks to prevent the spread of fires and reduce the menace of disastrous conflagrations, we will indeed be fortunate."

Name Squares for Heroes

Carr Heads New U. S. Foreign Service

The appointment by Secretary Hughes of Wilbur J. Carr, director of the United States consular service, to be assistant secretary of state marks a reorganization of the consular service under the Rogers act. The act is designed to take service of the United States abroad out of politics and establish a permanent professional foreign service ranking in ability with any in the world. The foreign service of the nation now constitutes a profession just as much as the army and navy. Meritorious service will be rewarded by promotions and increased salaries. It is said that one diplomatic and thirty-one consular officials were retired as having reached the limit of sixty-five years; five diplomatic attaches who have been carried on an unassigned list were not reinstated; eight diplomatic and thirteen consular officials were demoted as failing to reach the desired standard of efficiency, and two names were removed by resignation. The act abolishes as separate entities the diplomatic and consular services and creates instead the foreign service.

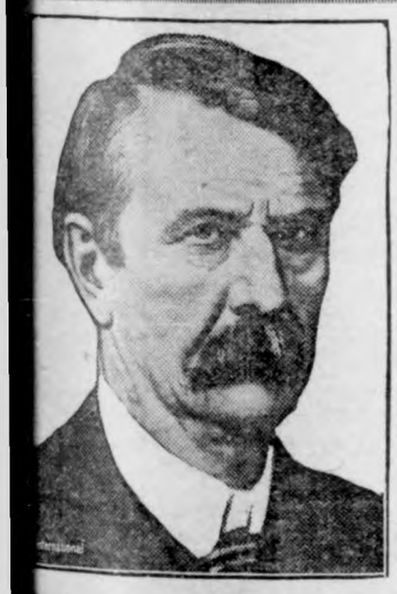
Wilbur John Carr was born in Ohio in 1870. He took the collegiate degrees of A. B., LL. B. and LL. M and was admitted to the bar in 1901. He was a clerk in the State department, 1892-1902, and became director of the consular service in 1901. So his new position was earned by 32 years of service. He is a member of various organizations and clubs and has contributed to various learned publications.

Minister Smiddy From Irish Free State

A mild-mannered, cultured professor from Cork university, appointed minister plenipotentiary from the Irish Free State to the United States, is credited with symbolizing a long step forward in the history of the world. The appointment of Prof. Timothy A. Smiddy means that Ireland will have direct access to the government of the United States, and have the sole direction of diplomatic matters exclusively pertaining to the Free State. She thus embarks, for the first time, on the sea of foreign affairs. Her flag will fly in Washington over her own embassy, a symbol to all the world that she is no longer a subordinate province, but a nation with international recognition. As for Professor Smiddy himself, he is already well known and well liked in the capital. He has been in Washington since August, 1922, when he was appointed by Michael Collins to promote trade relations between Ireland and the United States. The appointment of an Irish Free State minister is an important event in Washington diplomatic circles, since it probably means that Canada, Australia, and possibly South Africa, may follow the lead of Ireland in having their own representatives, independent of the British embassies in foreign capitals.

Minister Smiddy was born in 1876. He has been carefully educated and is an accomplished linguist and musician. His wife is a painter of talent. There are five children, still in their teens.

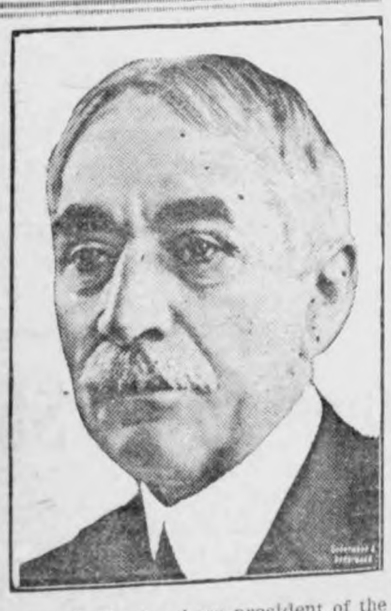
George Lane of Bar-U, Wales' Neighbor



Here is a portrait of George Lane, the "Alberta cattle king" who was largely responsible for the purchase by the prince of Wales of his E-P ranch. Lane is American by birth and owns the Bar-U ranch, one of the largest in Canada. Lane has something like 100,000 acres and his horses are almost without number. He is noted as a breeder of Percherons and Clydesdales.

In 1919 the prince of Wales spent sixty days in Canada, making an official tour of the entire Dominion. He visited George Lane on his Bar-U ranch. He was so pleased with the country round about that he told Lane he'd buy, if he could find the right kind of ranch. Lane told him he had sound sense and offered his good offices. These resulted in the purchase of the Beddingfield ranch of 4,610 acres, adjoining the Bar-U. Professor W. L. Carlyle, a native of Canada and a member of the staff of the agricultural college at Ames, Iowa, was engaged as manager of the ranch, which was renamed the E-P ranch, the initials being an abbreviation of Edward Prince. The ranch is about forty miles south of Calgary and twenty-five miles from High river, on the Canadian Pacific railway. It has been very successful.

E. A. Bancroft of Chicago Goes to Japan



Edgar A. Bancroft of Chicago has been appointed ambassador to Japan, to succeed Cyrus E. Woods, who resigned after passage of the immigration law with exclusion causes against Japanese. Mr. Bancroft has not been active politically, although he is a consistent Republican and was a Presidential elector in 1888.

He was born in Galesburg, Ill., in 1857 and after graduating from Knox college and Columbia law school practiced law in his native city, going to Chicago in 1892, where he became solicitor for the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe railway and later acted in a similar capacity for the Chicago & Western Indiana. From 1907 until 1920 he served as general counsel for the International Harvester company. He is author of "The Chicago Strike of 1894-95," "The Moral Sentiment of the People," "The Foundation of National Greatness," and "The Destruction or Regulation of Trusts." He has been president of the Illinois Bar association in 1910 and the Chicago Bar association and was president of the Illinois Bar association in 1910.

Reports were current that following the resignation of Mr. Woods, the United States government made informal inquiries at the Japanese foreign office to find out if Dr. Jacob Gould Schurman, now minister to China, would be acceptable in Tokyo. It is said that the Japanese government was not enthusiastic about Dr. Schurman because of his activities.

Believed All Had "Double"

It was a commonly accepted belief among the early Egyptians that every man, gentle or simple, was born with a double personality. They were taught that a second self, or "Ka" was created with him, and that this Ka represented him in the spirit world throughout his life. When death came, the Ka was free to wander at will. If food and drink were not furnished for the Ka, then it would wander about in search of it. A portrait-statue of the deceased was always made so that the Ka might recognize the home prepared for it. The Ka of Tutankhamen has frequently been mentioned of late. A photo shows a Ka statue carved a thousand years ago, and accounted the finest known example of ancient Egyptians' sculptural art. The face and figure are of wood; the eyes are of quartz and rock crystal, with eyelids of bronze.

HARVEST ONIONS NOW

Crop Should Be Out of Ground and Drying in Crates

It is time for the onion crop to be harvested. Onions should be out of the ground now, but not laying on top of the ground, as is the custom with some growers. Onions may be left in the field to dry, but they should be put in slatted crates three or four inches deep.

The horticultural department, Ia State College, recommends that the crop be put in crates and left in the field till the tops fall off. Tar paper or other covering should be used to protect the crop from the dew and the rain, however.

LAWYER MADE LEGION LEADER

James A. Drain of Washington, D. C., Elected Commander at St. Paul.

St. Paul, Minn.—The most important national convention in the short but dynamic history of the American Legion came to an end shortly after James A. Drain, Washington (D. C.) attorney, had been elected commandant for the coming year. The new skipper was made a unanimous choice before the first ballot had been counted. Over 40,000 veterans attended the convention.

Jim Drain has only one slogan, "For God and Country," in his manner. For God and country in peace time, just as the Yanks were for God and country in 1917.

Drain is a picturesque figure. His right hand is missing. It was shot off in an accident while he was hunting. Despite the handicap, Jim Drain went overseas with the Yanks. He was the only man in the great army who had but one hand. He's been a buck private, and he's been a brigadier general.

"What work is ahead of me?" he asked. "My whole mission can be told in three words, 'For God and Country,' the first words of the preamble of the legion's constitution. For God and country without partisan politics, without intolerance in religion, making the care of the disabled comrade our first concern. Second, care of the orphaned children of our fallen comrades.

"We're going to make one of our big labors the getting out of the voters on election day."

Commander Drain is fifty-four years old. He was born in Warren county, Illinois. He will move to Indianapolis shortly.

When George Berry of Tennessee nominated Father Joseph Lonergan of Durand, Ill., a Protestant department chaplain seconded, saying, "Hell will hear Lonergan and upon hearing will tremble." Indiana put up the name of the Rev. Stewart Long, but withdrew it, and Father Lonergan was unanimously elected.

Father Lonergan went overseas. He was in the Eighth division, later with the Twentieth engineers, and finally with the Three Hundred and Forty-third infantry. He saw the fire and the slaughter in the Argonne forest and was near the buddies in other battles.

A resolution was passed creating a peace committee and instructing it to take up the matter of everlasting peace during the coming year and to make a report at the Omaha covention next year.

Woman Believed Slain by Convict She Befriended

Hunn, sixty years of age, was found murdered on the threshold of her home by the owner of the Bungalow court in Pasadena, in which she lived. Mrs. Hunn came to Pasadena from Chicago about a year ago. Her father is said to live in the Illinois city. Mrs. Hunn's eight-year-old adopted daughter, Virginia Hunn, told the police a man who dined with her mother later quarreled with her, struck her several blows with a hammer and then shot her. Police announced they are seeking Harry Conners, forty-five years old, an ex-convict befriended by Mrs. Hunn while she lived in Illinois, as her slayer.

GEN. LU ABDICATES WHEN ARMY REVOLTS

Chinese General Flees From His Provisional Capital.

Shanghai. — The Third Chekiang army has revolted, General Lu has abdicated his position as tuchun of Chekiang and Shanghai is threatened by the Kiangsu troops. All these developments took place in a few hours. The Third army of General Lu had been left in Chekiang province to defend it against Fukien troops and when the revolt came General Lu abdicated and fled his provisional capital, Hangchow.

He arrived in Shanghai with two battalions of loyal troops and his agent explained that his abdication came as a result of an agreement with Fukien and Anhwei provinces, whereby the two provinces agree not to attack Chekiang in return for his abdication. The final battle between the Chekiang and Kiangsu armies will be in the Shanghai district.

General Lu was told that the revolting Third army had joined the troops of Fukien province and the combined army was marching on Hangchow, his former headquarters. Lu himself declares the revolt was caused through bribery of his forces by the Kiangsu forces.

U. S. STEEL QUITS PITTSBURGH PLUS

Decides Not to Fight Trade Body's Order—Public Sentiment a Factor.

Washington.—Compliance with the order of the federal trade commission abolishing the Pittsburgh plus system of quoting prices of rolled steel products was announced by the United States Steel corporation.

A formal note of compliance was filed with the commission by the corporation and its various subsidiaries, which were respondents in the case.

In taking this action the steel manufacturers abandoned their original intention to carry the case to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals and thence to the Supeme court of the United States. In the notice of compliance it is stated that the validity of the order or the jurisdiction of the commission is not admitted.

The inference given is that public sentiment against the continuance of the system under which prices have been quoted on a Pittsburgh basis plus freight from Pittsburgh to destination, even when shipments are made from a less distant point, has become so strong as to make it useless to continue the fight further.

The action of the steel corporation brings final victory to the middle western interests which for five years have fought for the abandonment of a practice which they held to be a discrimination against consumers throughout the West and South.

The commission issued its order nearly two months ago. The period of sixty days given the respondents in which to give notice of compliance would have expired on Saturday.

Western farmers will be among the beneficiaries of the order. It was said the practice added $30,000,000 to the annual cost of steel products used in eleven western states.

Chairman Huston Thompson of the commission said he was greatly pleased with the action of the United States Steel corporation and other companies in the case.

OPERATION ADVISED FRIEND SAID "DON'T DO IT!"

Try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound First. Proved Good Advice

Chicago, Illinois.—"Just a few lines to let you know what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound did for me. I was married going on for three years, and went to a doctor and was taking treatments twice a week for pains every month. I used to lie in bed three or four days with them and the doctor would call and inject something into my arm to put me asleep so I would not feel the pains. At last she said I would have to be operated on if I wanted any children. Well, I just happened to go to see a friend with her first baby and I told her I was going to the hospital, and she said, 'Don't do it! You go and get a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and you won't need any operation.' So my husband got me a bottle right away. Now I have two lovely children. Believe me, I recommend the Vegetable Compound to any woman I know has any kind of female trouble. It has helped me and a lot of my friends."—"Mrs. A. McANDLESS, 1709 S. Morgan St., Chicago, Ill. LORD GEORGE

SYNOPSIS.—Thrown from his auto in a New York village, a man is carried unconscious into the home of a Miss Edith Grant. A doctor discovers he has been shot, fatally. Consciousness returning, he babbles of "millions." He begs that Henry Archman, millionaire resident of the vicinity, be sent for, declaring he has important papers for him. Archman cannot be reached by phone, but word is sent that his secretary is on the way. A man announcing himself as Archman's secretary, Akin, arrives, talks with Morbach, and leaves with a package he gives him. Morbach dies. Archman's arrival, with his secretary, reveals that the man posing as Akin is an impostor. Archman denounces Edith Grant as a girl endeavoring to snare his son Harry. Archman, it appears, his millions made in Chicago, has yielded to the importunities of his family—his wife, daughters Nellie and Bessie (seventeen years old), and son Harry—and moved to New York in an endeavor to gain recognition by the Four Hundred. They have not succeeded. Mrs. Archman is bitter over her failure, particularly mourning the fact that she has not been "taken up" by a Mrs. Van Kull. Archman orders Nellie to get ready for a long journey with him. He refuses to reveal their destination to his wife, declaring it is "not his secret." Nellie tells Bess she is in love with James Carr, a youth working on Archman's ship, El Rio. She gives Bess a message for him. Archman and Nellie depart. Harry tells Bess of his determination to marry Edith Grant. Mrs. Archman receives a map, with the explanation that it was among Morbach's papers, and suggesting she forward it to Mr. Archman. Lord George Caruthers, traveling Englishman, arrives at the Archman home, by invitation.

CHAPTER V

A Message Received.

Three days after Archman's abrupt arture with Nellie, Mrs. Archman Bess were sitting at the breakfast e. The murder of Morbach had ted a sensation. Reporters in es had descended upon the Arch- home and, failing to obtain inter- s with any of the family, had built ring fabrics of surmise on the unealable fact that Mr. Archman and e had left the country abruptly, ediately after coming from the e of the crime. The inquest fold and the three Archmans, and as well, had been obliged to ap- and testify. None of them could any information as to the murder f, but Mrs. Archman had been pelled to admit that the sudden deture of Mr. Archman and Nellie been due to it. Her assertion that did not know the wherefores of situation, nor even the place for h her daughter and husband had out, naturally added to the interest e case. The coroner, urged on by newspapers, went beyond all reable bounds in his questionings, drove Mrs. Archman to the verge collapse.

e was much more merciful in his mination of Miss Grant; that young being an actress, the papers were h less desirous of advertising her. ing as to her relations to Harry man came out. Henry Harrison, had played so important and yet, ll appearances, so casual a part in events of the evening, had disaped utterly; perhaps—so said the rs—merely to avoid annoyance perhaps for some more significant n. The pretended secretary had disappeared, leaving no trace.

ide from these annoyances, each e three Archmans had much to y them. Mrs. Archman had heard ng from Nellie and had received one brief note from her husband, that one, dated at New York, y declared that he had seen Cap- Bunker and had given him his or- and that he and Nellie were t to leave town and he would write again, "to avoid giving ination of his movements to possible ."

e intimation that he might be hed and followed was naturally comforting, and Mrs. Archman was glad that the letter came after conclusion of the inquest, so that had not been compelled to mention the coroner. Moreover, she was ying over both Bess and Harry. Nellie's departure the girl's re- about "splendid Americans who their way by their own efforts" d naturally have ceased to trouble Unfortunately for her peace of , however, Bess took it up and ed it constantly, with the vague tion of smoothing Nellie's way in of necessity, until Mrs. Archman to believe that it was Bess and Nellie who had fallen in love with or man.

en, too, she had sounded Harry his inamorata, and had received ve replies that added to her . Her whole world was crashing d her.

s, too, had her troubles. Her se to Nellie to visit the El Rio see Carr had seemed simple gh when she made it, but had so urned out to be beyond her power p. The rush of reporters and deves and the suspense of the inquest taken up every available moment. when this was over Mrs. Archhad thrown up her hands in ement when Bess proposed a visit ahip. "Good heavens! What are you thinking of, Bess?" she cried. "Haven't you seen the El Rio enough to last you for a while?"

Bess hesitated. "I want to see if Captain Bunker can tell us anything about father," she said, uncertainly.

"Well"—Mrs. Archman considered—"we'll go as soon as all this excitement is over."

Harry Archman, like his mother and sister, was uneasy and apparently bewildered. Whether this was because he had taken his father's warning to heart or because of some other cause, did not appear.

Certainly all three were gloomy enough—so gloomy that Bess was moved to protest. "Gracious!" she cried. "Cheer up. The worst is yet to come! We aren't all dead yet. Cheer up, or I'll begin to cry, too! Cheer up!" She looked at her mother.

Mrs. Archman dabbed at her eyes. "I ca-can't!" she burst out, and rushed from the room.

Bess looked after her with a sigh. Then she looked at Harry. "Poor mumsy!" she murmured. "It's tough. She can't get into society. Lord George won't visit us now. Dad and Nellie have gone away, nobody knows where. And you—say, young man, you'd better own up. I know you've done something awful. Mother said 'ssh' when I asked her what it is. What is it? 'Fess up!"

Harry glared at her. "Don't be rotten, Bess!" he begged. "I'm in a hole."

Bess softened instantly. She was very fond of Harry. "What's the matter, old boy?" she asked. "What's wrong? Tell Little Sunshine."

"Everything's wrong—awfully wrong. And the worst of it is I don't know just what is wrong. I know some of it, of course, but—"

"Well?"

"You know Edith Grant?"

"Edith Grant! Of course I know her. I've not been deprived of my ears during the last few days, have I? Of course I know her. But I don't KNOW her."

"Well, I do! I've known her six months. And I'm going to marry her."

Bess' eyes widened. "But Harry—" she began.

"Yes; I know," the boy broke in. "For goodness' sake, don't start to preaching. I've heard all the preaching I can stand, from father and from mother. Edith is just as good as gold, and I am going to marry her, I don't care what anybody says."

"Good gracious! First Nellie, and now you—"

Harry did not notice the reference to his sister. "Yes, I'm going to marry her," he reiterated. "I've been engaged to her for a month. I've been trying to break the news to father and mother, but I haven't dared, and that sneak Akin has been spying and telling tales, and, oh, it's rotten!"

"But, Harry! You must tell mother at once."

"How the dickens can I?" demanded the boy. "I might have told father when he brought up the subject the other night, but he wouldn't listen, and then that man Morbach had to get murdered and to die at Edith's house, and father lit out and—oh! It's the devil and all!"

Bess nodded. "It sure is," she agreed.

"It was mere chance that Morbach was taken to Edith's house. You know that. He had been shot long before and the accident with the machine took place just in front of her door, and of course she had them bring him in. And when dad found out that she was the girl he had just been reading the riot act to me about, he made up his mind that she was part of the conspiracy to steal the papers. And I can't get him now to try to set things right."

"But why don't you tell mother?"

The boy groaned. "I don't dare. Mother is good, but she's crazy about getting into society and she wants me to marry into it, and now Akin has poisoned her mind, too, and—and—oh!—it wouldn't be any use. Of course, I want Edith to marry me right away, but father threatens to take my job away if I do, and if he does that we wouldn't have anything to live on. If father and mother could meet Edith, they'd like her and everything would be all right."

Bess nodded. "Maybe it would," she acceded. "Something's got to be done, of course. I'll try to think up something."

"All right." Harry jumped up. "You're the best sister that ever was, and I'm sure you'll find a way to help us. Hello, mother!"

Mrs. Archman had come into the room. Her eyes were bright and her cheeks flushed.

"Good heavens!" she exclaimed. "See what I have found in my mail. It was typewritten and I thought at first it was a bill or something. But it isn't. Listen!"

"Dear Mrs. Archman: I inclose a document that I intercepted on its way to your husband the other night. I thought it was something different. I have no use for it, and as Mr. Morbach said it was of great importance, I return it herewith, with the suggestion that you get it to Mr. Archman at the earliest possible moment, by absolutely safe hands."

"There's no signature," said Mrs. Archman. "Now look at the inclosure." She spread a sheet of muddy, blood-stained paper on the table. It was the map of an island, drawn in black, with a dotted red line running up and halfway around it.

Bess stared at it. "It's a map of an island, all right," she said. "But what island? Where is it?"

"I don't know." Mrs. Archman snatched up the paper. "There's no name on it."

"And no longitude nor latitude, either," remarked Harry. "It might be anywhere. I guess father knows. But where is father?"

"Where is he?" Bess laughed scornfully. "I'll bet I know where he is. He's on the way to this island. That's where Captain Bunker is to meet him. Give the captain the map and he'll give it to father."

"Maybe." Mrs. Archman's wits were not quite so rapid as those of her children. "I'll go in and see Captain Bunker right away."

"We'll all go!" Bess made the declaration, instantly and enthusiastically.

Harry nodded assent, and Mrs. Archman agreed excitedly. Before any of them could make a move to start, however, a footman came in with a card.

Mrs. Archman took it. "Lord George Caruthers," she read blankly. "He's come, in spite of all this turmoil."

"Come!" Bess laughed. "Of course, he's come," she exclaimed. "You couldn't keep him away!"

"Well—somebody's got to stay with him."

"Stay with him! Nonsense! Take him along!" Bess laughed excitedly. "Come, let's meet him and ask him. Good gracious! I feel as if I were living in a play!"

CHAPTER VI

Bound South.

Lord George turned out to be a blue-eyed, ruddy-skinned, Roman-nosed, droopy-mustached Englishman perhaps thirty years of age, who said, "Oh, I say!" exactly as an Englishman should. Though perhaps a little astonished for the moment, he seemed to be delighted to visit the El Rio. "Oh, I say!" he exclaimed, when Bess put the question to him. "That's perfectly jolly now, don't you know!" When, on the way down to the city, Bess explained the circumstances, or as much of them as she understood, he seemed more and more delighted. "Fancy now!" he said. "It's mighty exciting—what?"

Bess agreed with him enthusiastically. "Isn't it?" she cried. "Here's the devoted subhero racing to bring the dread tidings to the hero—dad's the hero, of course—and he's murdered on the way and robbed of his blood-bought dispatches. The hero guesses what's in them and races off to what he thinks is the rendezvous, leaving his faithful vassals to follow. Then the thief repents—or does he repent? I reckon he's plotting something, though I don't know what it is. What do you think, Lord George?"

"Really, I can't guess. What could he be plotting, now, Miss Archman?"

"I'm just trying to find out. You see, there's nothing to tell where the island is or what there is on it. We're just guessing what father may know. Maybe—maybe the thief figures that father has gone there and that we will lead him to it somehow."

"You'll have to be jolly careful, won't you? What?" Lord George spoke as if he were interested. His eyes never left Bess' vivacious face.

Mrs. Archman noticed his interest and smiled at Bess so warmly that that young woman, after a moment's stare of incomprehension, giggled outright. "Not this time, mother," she said aloud, impatiently, trusting to boldness to protect her. "I decline to be a meal ticket." Then she spun on their guest. "Mother is greatly interested in charity work, Lord George," she explained. "She is a member of a society that provides meal tickets for the impecunious."

Lord George looked bewildered, as well he might. "Ah, yes! Quite so!" he said blankly.

Either the thief has a conscience—or else he is using the family to find the father. What's your guess?

How Fast They Go

The average man walks three miles an hour, or four feet a second, while a horse trots seven miles an hour, or ten feet a second.

Some people are known by their intentions and others by their works.

ENSEMBLE COSTUME IN FAVOR; FROCKS FOR WINSOME JUNIORS

AT THE beginning of the season it looked as if there were little chance for the presentation of anything new in fall suit and dress modes. In Fashion's court the straight-line silhouette still ruled as favorite and the laws of the Medes and Persians were not more unchangeable. Even so, stylists succeeded in giving to the fall modes a new and important note—the ensemble costume—and it is making a great success. In the ensemble costume the dress and wrap to be worn with it are made for each other. They employ the same fabrics and are closely allied. Each can be worn without the other, but they look best when they are together.

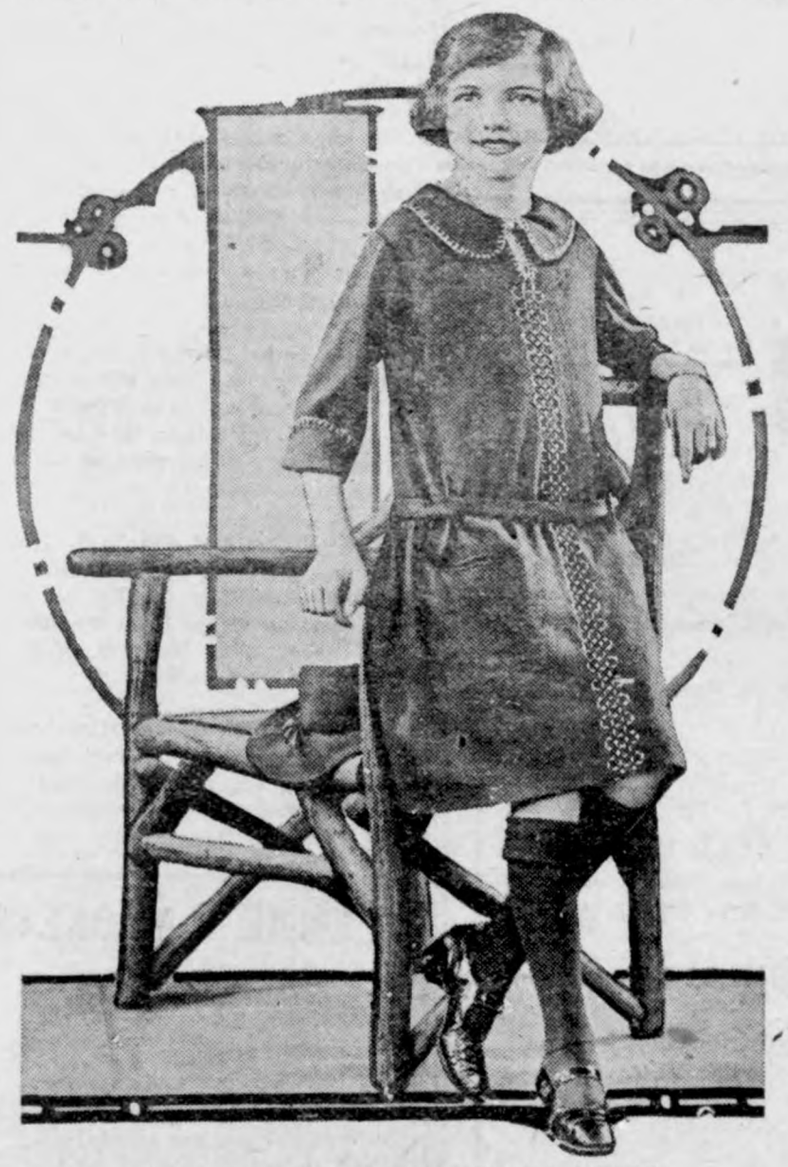
OF FLAMINGO CLOTH AND CREPE DE CHINE

Ever since the debut of this new protege of fashion, designers have been busy ringing changes on it. With the aid of tunics, tiered skirts, apron tunics, band trimmings and other of the season's style points they have established the close relationship of the coat or other wrap, and the dress worn under it. The picture shows a fine ensemble suit of flamingo cloth and crepe de chine in which the one-piece dress has a long bodice of crepe de chine and skirt of the cloth set to the bodice with a piping. The blouse is handsomely ornamented with bead embroidery. The coat, of flamingo cloth, has a novel sleeve with wide puff set in at the wrist. There is a band of Hudson seal in the collar and it looks particularly well with the dark beige cloth—except for this the coat is untrimmed. It is lined with plain crepe like that used in the bodice.

Coats with ensemble costumes vary greatly in length—some of them reaching only a little below the knees, while others cover the dress entirely. They serve to wear independently.

From somewhere near eight to somewhere past fourteen, the female of the species finds herself classed as a "junior." She may graduate out of the "little folks" class at six, or she may belong with the juniors until she is sixteen—it all depends upon the appearance of the young person herself. At any rate, no one reminds her that this period was once libeled as the awkward age—for stylists, that specialize, make clothes for her calculated to express her winsomeness.

It almost goes without saying that her dresses are simple—this is the foundation of their charm, and neatness is next in order. This is essential to happiness and is a part of the juniors' education which it is a crime to neglect. There is plenty of variety in these simple frocks for girls, provided by different sorts of fabrics in varied patterns and by needlework and other finishings, as accessories—collars, cuffs, belts. The dress pictured in navy blue worsted jersey, finished with hand-stitchery, in bright colored silk floss, cannot be improved upon. It has a narrow belt of the material, a little patch pocket at the right side and fastens at the neck with a button and loop. It is pretty in other shades of blue or in brown, henna, or other dark colors.



DRESS OF NAVY BLUE WORSTED JERSEY

There are many plaids in pretty color combinations, that need almost nothing in the way of decoration. A few metal buttons and hand-stitched collars and cuffs of colored linen, to harmonize with the dress, make the prettiest finish for them. Many of them are long sleeved, with narrow girdles of the plaid fabric, that fasten with a metal buckle.

POP CORN GROWER TO GET $15,500 CHECK

LAKE VIEW, — The Albert Dickinson company's elevator here is the scene of unusual activity at this time, a twenty-four hour shift having been employed for the past week or so, with the prospect of another strenous week in sight to handle the pop corn crop.

This is the first time in the history of this elevator that night work has been resorted to. During the day the corn is being taken from the crib and shelled.

Thep rice is $5.50 per hundred, which is 50 cents more than was offered last year, has induced the farmers who have popcorn on hand to clean up on it. Albert Kluver has disposed of the largest amount to the local plant, his transaction calling ofr the delivery of 300,000 pounds to the elevator, which at the above prive will bring him a check for $15,500. Ed Juinn comes second with a check for $9,212.50 for his corn, all of which he has already delivered to the elevator.

"Death Valley Scotty" is still spending his money lavishly. On his ranch in grape-vine canyon, Nevada, he has buit a large concrete hotel, luxuriously furnished, but rarely a guest stops with him. Now he is building two large hangars for two 448 horse power airplanes to coust several hundred thousand dollars. Mules are a hobby with him, and he has palatial stables for 100. "Scotty" came into national prominence about 18 years ago when he emerged from Death Valley loaded with gold, ordered a special train to take him from Los Angles to Chicago, and scattered his money like a drunken sailor. No one has been able to locate his gold mine, hidden away in Death Valley, which is well named.

START SPRING FLOWERS NOW

Small Home Garden May Be Started Before Cold Weather

Every home lot has in it a few nooks and corners which are excellent places for the planting of tullips, hyacinths, narcissi and other spring flowers. The nominal cost of many of these bulbs should encourage home gardners in starting a few spring flowers before the cold weather puts an end to planting operations.

A specially prepared formal garden for the culture of bulb plants for the average home in not only expensive but is a less desirable way of planting the spring flowers than merely placing them here and there between shrubbery in clumps, singles, or pairs, says Professor E. C. Volz, specialist in floriculture, Iowa State College. Anyone can plant bulbs in this manner; the more in formal the better. Use early and late varieties to insure a sucession of bloom, Scatter crocus, snowdrops and syllas along the borded of plant ings, walks or drives and on the lawn under the trees.

Bulbs will grow satisfactorly in any well drained soil. Well rotted barnyard manure is the best fertilizer. Avoid the use of fresh horse manure. If well rotted manure is not available, bonemeal may be substituted. Seedsmen or florists are the most reliable sources for securing the bulbs.

Thep lanting depth varies somewhat with the different bulbs and care should be taken to get them deep enough. Hyacinths are commonly planted five inches deep and six to eight inches apart; narcissi, five inches deep and eight to twelve inches apart tulips, four inches apart. When the ground is frozen, cover the bulbs with a mulch of leaves or manure, out remove this in the spring.

After blooming next spring, the bulbs may be dug up and replaced by some annual flowering plants, such as asters or marigolds, or they may be left in the ground, as most varieties are hardy and will remain alive for several years without renewing. Some especially desirable varieties of tulips are Belle Alliance White Hawk, Kaisergroon, Chrysolar, Rose Luisante, Double flowering varieties are Murillotrude, L'Innocence, Grand Maitre and King of Yellows are probably the best while favorite narcissi are Empress, Princeps, Emperor, Golden Spur, Sir Watkin, Barri conspicuous, Poet icus and Jonquils. Now is a good time to plant peonies and iris also.

TOY BALOON NOTE REACHED REACHED MICHIGAN

NASHUA, —A toy baloon purchased by Roy Demro at the Big Four fair on Thursday of that week had a not placed on it by him and turned loose. The past week he reciev ed a letter from Sidney Tealz of Grass Lake, Michigan, stating that his son had found the baloon in the pasture of their farm, five miles from Grass Lake. The letter stated that the letter was found three or four weeks ago, so that it must have been found within two or threes after it was sent from here. Grass Lake is in Washtenaw county, Mich about 60 miles west of Detriot, so the toy baloon traveled between 450 and 500 miles.—Mason City Globe.

Dad Knows

"Experience is what you need;
Get out and see the world!"
When such unsound advice they heed
So many boys are hurled
Defenseless into problems where
They have small chance to win;
Discouragement awaits them there
Before they well begin.

They ought to see the world, oh yes,
But not before they know
Beyond a childish whim or guess
Where it is wise to go.
Boys guided by a father's hand
Thru early manhood days
Wil sooner elarn to understand
Life's many doubtful ways.

Experience they need, and so
I hope they'll talk with Dad
And let him council when to go
And where; he'll be so glad
That his boys ask for his advice.
And time will demonstrate
His friendly tips are worth the price
Dad knows what makes men great!

KLEMME HIGH SCHOOL IN ATHLETICS PAST WEEK

K. H. S. LOSES TWO GAMES IN ONE WEEK

Swaledale Takes Baseball Game and Ministers Basketball Game

Last Friday the local High School team crossed bats with the strong Swaledale team. The game was a good from start to finish and ended with a close score of 4 and 5 in favor of the visitors.

A couple costly errors on the part of Klemme in the first inning gave Swaledale a lead of three scores. During the next two innings Klemme made one and Swaledale made two more.

No more scores were made until the last inning with Klemme at bat. Koerner opened up with a hit which he streched into a three bagger. This got Klemme started but they were unable to overcome the lead Swaledale had made in the first three innings, and the game closed with Klemme one score behind their opponents.

Ministers Beat 17 to 4

Saturday evening the K. H. S. basket ball team played the ministers a game of basket ball. Both teams were out of practice and of course it was not as fast a game as it would have been if both teams had been in training. The ministers were all old players from the Mission House at Plymoth, Michigan, and of course knew the game from start to finish.

The first quarter was a hot one. Neither team had a chance to score once and it was fast. In the second quarter the ministers were able to tally up two baskets making them four points to Klemme's none.

In the second half the ministers came back strong and made eleven points. Patet was the only scorer for Klemme, making two baskets in the last quarter.

We can say hat Klemme did very well against a team of this sort, all though it had never played together for some time, Klemme also was out of shape, not having practiced any this season.

We believe that the local school has some real material for gasket ball this year and ought to make a real showing. All the old team is back again with one exception, and Lemke, Turgasen, and Gibbs will be showing some real stuff. Lets have a real basket ball team this year!

KANGAROO MOUSE FOUND IN MEADOW

Charles City,— A Kangaroo or jumjing mouse, the first one ever reported from this section of the country, was found by F. R. Ayrs on his farm in Floyd county t he past week. This little animal is scientifically regarded as a perboa rather than a true mouse. The body of the one found here was 2 3-4 inches long, while its tail was 3 3-4 inches long and its front legs barely 3-8 of an inch lond, while its hind legs are long and well developed.

Mr. Ayres found it in the hay field and states that it was most interesting to see it jump. It uses only 3-8 of an inch long, while its hind when frightened. The kangaroo or jumping mouse as it is most commonly called in the eastern part of the United States where it is mostly found, is probably the soundest sleeper of any American animal and also the longest. It prepares for its long dormant period by making a warm ball-like nest of grass in a bush or strong weeds. ts color is yellowish-white underneath, and a tinge of yellow on its sides.

SANKE MAKES HOME IN CRATER IN HOT SPRINGS

Yellowstone National Park, Wyo. —"Slim" a five-foot bull snake, has obtained a life-time lease on steam heated living quarters. The abode claimed by "slim" situated in a cave in hot spring crater where the hot water has ceased to flow, but steam and hot gasses still issue through the opening, was discovered by a party of government naturalists, while on a visit here recently.

STILLE'S BARN BURNED TO GROUND MONDAY NIGHT

Building Was Insured; Hay and Some Oats; Two Calves Lost In Flames

BILL A GOOD GUESSER ON TIME TO TAKE OUT INSURANCE

Carried No Fire Insurance Until Six Months Ago

Monday evening at about eight o'clock the barn on the Wm. Stille farm one mile west of town was reported on fire.

The fire was first observed when Donald, son of Mr. Stille was in the basement of the barn milking. He thought it was rather queer that a light was shining from up stairs. He investigated and found the entire upper part of the barn to be a mass of flames. The men succeeded in getting all of the horses out from the ground floor as well as all the cattle in the basement below, except one or two calves that could not be reached in time.

Many Tons of Hay Destroyed

Outside the loss of the barn, the greatest loss was in the hay. The barn was filled from top to bottom with good hay. A small quantity of oats was also destroyed in the fire.

Was Lucky On Insurance

For more than twenty years Mr. Stille had not carried any insurance of any kind on his farm. But somehow or other about six months ago he decided to carry some fire insurance, so that now the loss of the barn will not be so great.

The origin of the fire is not known, but it is thought it started from the hay, as some new hay had been put in a few days before that was a little green, and spontaneous combustion may have started the blaze.

Prompt assistance from neighbors and people from town prevented the surrounding buildings from catching afire.

Mr. Stille desires to thank all who came to his assistance in helping to save other buildings on the farm.

THIRTEEN DANGERS HIGHWAY ENGINEERS SHOULD REMOVE

Engineers of the Bureau of Public Roads of t he United State Department of agriculture, who have made a cose study of the causes of highway accidents in order that Federa-aid roads may be built as safely as possible, have listed the following causes of accidents:

Blind curves and road intersections; sharp c urves on embankments; narrow bridges; sharp convex vertical curves; slippery surfaces; steep grades; narrow road surfaces; low or rough shoulders; steep crowns; sharp curves at bridges and underpass approaches; grade crossings; unsuperlevel curves.

This list takes into account only the dangers which the highway engineer should eliminate, by removing the cause if possible, and if this can not be done, by erecting proper warning signs. A complete solution of the problem can be effected only by building safe roads and educating drivers to use them in a safe way.

SPUD CROP HEAVY—SELL NOW

Iowa Produces More Than Twice Its Average Annual Yield.

Sell the potatoes right away and make a price reasonable enough so buyers will be willing to take them, is the advice offered by C. L. Fitch, truck crops specialist, Iowa State Collge. Growers who wait to dispose of their crops may find themselves competing with a heavy northern yield.

Indications now are that Iowa this year has one of its greatest potato crops with a yield double the average. In Appanoose county a yield of 520 bushels per acre has been reported.

STRENGTH AND ENERGY RESTORED BY TANLAC

Mrs. Darnall Says It Proved Just What She Needed to Build Up Her System.

There are thousands of people in just the condition so graphically described by Mrs. L. H. Darnall, 1021 South East Lacona Ave., Des Moines, Iowa, in the following:

"I wasn't sick, exactly, before taking Tanlac, but my nerves were on ends, my sleep restless and I got up mornings all tired out to begin the day. I had no relish for food and what I did eat caused a feeling of heaviness and depression. My head was achy and I scarcely had energy and strength to even stand a little shopping trip.

"Tanlac proved to be just the right medicine for my condition and now I call it a 'household treasure.' It has given me back my energy and strength and built me up to where I feel just the way I have been wanting to feel."

Tanlac is for sale by all good druggists. Accept no substitute. Over 40 million bottles sold.

BRUSHED WOOL IS IN STYLE; FALL BLOUSES ARE NOW HERE

WHEN it comes to ultra style, much of the new fall knitted outerwear seems to "say it" with brushed wool. Not that brushed wool in itself is an unknown quantity, but it is because of its fascinating knitted interpretations, that we are experiencing new thrills this season. Designers have succeeded in lifting the brushed wool theme out of the commonplace, until today it is the outstanding expression of knitted style distinction.

Part of the scheme of displaying brushed wool at its handsomest is to contrast it with something else. For instance, in case of the effective sweater here pictured, the brushed wool assumes a greater shagginess and attractiveness because of its wide trimmings of fiber silk at collar, hip and sleeves. This mode of finishing is a decorative feature emphasized throughout the brushed wool collections this season. Note, also, the new Russian neckline.

It is a foregone conclusion that the schoolgirl's wardrobe will include a brushed wool sweater in some one or other of the newest jeune fille models. Especially popular is the middy of brushed wool, and long sleeves must it have to be up-to-the-moment in modishness.

These favored middies are knitted in shaggy white with plain knit fiber scarlet trimmings, in buff with blue and the most recent cool weather arrivals stress ruddy browns, cocoa and beige.

If a brushed wool sweater with fiber silk knit details be not chosen, it is only because it has been outrivaled by a fiber silk or rayon sweater reversing the order, by using the brushed wool for its trimming. Brushed wool bandings, collars, cuffs and belts on plain smooth-knit silken garments is one of the ways designers have in setting forth a new fashion. Sometimes straightline knit frocks are elaborated with borders of shaggy knit wool. The fact that such novel effects as brushed wool, also clipped or sheared wool, have come into play this season adds a refreshing note to the styling of present-day knitted outerwear.

In the fall showings hiplength jackets of brushed wool striped in colorful patterns are featured, also fanciful scarfs of brushed wool.

When new blouses for fall began to arrive they brought in their company the tunic-blouse. There is never any question as to the welcome that awaits blouses each season; the overblouse has made a comprehensive success, paving the way for its next of kin, the tunic-blouse, which has already established itself among the new modes for fall and winter.

Overblouses are developed in tailored, sports and formal styles, but the tunic-blouse, so far, confines itself to the dressier types and seems likely to give little attention to any others.

OF KNITTED BRUSHED WOOL

It varies as to length, having grown longer with the advance of the season, and employs all the fabrics at hand for making afternoon or evening costumes—as georgette, brocaded chiffon and other brocades, crepe de chine, velvet and laces. It impresses embroideries, beadings, plaitings into its service for adornment and undertakes all the responsibility of afternoon or evening dress when worn with plain satin skirts. One of the earliest arrivals in tunic-blouses is shown at the right of the picture in which black and white all-over laces are combined with plaited georgette. Edges of the black lace are finished with bindings of black satin

Tunic-blouses and overblouses reveal variety in necklines, with the "V" shaped neck opening, high at the back, a favorite. Convertible collars, which may be worn up about the throat or open at the front, scarf attachments and several styles in high collars are points of interest in autumn blouses.

Crepe de chine continues to rank first among fabrics for making the overblouse, but canton crepe, knitted bengaline, georgette, lace and metal brocades are all represented—the last three for blouses to be worn with the costume suit. Simple models for afternoon are shown in long and short-sleeved designs and are very often trimmed with emplacements of filet lace or narrow val lace edgings—or both. Val lace frills and a lattice decoration of narrow ribbon give a good account of themselves as a finish for the simple and pretty blouse pictured here.

NO NEWS

A whoop-it-up London newspaper publisher was complaining one afternoon that the day had brought forth no news.

"What old adage?"

Dangerous Age

There is a time in the life of every girl when—but this illustrates it.

"YOUNG CARR"

SYNOPSIS.—Thrown from his auto in a New York village, a man is carried unconscious into the home of a Miss Edith Grant. A doctor discovers he has been shot, fatally. Consciousness returning, he babbles of "millions." He begs that Henry Archman, millionaire resident of the vicinity, be sent for, declaring he has important papers for him. Archman cannot be reached by phone, but word is sent that his secretary is on the way. A man announcing himself as Archman's secretary, Akin, arrives, talks with Morbach, and leaves with a package he gives him. Morbach dies. Archman's arrival, with his secretary, reveals that the man posing as Akin is an impostor. Archman denounces Edith Grant as a girl endeavoring to snare his son Harry. Archman, it appears, his millions made in Chicago, has yielded to the importunities of his family—his wife, daughters Nellie and Bessie (seventeen years old), and son Harry—and moved to New York in an endeavor to gain recognition by the Four Hundred. They have not succeeded. Mrs. Archman is bitter over her failure, particularly mourning the fact that she has not been "taken up" by a Mrs. Van Kull. Archman orders Nellie to get ready for a long journey with him. He refuses to reveal their destination to his wife, declaring it is "not his secret." Nellie tells Bess she is in love with James Carr, a youth working on Archman's ship, El Rio. She gives Bess a message for him. Archman and Nellie depart. Harry tells Bess of his determination to marry Edith Grant. Mrs. Archman receives a map, with the explanation that it was among Morbach's papers, and suggesting she forward it to Mr. Archman. Lord George Caruthers, traveling Englishman, arrives at the Archman home, by invitation. He makes a good impression.

Mrs. Archman looked scandalized, d Bess, evidently fearing that she d gone too far and that Lord George ght later guess her meaning, has- y swung the conversation back to hat was, after all, the real topic at me.

The conversation ended only when e auto drew up beside the entrance the Ontario docks, where the El Rio s being put into shape for her yage.

The tide was in and the gangplank s far from horizontal. Bess ran up hastily and looked about her, won- ring if by any chance she might ch sight of the Adonis whom Nellie d described. She did not do so, wever, and before she could look ther the others had followed her.

A tall man in an officer's uniform s moving about the deck, giving ers now and then. He saw the ty and stepped forward. "Good rning, Miss Archman," he said, tak- off his cap to Bess.

ess nodded. "Good morning, Mr. llins," she returned. "This is my ther, Mr. Collins; and Lord George uthers. You know my brother ry, I believe. We want to see Cap- Bunker on particular business."

Collins acknowledged the introduc- s. "Captain Bunker isn't on rd just now," he said. "But I'm ecting him back every minute. Per- s"—he turned to the Englishman—rhaps if Lord George is a navy , he would like to go over the ."

Delighted, I'm sure," remarked Lord rge.

eanwhile Mrs. Archman had been ng up and down the cluttered . "Well," she said, "I've heard all life about keeping things ship- e. This is the first time I was on a ship, and I must say I'll put any faith in the expression . Are things usually this way or you—er—fall cleaning?"

llins looked somewhat startled. he glanced about him and a smile curled his lips. "Well," he "you might call it that. Things adly torn up just now. But we're ight below and we'll be all right ere in a couple of days, when we I'll be delighted to show you ," he ended. "Come this way." urned toward the companionway. . Archman started down the Lord George stood aside to Bess follow. The girl, however, ed back. "I'll be down in a min- Lord George," she said. "I'll just about a bit on deck first."

en Mrs. Archman, Harry and George had reluctantly vanished the companionway, Bess turned icked her way forward over the ucted deck. Close by the cook's she noticed a young man who sitting on the deck laboriously a short piece of plank into a in the rail. He was by no an Adonis, but he seemed to some of the characteristics Nellie had described, and she ed and looked at him until he his eyes and saw her. Hastily umbled to his feet and snatched off his cap. "I beg pardon!" he exclaimed.

Bess' teeth flashed. "You needn't," she answered. "You don't know me. You're Mr. Carr, aren't you?"

The young man nodded. "I can't deny it," he laughed.

"Well, I'm little sister. Big sister gave me a message for you. And I've been wondering whether I ought to give it to you or not."

An expression of sudden intelligence swept over the young fellow's face. "Oh! You're Miss Bess Archman," he said. "I ought to have guessed, though if you don't mind my saying so, you don't look a bit like your sister." His face changed. "You will give me the message, won't you?" he begged. "If you knew how hard these three days have been to me you wouldn't hesitate."

Bess had been staring at him frankly. "I like you," she said suddenly. "Shake!" She held out her hand.

The young man grasped it ardently. "Thank you! Thank you!" he cried gratefully.

Bess' eyes twinkled. "Nellie said to tell you that she was sorry she couldn't come to the ship as she had promised. She said you seemed to have something particular to tell her, and that, if you had, for you to tell it to me and I would send it on."

The young man was evidently thinking rapidly. "I can't say all I would like, even to you." He laughed, with a sudden brilliant smile. "But I will say this: I love your sister and I wanted to ask her to marry me. Just as I was about to speak, she met in my sister's house—"

"Your sister's house?"

"Edith Grant is my sister. That's her stage name. And now your sister has gone, thinking all sorts of things about me, and I can't get to her to tell her, and I don't know where to write."

"I Like You," She Said Suddenly. "Shake!" She Held Out Her Hand.

Bess hesitated. The young man's very apparent misery went to her heart. "Just between you and me," she said, at last, "Captain Bunker has orders to meet father and Nellie somewhere. You might send a letter by him. But remember, it's a dead secret."

"Oh!" Carr's eyes widened. "So that's where—" He broke off, and stared over the girl's shoulder. "Who is that standing with the lady by the companionway?" he asked.

Bess' eyes followed the direction of his. "That's Lord George Caruthers," she said. "Do you know him?"

Carr's eyes grew introspective. "I am not sure," he said. "He looks to me like—er—" He broke off. "Well, maybe I'm wrong," he said. "But he certainly looks like—somebody I know." His expression showed plainly that his thoughts, whatever they were, were not pleasant.

Mrs. Archman's glance, roving about the deck, settled on her daughter and Carr. She flushed, and started instantly toward the two, over the cluttered deck. "Bess!" she called, as she drew nearer.

Bess faced her calmly. "I'm so glad you've come, mother," she said. "I want you to meet Mr. Carr. He's superintending the repairs on father's ship. Mr. Carr, this is my mother, and Lord George Caruthers."

Lord George nodded in friendly fashion. Mrs. Archman, however, glared icily. The temperature had dropped. "Oh, yes!" she said, with a very slight inclination of her head. "You're the carpenter, I believe, Mr. Carr." She glanced at the chips on the deck.

Carr smiled. If he was abashed he did not show it. "I'm trying to be one," he answered coolly, "but I'm not making very much of a fist at it. I'm always smashing my thumb," he ended confidentially.

"Ah!" Mrs. Archman raised her brows. Then she turned her back deliberately. "Come, Bess," she said. "Captain Bunker is just coming on board."

Bess nodded. "All right, mother," she said. Then she turned to the young man. "Good morning, Mr. Carr."

Carr's eyes were perplexed as he stared after the three. Particularly did his eyes follow the broad back of Lord George. "So that's mother's plan, is it," he murmured disgustedly. "Confound the fellow. I know I've seen him before, and it wasn't in England, either. Where the dickens was it?"

As the four reached the gangplank Captain Bunker came up it. "I'm sorry I wasn't on board when you came," he said. "I hope Mr. Collins made you at home."

"Mr. Collins was very nice," responded Mrs. Archman. "But I wanted to see you particularly, captain."

"Certainly. Will you come into the chart house, madam?"

Mrs. Archman nodded and followed.

"Captain," she said, as she took her seat, "where are you to meet my husband?"

If Captain Bunker was surprised he did not show it. "I don't know, madam," he said. "I'm sailing under sealed orders."

"What does that mean?"

"I have a sealed letter, which I am not to open till I get out to sea. I can't tell you where I am going, because I don't know myself."

"Then you don't know whether you are to meet him on an island? It is important that I should know."

Captain Bunker shook his head. "I know absolutely nothing," he protested.

"Very well; then listen to me." Mrs. Archman recounted the events that had started Archman southward, and told of the arrival of the map. "I'm sure this map was part of the stolen papers, and I am very anxious to get it to my husband. I came down here to ask you to take it and give it to him when you saw him. But I have changed my mind since I came."

"Ye-es." The captain did not know what was coming.

"Yes! For reasons of my own, I want to get my son and daughter away from New York. How many staterooms can you have ready for passengers by the time you are ready to sail?"

The captain counted up on his fingers. "Six," he said.

"That will be enough, captain. We will all go south with you."

"But—my dear madam!" Captain Bunker caught his breath. "I can't take you. I have no orders."

"I'm giving them to you now. Mr. Archman did not forbid it, did he?"

"No; but—"

"Very well, then; it's settled. I will take all the responsibility. It will really solve a lot of difficulties, captain. Besides, I'm not easy about Henry. I want to see him and give him that map myself. Yes! We'll join you, captain."

Captain Bunker shook his head. "I'd be delighted to have you, Mrs. Archman," he said. "But I can't take you without orders from the head of the firm. I can't really. If you'll telegraph to Chicago and get them to instruct me—"

"Very well! I'll do it. Meanwhile, get ready for us."

Captain Bunker nodded. He knew when to make a virtue of necessity, did Captain Bunker. "Of course," he agreed. "I'll be delighted to have you all on board, you know. I just couldn't take the responsibility myself."

"I understand. By the way, captain—do all the workmen on the ship go with us?"

"Oh, no! Most of them are carpenters connected with the docks. Young Carr is in charge of them."

"Who?"

"Young Carr. Yonder he is." The captain pointed. "Most of the men are in his charge. We are shipping a new crew, you know, but none of them are on board yet."

"Er—who is Mr. Carr? What do you know about him?"

Captain Bunker looked surprised. "Nothing much," he answered. "He's attached to the yards here. He seems a pleasant young fellow, though a little close-mouthed and inclined to be mysterious."

Will Mrs. Archman's pursuit of her husband fit in with his plans—or frustrate them?

Pressure of Steam

Modern steam boiler practice is catching up with pure science. Some engineers may have remembered at high school or college learning something of what is called the "critical temperature" or "critical pressure" of a gas, the former being the temperature above which the gas might not be condensed at any pressure, and the latter being the pressure when the critical temperature was attained. All this was considered "pure science" or "high-brow stuff" with no application to practical affairs. But the critical temperature and critical pressure of steam are only 706 degrees Fahrenheit and 3,200 pounds a square inch, and boilers are now being used at pressures of more than 1,000 pounds with the tendency toward higher and higher pressures. Many interesting things happen to both water and steam when near the critical point and now practical engineers are beginning to take keen interest in what was formerly thought fit only for laboratory discussion.

Insulin Valuable in Malnutrition

Insulin injected into the blood stream of an undernourished infant will help to utilize the sugar in the food given, Dr. W. K. Marriot of St. Louis reports to the American Medical association.

A malnourished child needs more food in proportion to its weight than normal children, but sometimes the malnourished child lacks ability to take care of all the food it should get. Glucose, the sugar of corn sirup, is injected into the veins along with insulin. Children using this food so strangely taken in, increase in weight, which is not lost later when the treatment is discontinued.

Doctor Marriot used insulin after observing that diabetic patients on insulin treatment often gain weight at a phenomenal rate, even when their food intake is not excessive. He uses the treatment for infants only in the worst cases of malnutrition.

Not Satisfactory

Mr. Smith and Mr. Jones, wardens of a prominent city church, were not in accord concerning the new rector's introduction of extreme ritual into the service.

Mr. Smith was aggressively on the rector's side, Mr. Jones quite the reverse, and on one occasion their difference of opinion cropped out in a lively, though brief dialogue.

Mr. Smith, having exhausted his arguments on his unresponsive brother warden, said:

"At least you will own that art is the handmaiden of religion."

"Yes," returned Jones savagely, "and I wish religion would give her a month's notice!"

My little niece, who accompanied me to the dentist several times this summer when I was getting my set of teeth, won a large box of caramels at our church fair recently. Trying to stop her from eating so many, I said, when she offered me some, "No thanks, dear, they're bad for the teeth," when in a loud, shrill voice, before a lot of people standing in front of my booth, she replied, "I'll hold your teeth for you, Aunty, while you eat 'em."—Correspondence, Kansas City Times.

SCIENTISTS FIND STRANGE LIFE IN ORKNEY ISLANDS

Kirkwall, Scotland—The Orkneys which always have been a source of delight to scientists have this summer been the playground for a party of Edingurgh zoologists who are introducing themselves and eventually the world to a number of new species of animal and fish life.

The investigators spent much time in tracing the developement and learning the habits of a little known species of watersheep which is found only near the island of North Ronaldshay. These animals feed on seaweed and inhabit the beaches of the island. Nature developed for them legs from 8 to10 inches longer than those of normal sheep, which allows them to wade for food. As result of their unusual diet their meat has a salty taste, their wool is particularly coarse and strong and they grow larger than normal sheep.

The zoologists are also studying creatures known as 'sholties" and what are called 'sea-anemones," both being found only in the Orkneys. The latter as yet are unclassfied and have no scientific name. They are plants which grow on rocks rocks and when covered by watr open and spread out circles of leaves like dandelions, but when the tide is out they fold up and dissapear. They are not flowers, as as their habits indicate a carnivorous animal existence. They will their victims by poison nd then devour them and their leaves act as tentaicles to grapple food. —Des Moines Sunday Register.

TOKIO USES 40,000 SNAKES IN MONTH

More than 200 snake dealers in Tokio supply the city's demand for snakes as food and medicine, accord ing to figures gathered by Jiji Shimpo, one of Tokio's leading newspapers.

Tokio citizens consume about 40,000 snakes a month, says the paper. Snakes, mostly of the viper family or garter snakes are either eaten by invalids needing nourishing which science has labeled vitamin A, in which these reptiles are supposed to be rich, or they are consumed as a drink, made by dissolving the ashes in spirits. Such consumption of snakes is due to old superstitions and does not have medical indorsement.

GRAVE OF NOTED INDIAN CHIEF BELIEVED FOUND

Ponctello, Idaho,— An ancient Indian grave believed to hold the remains of Chief Nampuh, the Piute Indian lader after whom the city of Nampa, Idaho, was named, has been found by R. W. Limbert, whose explonitions in the country now known as the Craters of the Moon national monument, contributed greatly to national recognition of that territory.

While hunting in the desert close to the Nevada line recently Mr. Limbert said h fonud a flat roc kupon which there was carved an arrow. Following the general direction of the arrow he found other rocks with similar carvings. The end of the line of arrow rocks was a huge mound of stones with a flat one resting on top.

The flat rock was engraved crudely with the figure of an Indian with abnormally large feet and hands; around the figure was a circle, the death sign of the Piutes.

The dead chief is reputted to have had enormously large feet and hands, and it is a tradition that one of his feet was six inches wide and eighteen inches long. The attempt of the carver to show the large hand and feet leads Limbert to believe that it is the grave of Chief Nampuh —Des Moines Sunday Register.

It's been a busy week the post for the farmers who have been busy filling silos. Herman Priebe has a new rig that cuts the corn silage in the field, elevates it to hauling wagons and they in turn dump it into the silo blower, and presto, all of the hard work is done away with.

Quite a crowd turned out to the high school gym last Saturday night to see the visiting preachers mix with the high school team. The sky pilots walked away with that basket ball game by a score of 17 to 4. The high school boys played a good game as the ministers had all been on college teams.

A pre-nuptial shower was held at the Tom Blank home last Thursday evening in honor of Miss Blank. She received many useful gifts such as will come in handy for house-keeping. A delightful lunch was served to the ladies by Mesdames Blank, Quandt and Ahrenkeil. All report a very enjoyable time.

Einar Salling's big red truck that he uses for hauling cream was the victim of a Ford Saturday. Mr. Salling was on the highway south of town loading cream; he left his big truck parked on the highway while he went to a farm to get a can of cream. A Ford sedan, driven by a Mexican from Mason City came along and ran into the truck, bending up the back fenders, rolling the big truck into the ditch and through the fence, so that Salling had to drive thru the pasure to the farm and out to the road again. The Ford was a complete wreck. We understand the Ford owner would stand the damage done.

WHY IT PAYS TO SELL YOUR GRAIN AT KLEMME

A farmr came to the Lau Elevator with a sample of wheat, the Klemme market at the time was paying $1.10 per bu. The Lau Elevator purchased the 1100 bu. of wheat at $1.10 and shipped it to the Chicago Market. It graded No. 3 hard, and sold at $1.32½ F. O. B. Chicago. After deducting expenses netted the Lau Elevator $1.17 per bushel. The same farmer was offered 95 cents per bu. for the same wheat at a town where there are two farmers elevators and no competition. At 95 cnts per bu. would have made a profit of 22 cents per bu. or $242. Part of this excessive profit the grower should of had and would not of received had he not investigated the Klemme Markets.

VEGETABLES FOR WINTER USE

Fresh Products Now Give Way to Stored Products

With the advent of frost and cold weather comes the closed season on fresh vegetables and the housewife must depend upon stored products. By proper storage, many vegetables and truck crops are quite easily kept throughout the winter, while there are several others which may be kept for several weeks. Some of these latter are the endive, tomatos, peppers, egg plants and parsley.

These should be gathered before frost, recommends the horticultural department, Iowa State College Plant the roots of endive in a box of soil in a cool basement. Tomato vines should be pulled up and hung in the attic where the green fruits will ripen. Peppers and egg plant may be put in the cellar. Parsley may be replanted in a flower pot and kept growing thruout the winter as an ordinary house plant.

Onions, sweet potatoes, squashes, pumpkins and celery should be gathered before frost. A fairly warm, dry furnace room is a good place in which to store the sweet potatoes squashes and pumpkins. A frost proof attic is a good place for the onions, as they must be kept dry and well ventilated. Celery may be stored in sand in the cellar or placed in a trench out of doors and well covered to prevent freezing.

Most of the root crops are easily stored all winter. Beets, carrots, turnips, rutabagas, parsnips and salsify will keep best if stored in boxes of sand in a cool cellar with a temperature of 35 or 40 degrees Fahrenheit. If the cellar is moist enough to prevent the roots from drying out, sand is unnecessary. Potatoes require a cool, dark, cellar, also. Root crops for storage should be topped but not washed. In cutting ff the tops of beets and other similar crops, care should be taken not to cut them so close that the roots will be exposed to drying and rotting.

Most of the crops adapted to cellar storage may be stored in pits, if proper precautions are taken to see that the pit is locaed in a well drained place, is protected by a covering of dirt and manure to insure against freezing. Salsify and parsnips may be left in the ground all winter and dug in the spring if desired, since they are unharmed by freezing.

HIGHT OUSTED FROM MINISTRY

Confessed Poisoner of Wife Banished From the Methodist Church.

Carbondale, Ill.—At the annual meeting of the southern Illinois conference here Rev. Lawrence M. Hight of Ina was banished from the ministry and from membership in the church on charges of killing his wife and instigating the poisoning of Wilford Sweetin, so that he could marry Mrs. Sweetin.

Hight was banished by a committee known as the "select number" and a report of its finding was submitted to the conference. It was explained, however, that this was a mere formality and that the action was final.

Mount Vernon, Ill.—The woman in the Salem jail is on the verge of losing her mind.

Mrs. Wilford Sweetin, love-pact husband slayer, was in a semi-stupor when officials of this county seat visited her. She talked vaguely about the murder to which she has confessed, and she chattered about nightly visits made by her dead husband to her cell.

In only one respect was she coherent. That was when she discussed the associate in her crime, Rev. Lawrence M. Hight, who poisoned his wife so that he and Mrs. Sweetin might fulfill their love pact.

"He doped me," she cried out. "He put something in the candy he gave me that caused me to do his bidding.

"But I can't remember—I can't remember. Did I kill Wilford? Did I confess?

"Why, Wilford came to see me last night."

Since being taken to the jail at Salem, which is 25 miles north of here, any effort to offer her solid food has aroused a repugnance that even her physician has been unable to understand. Her only sustenance was an occasional glass of milk.

Her brother, Earl of St. Louis, visited her. He was greatly disturbed over her physical and mental condition. In her talk with him she demonstrated enough coherence of thought to discuss her three sons, Byford, fourteen, Stanton, thirteen, and Harry Lee, eight.

"What do they think of me?" she asks.

The brother evaded the question. For the three children have become violent in denunciation of their mother.

Salient features of the platform included a denunciation of the Ku Klux klan and a demand for modification of the Volstead law to permit the manufacture and sale of light wines and beer.

There was also a plank favoring extension of the soldiers' bonus bill to include provision for the dependents of men who lost their lives overseas during the World war.

REPORT SHOWS PEAK IN BUILDING PASSED

Caution Urged by Trend of Rentals and Values.

Cleveland.—The Investment Bankers' association officially closed its thirteenth annual convention with the installation of the new officers for the ensuing year, headed by Thomas N. Dysart of the William R. Compton company of St. Louis as president.

There were several important reports presented to the convention, notably that covering the real estate situation, which caused probably more comment among the delegates than any other proceedings thus far.

The peak of real estate values, rentals and building costs has passed and from this time on for a considerable period the trend will be downward, it was declared in the report which went into all phases of the real estate mortgage situation, considered one of the most vital of investment topics in the United States at the present time.

This significant paragraph was contained in the report:

"Many dealers in real estate mortgage securities feel that we are facing a testing time as to the soundness and safety of a good many outstanding real estate mortgage bond issues. Statements have been made that loans are out in amounts representing altogether too high a percentage of the appraised value of the property; that such loans might conceivably be good for a limited period, but that in the form of long-term loans in a cycle of declining values loans on such an excessive basis would quite surely prove unsatisfactory. It is obvious that the greatest declines and heaviest vacancies will occur in the poorer districts and in buildings of least efficient design."

In the last few years there has been a mounting total of securities sold, based on leaseholds rather than actual land ownership and the special committee of the Investment Bankers' association which has investigated the subject warns that there are many hazards in extending such loans or selling securities based upon them.

Calhoun said he would announce his decision Monday.

COOLIDGE HITS U. S. OWNERSHIP

Lauding Continental Congress, He Urges Sanctity of Courts Be Preserved.

Philadelphia.—Speaking before a large and enthusiastic audience at the Academy of Music on the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the meeting of the first Continental congress in Carpenters' hall, President Coolidge urged determined resistance to all encroachments on the Constitution. By resolute determination to resist all such encroachments, he declared, the people of this nation can best show their reverence and appreciation for the men and the work of the first Continental congress.

Opposing ownership of the railroads and public utilities by the federal government, the President sought to show that such ownership would impose an impossible strain on the country's economic system. The people, he held, should be left in control of their property.

Standing squarely once again for the sanctity of the courts as he did in his Baltimore speech, the President advocated maintenance of the integrity of the judicial system, that the individual may be secure in his rights.

Urging that the people keep control of their government as well as their own property, the President said he believed this was one of the American ideals of public welfare in harmony with efforts of the first Continental congress. He gave warning that through breaking down of the courts lies an easy way to confiscation of the property of the individual and destruction of the individual's liberty.

He went back to the steps for cooperation of the colonies in the common defense in the French and Indian wars. He told of those exactions of the English government which threatened the liberties of the colonies. He drew a picture of the first Continental congress and referred to the remarkable aggregation of men which it brought together. Emphasizing the importance of the work of the first Continental congress, the President said:

"Their deliberations and actions are worthy of the most careful study by the American people. If we would better understand what they said and did to establish our free institutions, we should be less likely to be misled by the misrepresentations and distorted arguments of the hour, and be far better equipped to maintain them."

Setting forth in detail what was done by the first Continental congress in the way not alone of addresses and petitions but of effective actions, the President stressed the wisdom of the men of the colonies of 1774 in a policy of restraint and moderation. From this he drew a lesson for present-day application.

Freshening at the age of two years and almost seven months, the first daughter of Iowana Mercedes Homestead, former Holstein-Friesian herd sire at Iowa State College, has completed the creditable production record of 621.73 pounds of butterfat and 21,043 pounds of milk in 365 days, as compared to the production of 140 pounds of butterfat annually by the average Iowa cow.

J. S. McLaughlin & Sons of Mankato, Minn., were awarded a contract for paving in Adel recently. The work consists of approximately 3,000 yards of paving and 300 yards of excess excavation. A space to be paved with common brick laid on edge on a concrete base was let at $3.20 a yard. Two blocks were let for seven-inch reinforced concrete at a price of $2.19 a yard.

"I have just finished buying 157 head of draft horses in Iowa," said David Kahn, one of the best known horse dealers in New York City. "I have been after horses that stand 16½ hands or over, that will weigh 1,700 pounds or over in working condition. A very large proportion of the horses I have seen lack size because of lack of feed when they were young. I wish every farmer in Iowa could realize that it is expensive economy to neglect foals, yerlings and 2-year-olds."

The governor points out that in 1923 in Iowa there were 5,510 fires and a property loss of $8,225,006. Three-fifths of these fires were in the homes, twenty-eight in schools, twenty-nine in hotels, and thirty-two in churches, according to the proclamation, which adds that three-fourths of all fires were results of negligence and ignorance. State Fire Marshal J. A. Tracy is sending out 30,000 copies of the proclamation to schools, commercial clubs, newspapers, and to 500 women's clubs.

Professor P. G. Holden, former head of the extension department of Iowa Agircultural college in a speech at Burlington recently told farmers that "now is the time to stay on the farm. There was never a better or safer time to farm. Your land will sell at from $150 to $325 an acre in ten years. In a conversation he declared that he never again expected to see corn sell lower than 60 cents a bushel. He has traveled all over the United States recently and sees no chance for corn to drop greatly this year.

Swamp-Root a Fine Medicine

Thousands upon thousands of women have kidney or bladder trouble and never suspect it.

Women's complaints often prove to be nothing else but kidney trouble, or the result of kidney or bladder disease.

If the kidneys are not in a healthy condition they may cause the other organs to become diseased.

You may suffer pain in the back, headache and loss of ambition.

Poor health makes you nervous, irritable and may be despondent; it makes anyone so.

But hundreds of women claim that Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, by restoring health to the kidneys, proved to be just the remedy needed to overcome such conditions.

Many send for a sample bottle to see what Swamp-Root, the great kidney, liver and bladder medicine will do for them. By enclosing ten cents to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., you may receive sample size bottle by parcel post. You can purchase medium and large size bottles at all drug stores.—Advertisement.

Found Relief in Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Always Recommends It

Bridgeport, Connecticut. —"I was completely run-down, had headaches, dizzy, faint feelings and other troubles women often have. As I had taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound before, my husband said to take it again. I have now taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Blood Medicine, the Liver Pills, and six boxes of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Tablets. I am feeling very good now and shall continue taking them for a while. I have been telling my cousin about the medicine and she wants to take it, too. I always recommend it."— Mrs. HENRY C. SMITH, R.F.D. No. 3, Box 6, Bridgeport, Conn.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is a splendid medicine for such conditions. It has in many cases relieved those symptoms by removing the cause of them. Mrs. Smith's experience is but one of many.

In a recent country-wide canvass of purchasers of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, over 121,000 replies were received, and 98 per cent. reported they were benefited by its use. For sale by druggists everywhere.

Roots and Herbs Best for Kidneys

Daniel G. Carey, M.D.

BACKACHE

said Dr. Carey is a pretty sure sign that all is not well with your kidneys.

Delay may be dangerous—thousands of people die every year from kidney troubles and many could be saved if the right medicine was taken in time.

Dr. Carey knew how to mix roots and herbs and for over 40 years his famous Marshroot Prescription has helped thousands of despairing people. It's the one remedy for backache troubles. Don't take chances—ask your druggist for it by name—liquid or tablet form—equally good, 75c. If your local druggist hasn't it he can get it from the Carey Medical Laboratories at Elmira, N. Y.

Attractive Lawn Adds Much to Property Value

"One dollar intelligently spent on the grounds about a home will afford more beauty than ten spent on the house itself," is a common remark. It is very true that the attractiveness of a home is increased greatly by the beauty and fitness of the grounds.

Who has not at some time, perhaps while traveling, been struck with the beautiful picture created by some one from a plain, ordinary house surrounded by carefully selected plantings of shrubs and vines and flowers tastefully arranged? Appropriate plantings at but little expenditure of time and effort had brought about beauty and a sense of satisfaction from plain, unattractive surroundings; and reflected a degree of culture, and had caused the passerby to think, if not actually to remark, "Somebody lives there, all right."

The lawn is, of course, the foundation upon which the remainder of a pretty picture can be developed. Many homes can improve their beauty a hundred per cent by the simple expedient of a well-kept grassy lawn, perhaps no other single thing can be done that will so improve the appearance of a home as to have a closely-trimmed lawn.

The best time to do the grading and seeding of a lawn is very soon after the house has been completed. Those who have neglected to complete the grading at the time it should have been done usually have cause to regret this as time goes by. After grass comes in they hesitate about plowing up the sod in order to put the necessary finishing touches on the grading.

"Let Your Light Shine"; Advice Worth Heeding

Probably not one village in the United States has been planned and built to look picturesque, a writer in the St. Louis Globe-Democrat laments. Yet how fruitfully that would be rewarded in this day of motor touring—if properly advertised.

Distinction is possible to every hamlet and to all small cities if they will do about it. Consider Sarcoxie, Mo., where the peony season brings 20,000 visitors; and Door county, Wis., which when the cherry blossoming is on, entertains excursionists, besides other multitudes at cherry-picking time. If you can't be a big town, you can be noted and make all the lanes about resonant with the honking of tourists, whose presence so enlivens the rather monotonous round of village life.

Commonplace as it may have been made in its beginning, by means of gardens and a little architectural inspiration, not appallingly expensive, a town may get itself favorably talked about throughout the land. It must not palter at $100, here and there, or withhold the sweat of its face when there is work to be done.

Every vendor in the community will profit by it, and consequently every resident. The price of real estate will go up; and no man's rentable cottage be tenantless. It pays to be famous.

Beautify Grounds

One of the objects in planting about the ordinary home is to offset the angles and fit buildings to surroundings. To achieve this foundation plantings are desirable—plantings designed to hide the foundation of the home. Along with these go plantings for the hiding or softening of sharp corners, plantings to create an atmosphere of peace and rest. This can be attained even on a busy street, serving to beautify a place both from the street and from the windows of the home itself.

For houses with south exposures, planting of cannas, salvias, or geraniums, either alone or in combinations, are desirable. These may be followed with autumn plantings of spring-flowering tulips, to come up the following spring and give one a start at the following season's "game."

Mr. Cady, whose work on the campus of Minnesota college of agriculture has attracted attention from the people of the whole Northwest, put many of his ideas into a bulletin on "Attractive Farmsteads," issued by his college. The ideas he has developed in the bulletin, however, apply to the city or village home almost as well. Copies of the bulletin are available without charge on application to the college.

Labor Cost

Keep in mind that it costs as much to install cheap material as higher grade.

Unnatural Mothers

When lions and tigers bring forth young in captivity, the greatest care has to be exercised to keep them for several days in the dark and undisturbed, as otherwise the mothers will almost invariably destroy their cubs.

Health in Gardening

The cultivation of 20 feet or more of back yard should prove a healthful, restful, and profitable diversion for the busy man or woman, after the labors of the day.

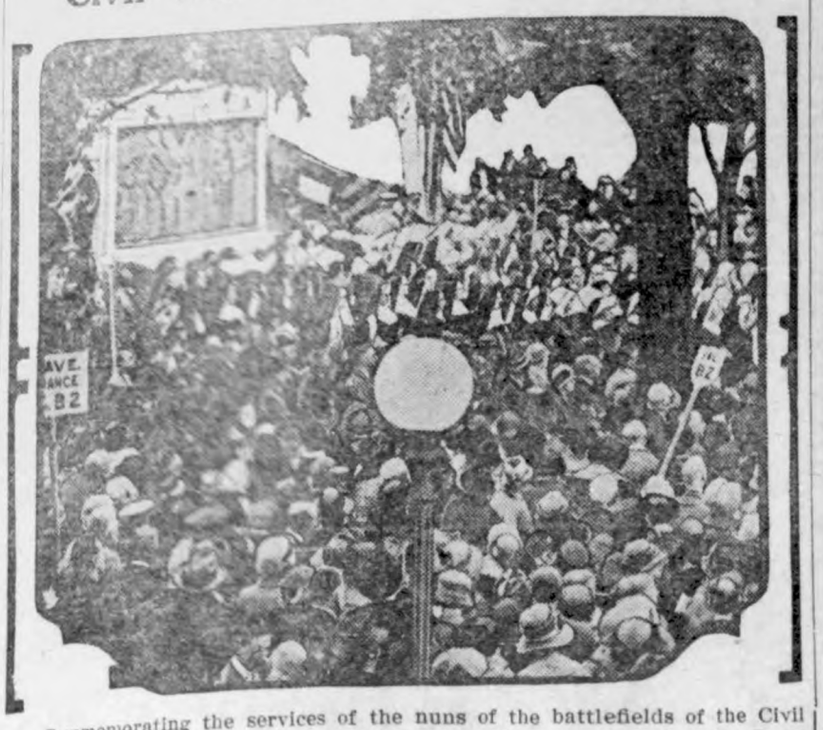
Civil War Nuns Are Remembered



Commemorating the services of the nuns of the battlefields of the Civil war, a monument was unveiled in Washington under the auspices of the women's auxiliary of the Ancient Order of Hibernians. The monument contains bronze figures of nuns in relief, and the unveiling represents 12 years of effort on the part of the organization. A huge throng of persons, thousands of which were in Washington for the convention of the Holy Name society, gathered about the monument while Cardinal O'Connell of Boston addressed them.

TRAINING PUPILS FOR CITIZENSHIP

When the citizenship classes conducted by the American Legion Auxiliary unit at Pittsburg, Kan., open for the eleventh time this fall to prepare foreign-born to pass their examinations for citizenship, there will be ninety-nine enrolled. Pittsburg is in the heart of the Kansas coal district, and the auxiliary found a fertile field for its efforts.

Among the pupils this fall will be included several American-born girls who married foreigners and lost their American citizenship as a result. These girls are helped by the classes and appreciate the work just as much as do the aliens themselves, according to letters of appreciation received by the auxiliary from former pupils.

For three years now the Pittsburg unit has been conducting these classes. Three times a year, before each session of court for the examination of aliens seeking citizenship, these women have held their schools. In November, February and May, the applicants are examined, and for ten Saturday afternoons and evenings before the tests, the classes meet.

It all came about very naturally. A few years ago the Auxiliary, the Daughters of the American Revolution, and the Ladies of the Grand Army of the Republic, united to hold a special ceremony of one hour on the day of the examinations to make the conferring of citizenship more impressive.

While serving on this committee, the Auxiliary women learned of the needs of the petitioners for a school devoted to elementary civics and American history, appreciation of the American system of government and an intensive study of the plan of government, national, state and local. They saw how these men floundered about in their attempts to answer the questions put to them and how woefully ignorant many of them really were of the government from which they sought citizenship.

The ceremonies are still continued. The service consists of prayer, patriotic songs and a short address on the duties and responsibilities of citizenship. Committees from the societies in charge remain throughout the day and present to each of the successful applicants a copy of the Constitution, a small silk flag and a copy of the flag laws of Kansas.

The school was started.

At first, the classes were composed of those who were virtually sentenced to attend and whose cases were continued by the judge only on condition that they would come to the school. The work has received the hearty support of the judges and of the bureau of naturalization, and has received official commendation from heads of the bureau at Washington.

Because of the limited time available for the instruction, a course of study covering ten lessons has been worked out. The work has been experimental from first to last, as it is said to differ from Americanization work of other organizations. It is purely educational without any welfare or religious phases.

It is a class for busy men and women who already have a fair knowledge of the English language. No English is taught. Those who need instruction in English are sent to the night schools.

These classes do not take the place of the night schools and do not attempt to do the work done in them. The American Legion and the Auxiliary took the lead in creating an Americanization education council which secured the establishment of night schools in Pittsburg. They made a survey of the city. They secured the pupils. They petitioned the school board for the schools. They made them popular by entertaining.

The citizenship classes aim to be a bureau of specific information on the points which come up in the citizenship examinations. How the laws are made, who makes them, how many members sit in congress, what district the petitioner lives in, who represents the district in the senate and in the house, similar questions on the state government, how taxes are raised, what part goes to what department, what the county, township and city governments are, how elections are held, what primaries are for, what the electoral college is, what the bill of rights is—these are some of the matters discussed in a very definite way.

Besides the ten lessons, oral instruction is given and it is supplemented by home reading covering the questions of each lesson. In this way applicants for citizens have been prepared very effectively and splendid work for real Americanism has been done by the Pittsburg unit.

The committee in charge of the work is composed of Mrs. John Tracey, chairman; Mrs. Ella Dingman and Mrs. Amos Bennett. They have been assisted by Mrs. H. B. Munson, an attorney, in technical instruction, and by Mrs. L. E. Curfman and Mrs. Kate Morse.

Seek Medal for Hero

The American Legion post of Sierra Madre, Cal., recently put in an application for a Carnegie hero medal for Val Miller, of Sierra Madre, for bravery displayed recently at Balboa beach in rescuing five men, who would otherwise have perished with their eight comrades when the launch in which they were sailing was capsized by a swell. Mr. Miller is a World war veteran and as a youth in the East received many marks of distinction for athletic prowess. Aside from being able to combat the waves, Miller displayed a brand of courage by the rescue not given to every man.

AGED INMATES DANCE LIGHT FANTASTIC WHILE SUPERINTENDENT SCOURS COUNTRY FOR SOURCE OF MUSIC

For several nights "joy reigned unconfined" in the Montgomery County Infirmary, located not far from Middletown, Ohio. The aged residents of that institution cast aside their crutches, forgot their rheumatism and "danced the light fantastic" to their hearts' content Rules and regulations of the Home, heretofore strictly obeyed by the inmates, were ignored as the men and women danced until the small hours of th morning.

Naturally officials of the institution were "up in arms" and did everything they could to stop the dancing and at the same time locate the source of the mysterious music, which was having such an entrancing effect upon the men and women, who, it had been believed, were incapable of taking a fast step, let alone dancing. The music was there, that was certain, but whence came it? That was the big problem.

Guards and nurses were sent out on scouting expeditions, seeking some hidden phonograph or perhaps even an orchestra. But they were compelled to return "empty handed," because none were able to find the hiding place of the music makers who were wrecking the morale of the Home. And in the meantime, the dancing kept on, gray haired men and women gliding as gracefully as they could through the great halls of the Infirmary.

"Certainly something can be done to stop this," quoth the superintendent, who was rapidly becoming fearful of the results this dancing might have on the people who had been entrusted to his care.

And while he fumed and fussed, there came to him a mysterious "tip." It was to the effect that the music was radio music, being received on a loud speaker in a home a mile and a half from the Infirmary. Jumping into his flivver, the superintendent "beat it" to the home of this radio fan and, after an hour of pleading, succeeded in convincing him that in order to save the residents of his institution from possible ruination of morals he must "put on the dampers."

This radio fan, like others, was willing to sacrifice volume for the good of those to whom dance music might mean something serious, and so he "tamed down" the loud speaker which was attached to his Crosley Trirdyn radio receiver. Then the dancing at the Infirmary ceased, and the inmates went to bed sorely disgusted with life.

The story is a true one, and is vouched for by the Wertz & Singer Company, of Middletown, Ohio, who sold the Trirdyn to the man who brought so much happiness to the aged men and women and so much trouble to the superintendent.

We have placed several of these Crosley Trirdyn Radio Receivers and find them very satisfactory. Better try one out in your own home Free.

The people of Klemme and community were greatly shocked when the sad news passed out that Mr. John Waterman, former Klemme business man had passed away at the Belmond hospital at six o'clock yesterday (Wednesday) morning.

For several months Mr. Waterman's health had been failing and about a month ago he sold his cash grocery store at Clarion, which he had purchased last spring, at which time he moved away from Klemme with his wife. Since they sold their Clarion store they had moved to Belmond, where they hoped to spend the winter and with a long rest hoped Mr. Waterman's health would be restored. His condition became worse and last week became serious so that he was taken to the Belmond hospital where his death occured yesterday morning.

Mr. Waterman came to this city with his family a number of years ago. For eleven years he conducted a general store and then sold the business to J. N. Day. He was then out of active business for two years but during that time he was auto salesman for Fred Ridder and later became manager of the Farmers Garage, and after a few months resigned this position to become postmaster. Mr. Waterman served as postmaster for Klemme nine years During that time he had increased the business of the postoffice, built a fine brick building which now houses the post office. As a postmaster he worked hard to please. It was through his efforts that the foundation was laid for a rural route, which was later completed under the present administration. Shortly after Mr. Waterman was appointed postmaster here he built the double store where he conducted a general business for nine years and then sold out to G. W. Kluckhohn & Sons, who are conducting the store.

Mr. Waterman has done a lot for Klemme. He was always a live-wire business man, always ready to boost for the betterment of Klemme. He put up two fine brick buildings and was the owner of a fine modern house.

Mr. Waterman was only fifty-five years old at the time of his death. Besides his wife, he leaves to mourn his death, his son, Clarence, of this place, and his daughter, Mrs. Chester Cullinan, of Belmond, and many other relatives.

The remains were brought to Klemme this morning. Funeral services will be held Saturday afternoon at two o'clock at the Reformed Church and interment will be made in the Klemme cemetery.

IOWA BUTTER LEADS 'EM ALL

Danger With Cooler Weather is that Producers Will Relax Vigilance in Cleaning Utensils

Every prize offered for butter at the recent National Dairy Exposition at Milwauke was captured by Iowa exhibits, from all over the United States. Iowa carried off every honor, including two gold medals, two silver medals, and two bronze medals. This duplicates the sweeping victory of last year and Iowa buttermen are quite proud, says Prof. M. Mortenson of Iowa State College.

Perhaps Iowa dairymen have reason to complain because there were not more medals to take, even as Alexander the Great regretted that there were no more worlds to take, says Prof. Mortenson, because he he feels certain that had there been a score of prizes offered Iowa would hav taken them all. The feat at Milwaukee is a perfect climax to Iowa's record for thep ast two years Iowa butter made practically a clean up at both the World's Dairy Congress at Syracuse, N. Y. and the National Creamery Buttermaker's convention last year.

But the dairymen should not feel that they may now relax in their effort to produce a superior product he says. They should merely be encourage to continue the battle with more vim than before.

When fall weather comes, the dairyman may be prone to be slightly less careful to clean his separator and utensils thoroly after each milking, since he finds that milk does not sour so readily in cool weather. However, milk will absorb bad tastes and orods just the same in cool wather as in summer and the most common sources of these bad odors and flavors are unclean utensils.

Butter is the most delicate and easily tainted food known, and producing a good quality product is a difficult problem at best. Just because nature is somewhat more propitious at this season of the year is no reason why the dairymen should not continue to do his bit and produce a product of even better quality than was possible during the summer. Clean the separator and utensils each time they are used, urges Prof. Mortenson, and help Iowa maintain her enviable record.

TO USE 9,000 FOOT SEINE TO GET CARP

Preparations Begun to Seine Lake; 200,000 Pounds Got Last Year

The McGoon Fish company, which has made arrangements to begin to seine the lake for carp, were busy all day Wednesday preparing nets for t he work. The largest net is 9,000 feet long, and will be spread every day until the cold weather comes.

The nets are spread in the lake by the aid of two tow boats, one stationary to the shore, and the other propelled by a motor boat across the lake. The workers also are planning to drag the lake after the seining has been completed.

Last year more than 200,000 pounds of carp were obtained, and it is believed that there is yet millions of the fish in the lake and that they will do a great deal of damage to the game fish. With the carp eliminated much better fishing will result.

The McGoon company dispose of all carp obtained from the lake to New York buyers, who find a ready market for the fish.

Bill Brown

Bill Brown made a million. Bill Brown, think of that!
A boy, you remember, as poor as a rat.
Who had for the neighbors, did jobs by the day,
Well, Bill's made a million, or near they say.
You can't understand it, Well neither can I,
And I remembered now, and know why,
But Bill always hoed to the end of the row.

Bill worked for my father, you maybe recall,
He wasn't a wonder, not that, not at all,
He couldn't out-hoe me, or cover more ground,
Or hoe any cleaner, or beat me around.
In fact, I was better one way that I knew—
Getting back to the house when the dinner horn blew.
One toot from the kitchen and home I would go;
But Bill always hoed to the end of the row.

We used to get hungry out there in the corn,
You talk about music—what equals a horn,
A horn yelling dinner, tomatoes and beans,
And pork and potatoes and gravy and greens?
I ain't blaming no one for quitting on time
To stop with the whistle, that ain't any crime.
But, as for the million—well, his much I know,
That Bill ayways hoed to the end of the row—Douglas Malloch.

TEXAS FEARS SIEGE OF FOOT AND MOUTH DISEASE

Fear of the foot and mouth disease has spread to every section of Texas, and rangers, state and federal authorities are uniting vigorous efforts to fight one of the gravest economic perils that ever threatened the state. Four Texas counties, in which hundreds of the animals have been attacked by the malady, under close quarantine. Gov. Pat Neff has came from Austin and per onally taken charge of the situation.

Counties bordering the quarantined district have been advised to begin the erection of fumigating stations and dipping vats on their main highways and embargoes have been placed on hte moving of ny products of the soil from any of the quarantined counties. The ports of Galveston, Houston and Texas City may be closed to navigation to prtvent the spreading of any germs Cotton exporters with huge shipments of cotton on the wharves view the situaion with increased alarm.

Texas, easily apprehensive since the invasion of the boll weevil, is in even greater fear of the new peril. Throughout the state for the last few days when the epidemic was made public, there has been talk of little else.

Scores of federal and state officers were poured into the Houston district immediately. Rangers joined them.

A close guard was established over the 2,000 head of cattle in the 6,000 acres of ranch land ravaged by the disease and orders were given today for the slaughter of 1,100 of these animals.

Dr. W. S. Cotton chief of the bureau of animal husbandry at Washington is at the head of the forty-two federal officers and inspectors in the district and with him is Marion Grimes, government expert, who is credited with stopping the recent hoof and mouth disease epidemic in California.

Governom Neff has called a conference of federal, state and county officials for Monday, to discuss further plans for defense against the bovine scourge.

The wheels of jndustry are not turned by cranks.

Miss Minnie Blank and Mr. Worthie Usher Were Married At The Little Brown Church Sunday

Preceding the wedding of Miss Minnie Blank, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. T. Blank, of Klemme, to Mr. Worthie Usher, of Palo, Iowa, a bounteful wedding breakfast was served at the Blank home at ten o'clock Sunday morning. The relatives and friends of the bride and groom to be were guests. The table was appropriately decorated for the occasion.

Shortly after the wedding breakfast the wedding party left by auto for Nashua, Iowa. Those who accompanied Miss Blank and Mr. Usher were, Miss Marie Blank, Mr. Casey Blank, Miss Marie Miller, and Mr. and Mrs. R. A. McConn.

Preparations had been made to have the wedding at "The Little Brown Church In The Vale," and the plans were carried out accordingly. At three o'clock, the Rev. Hanna, pastor of the Nashua Congregational Church united Mr. Worthie Usher and Miss Minnie Blank in the Holy bonds of matrimony, using the pretty ring ceremony. Mr. and Mrs. McConn escorted the couple at the altar. The organist of the Charles City Congregational church played the Mendelsohn Wedding March. The Bride was attired in gray canton crepe with a gray hat, gray slippers and carried a corsage of roses and lillies of the valley; while the groom was attired in the conventional blue.

The wedding party was tendered a surprise when they entered the famous church when they found it to be filled with people, as services were being conducted there on that day, and also four weddings were to be performed. The congregation remaining to witness all of the ceremonies.

After the ceremonies at the little church the party left for Charles City where they were served a six o'clock dinner. The party then returned to Klemme after leaving Mr. and Mrs. Usher at Mason City.

DARING STUNTS AT BIG AIR MEET

Airship Carries Plane Into Clouds, Drops It and Picks It Up.

Dayton, Ohio.—For the first time a semi-dirigible airship carried an airplane into the clouds, set it free and picked it up again. The experiment, conducted over Wilbur Wright field, was the outstanding event of the second day's exhibition of the annual Pulitzer race meet.

The TC-5, a giant lighter-than-air ship from Scott field, Belleville, Ill., commanded by Lieut. Frank McKee, picked up a Sperry messenger airplane from the field and took it to an altitude of 2,500 feet above the crowd. There the moorings of the airplane were cut and Lieut. C. V. Cinter put the little ship into a dive. The rush of wind started the motor.

After ten minutes of frolic flying Clinter guided his ship beneath the airship again and contact was made

Maj Gen. Mason M. Patrick, chief of air service, said that the event gave another chapter to the book of aviation. It will mean that the Shenandoah will be able to carry fighting airplanes to protect it from enemy aircraft. It will mean that the ZR-3 will be able to take on and discharge passengers while in flight.

Another chapter of aviation was written during the day with the first flivver airplane race staged in America. In this event four planes, made in America, contested A tiny monoplane, powered with a motorcycle motor of but 19 horsepower, flew the 25-mile course at the rate of 64 miles an hour and won the race.

This ship was built by Al Johnson of Dayton. The ship used less than half a gallon of gasoline for the race. Its tank holds but two gallons of fuel. The actual cost of the flight was less than ten cents. And the ship flew 64 miles an hour.

This flivver flight rivals that of George Barbot, the French aviator, who caused such a furore in Europe a year ago. Barbot's ship consumed a trifle less gasoline, but was much slower.

In the flivver race E. Dormoy, flying a ship that was constructed around another motorcycle side car for a fuselage, averaged 50 miles an hour and won second place. The other entrants were forced down before the finish of the contest.

This race will mark the beginning of flivver plane construction in America, Al Johnson says. "The flivver planes in Europe are fair-weather ships," he said. "My ship will fly in any weather. Look at the heavy wind in which it flew. Everybody will use them some day."

Godfrey M. Cabot of Boston was elected president of the National Aeronautical association at the annual banquet of the organization here. He succeeds Frederick B. Patterson of Dayton.

N. Y. GIANTS INVOLVED IN NEW BALL SCANDAL

Landis Suspends O'Connell and Dolan After Bribe Attempt.

New York.—Commissioner K. M. Landis announced that Jimmy O'Connell and Coach "Cozy" Dolan of the New York National league baseball club had been declared ineligible for the world series after charges of bribery against them had been investigated.

The suspension was based on a confession by O'Connell and evidence provided by Dolan and followed information by Heinie Sand of the Philadelphia National league club. Sand stated that on September 27 O'Connell had offered him $500 to throw the game between the Giants and the Phillies, played in New York on that day.

Sand refused the offer and immediately gave his information to Manager Fletcher of the Phillies, who brought it to the attention of Commissioner Landis. The investigation, in which President Heydler of the National league and officials of the New York club also took part, followed.

O'Connell's confession also mentioned Capt. Frank Frisch, Ross Young and George Kelly of the Giants, but Commissioner Landis stated that the testimony of these men had convinced the investigating committee they had no part in the scheme.

The investigation, Commissioner Landis said, tended to trace the instigation of the scheme to Dolan, whose testimony was of a nature to indicate that conclusion.

Links United States With China's Civil War

Tokyo.—Fighting for the Jehol pass began between the forces of the Peking government and those of Chang Tso Lin, Manchurian "war lord," who is seeking to take over the central government, according to reports from the Mukden headquarters of General Chang's army. Manchurian troops captured several towns not far from the Chihli-Manchurian border.

An interview with Chang published in a newspaper here quotes him as charging that the Americans have shown favor to the Peking government. "This shows my defeat would be tantamount to Japan's defeat," Chang is quoted as saying. "I am sure the efforts of my rival, General Wu Pei Fu, will fail in view of his close association with the United States."

WHEAT ADVANCES TO $1.51 BUSHEL

Highest Price Ever Recorded at This Season in Peace Times.

Chicago.—Phenomenal advances in the price of wheat and rye were registered on Thursday at the Chicago Board of Trade.

In one of the wildest sessions the market has seen in years the price of wheat for delivery next May soared 4⅜ cents above the closing figure on Wednesday. The final price in Chicago was $1.51¼, an advance of 15 cents a bushel since last week. Thursday's price is among the highest ever recorded at this season in peace times.

The advance in rye was no less startling. Several months ago May rye was selling at less than 80 cents a bushel. Thursday the market had soared to $1.35, an advance of 25½ cents since last Saturday. Rye is the chief bread grain of all the eastern European countries.

These advances will add millions to the wealth of American farmers. The jumps in price are attributed to immense buying by European countries. Wet weather at harvest time lessened the yield of European farms, which had already suffered severely from a wet and cold summer.

An additional factor making for high prices is the material reduction in Canadian wheat and oats yield from last year's return, grain dealers say. There is little belief in market circles that the reports of crop failures abroad are exaggerated.

Traders were startled by the Department of Agriculture's concise analysis of the world's supply and demand of wheat and rye.

Cables from Germany and other European countries describing the acute shortage of food and feed grains have been a factor in the advance.

While the advance in the Chicago market was almost unprecedented, it actually is small compared with the marking up that has been going on outside the United States. May wheat closed in Winnipeg Thursday at $1.53½, 20 cents a bushel above the low price of Saturday. October wheat at Liverpool has jumped 17 cents a bushel in the same time and closed at $1.70.

The uncertain element in the situation is the crop of the southern hemisphere. Unless exporters in Argentina and other lands below the equator ship enormous quantities to the European market, Chicago traders believe prices may advance to $2 a bushel for wheat and $1.75 for rye.

Delegates of 48 Nations Approve Geneva Treaty

Geneva.—Delegations representing 48 nations placed the stamp of approval upon the League of Nations' draft of the protocol instrument and recommended to their governments that it be ratified.

Even the most critical of the observers of the four weeks' work here admits that the action marks a momentous step toward world peace. With the principle of compulsory arbitration supported by the most powerful of the European states, which are ready to fight for this principle under the terms of the protocol, the greatest hope for peace since the league was founded is widespread here.

Speeches uttered from the rostrum of the fifth league assembly in its closing hours lacked the usual stamp of oratory but expressed a determination to carry the protocol through all of the stages necessary to gather all of the nations of the world around the conference table next June in an effort to consecrate the work begun here with the completion of the universal pact against aggression.

If You Need a Medicine You Should Have the Best— Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root

Have you ever stopped to reason why it is that so many products that are extensively advertised all at once drop out of sight and are soon forgotten? The reason is plain—the article did not fulfill the promises of the manufacturer. This applies more particularly to a medicine. A medicinal preparation that has real curative value almost sells itself, as like an endless chain system the remedy is recommended by those who have been benefited to those who are in need of it.

A prominent druggist says, "Take for example Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, a preparation I have sold for many years and never hesitate to recommend, for in almost every case it shows excellent results, as many of my customers testify. No other kidney remedy has so large a sale."

According to sworn statements and verified testimony of thousands who have used the preparation, the success of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root is due to the fact, so many people claim, that it fulfills almost every wish in overcoming kidney, liver and bladder ailments, corrects urinary troubles and neutralizes the uric acid which causes rheumatism.

You may receive a sample bottle of Swamp-Root by parcel post. Address Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., and enclose ten cents; also mention this paper. Large and medium size bottles for sale at all drug stores.—Advertisement.

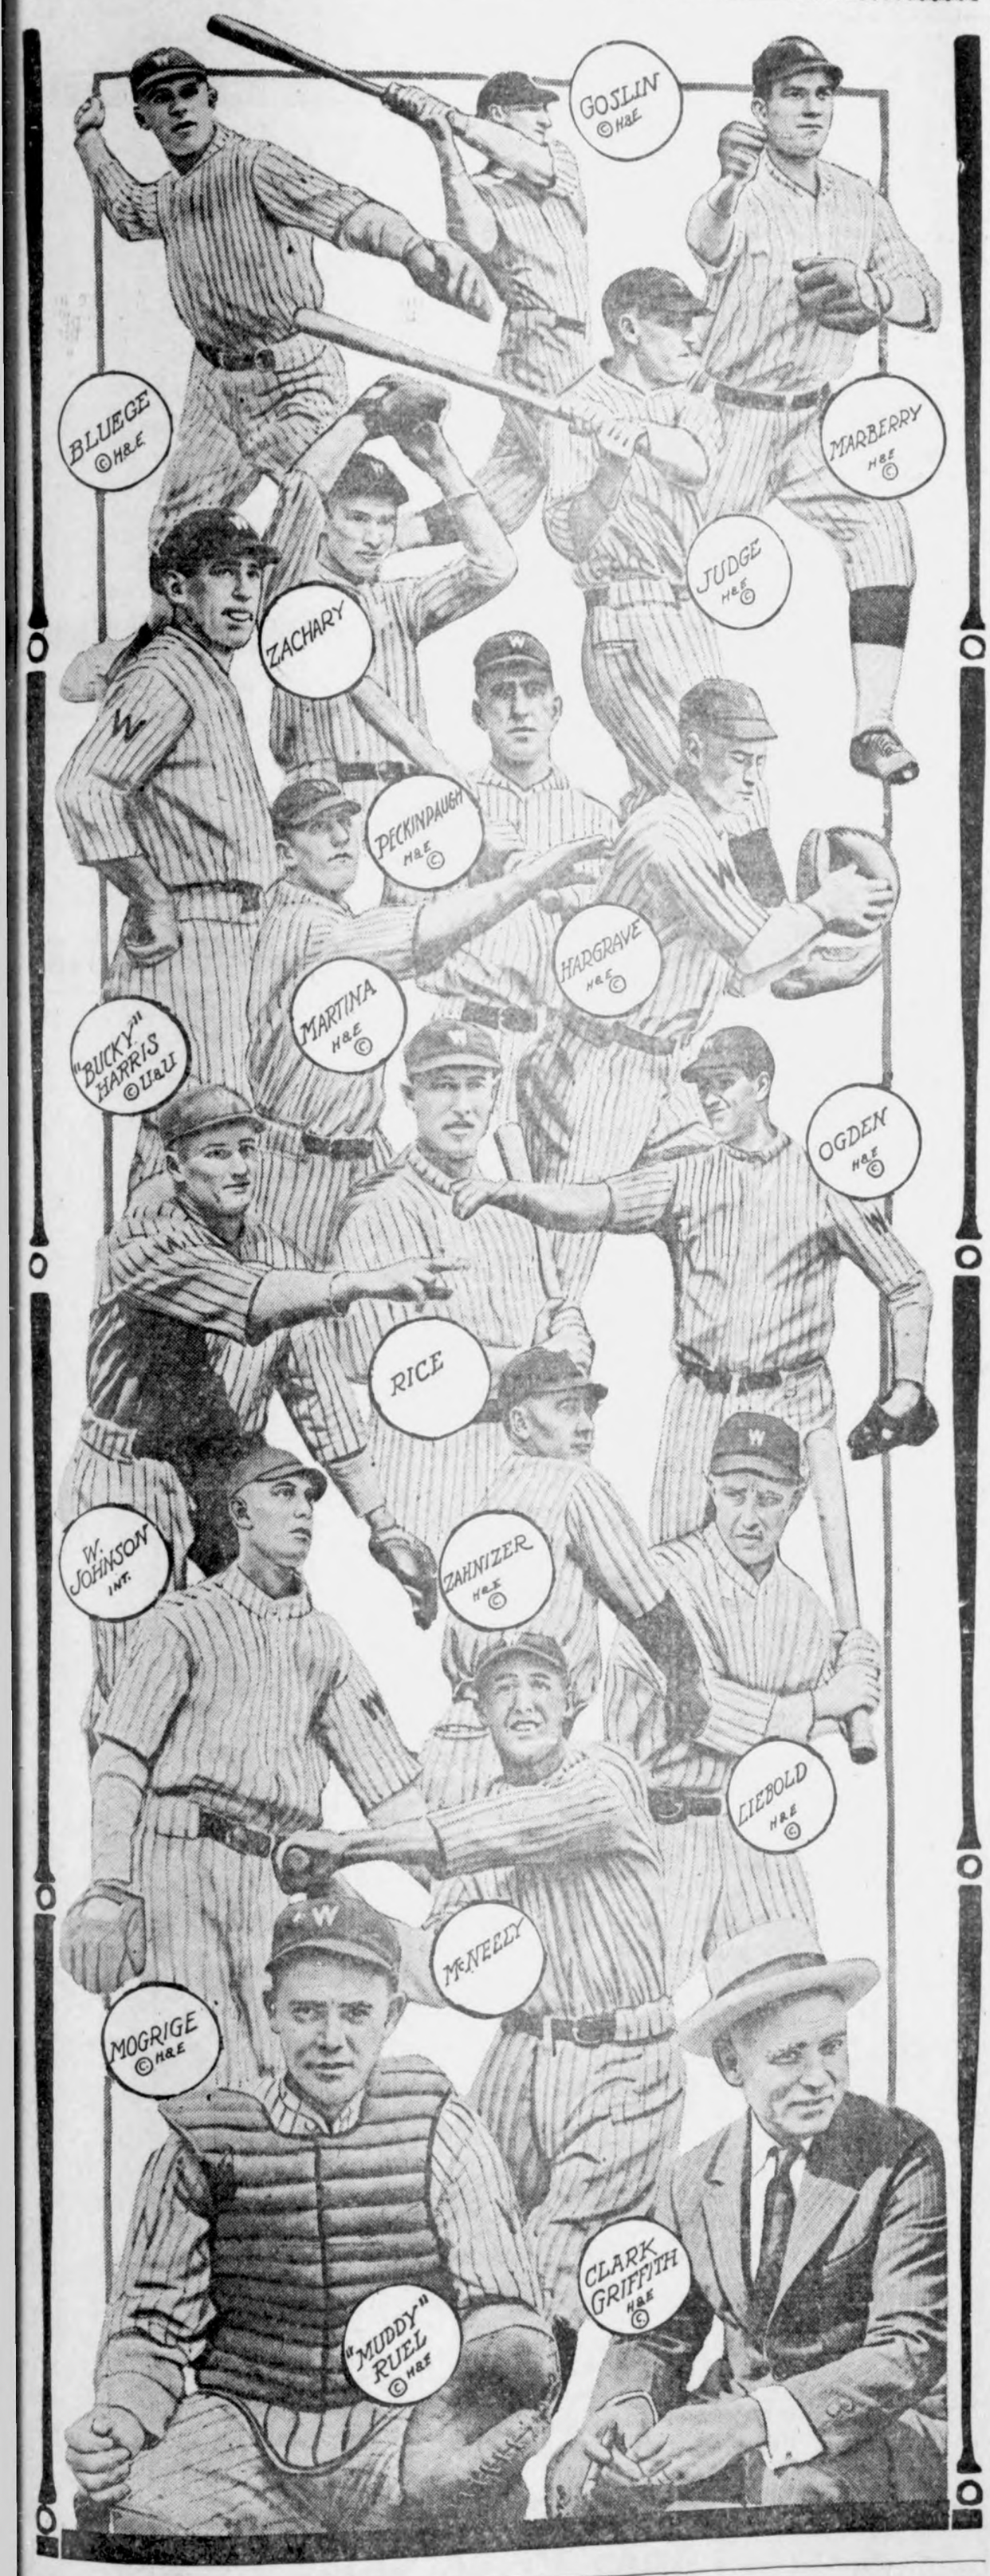
WASHINGTON NATIONALS, CHAMPIONS OF 1924, WIN THEIR FIRST AMERICAN LEAGUE PENNANT



Johnson Is in Favor of Old System of Training

Indifferent physical condition and lack of proper spring training causes the midseason collapse of clubs which, at the start of the season, seemed certain pennant contenders, is the belief of Ban Johnson, president of the American league.

President Johnson said the present-day conditioning process is all wrong, and that a return to the old-time system, when players started to harden themselves physically as early as the first of the year, would result in better baseball.

"In the old days players did not think of starting to play baseball in the spring until they were capable of standing it," he said.

"Cy Young and many others, in the old days, went to Hot Springs and other winter resorts, and by climbing, walking and running, developed their strength gradually. Then they started to play baseball and did not fall victims to "charley-horse" and other ailments. They were down to weight and as hard as nails when it came time to start the actual practice.

"Today it seems to be the general practice of every player to start right in and practice baseball pitching, throwing, running and batting with soft muscles and no wind.

"That is all wrong. If they started to condition themselves slowly soon after the first of the year they would be ready for practice when the training season started, and it would result in a better game."

TRIBUTE TO LEGION

"Youth which believes. . . ." are words of a tribute to the American Legion included in the American Bar association's last annual report, which states: "How, then, shall we proceed to leaven the vast lump of indifference, ignorance and hostility prevalent in this country and threatening the growth of what the American Legion has grouped under the term 'Americanism'?" The association answers its own question as follows: "Our plan has been to work with and coordinate the efforts of every society in America competent and willing to do the work, and in this way we have been amazed and delighted to find the magnificent work that these organizations are accomplishing along patriotic lines, how readily and intelligently they respond to every appeal. Foremost of these in numbers, youth and zeal, of course, is the American Legion. If sometimes the Legion in its enthusiasm does radical things, it must be remembered that youth which believes is always radical. Youth which believes is never lukewarm and seldom moderate. But of all the assets that America has for good citizenship and the awakening of the political conscience, undoubtedly this great body stands among the first."

SQUAWMAN BURIED BY LEGIONNAIRES

Sam Terry was a squawman, and when he died recently at St. Francis, S. D., American Legionnaires buried him with full military honors.

But Samuel Mark Terry, nephew of General Terry of Civil war and Indian war fame, was not the typical gambling, wife-beating derelict who becomes a squawman of necessity or slothfulness, hated by both the Indian and the white man. When Terry's body was lowered into the grave at the Rosebud Indian Reservation cemetery, the intoned moan of sorrow that went up from the red men surrounding the grave betokened a different type of squawman, for these sorrowing Indians were mourning the passing of a man who had spent many years of his life in the United States army as a scout and fighter of their people.

Terry was born in New York September 1, 1830. He joined the United States army in 1858 and a gunshot wound received in the Civil war caused him to wear a silver quarter in his throat the remainder of his life.

Handicapped by his wounds, Terry went into the west country and continued in government service as a scout and Indian fighter. For many years he evaded the whizzing arrows of the Sioux, only to succumb to a more deadly arrow flung from the bow of romance.

His detachment was about to attack an Indian village in 1867 with orders to kill every man. During the fighting a figure was seen moving in the tall grass. The long musket of a scout raised slowly to rid the world of another "red varmit" when Sam Terry suddenly grasped the barrel and ordered them to wait while he investigated the moving figure in the grass. Search revealed a beautiful Indian maiden. After the attack she followed Terry's every step as a faithful dog follows a master, and Sam Terry was her master, the gods had willed it so. Terry became a squawman and a real lover of the Indians.

Sam Terry, old timers say, was a noble character. After serving his country faithfully for twenty-three years, much of the time in the capacity of a professional enemy of the Indian, he found it in his heart to accept them as brothers, to serve them with understanding and tolerance. It was largely through the influence and efforts of Sam Terry that mutual understanding between the Indians and the Great White Father at Washington was brought about.

Sure Are Conspicuous if Not Legion Members

"If you don't belong to the Legion in Ft. Pierce, you're conspicuous as h—," is the rather startling but none the less truthful slogan that Ft. Pierce (Fla.) American Legionnaires have adopted, and for good reasons. There are just 258 white ex-service persons of the World war in Ft. Pierce and vicinity. Ft. Pierce post has enrolled every single one of the 258 available. Forty-four members were enrolled in a recent membership contest. The record of Ft. Pierce post as regards membership has not been equaled by any veteran unit in the country. The Florida department has made a remarkable membership record this year as was indicated recently when they won the Hanford MacNider trophy for greatest increase of membership over the 1923 enrollment. Florida department is unique, too, in that there is not a post in bad standing in the entire department.

Stormy Seas

The morning felicitations were well under way.

"I wish you'd take your spoon out of your coffee cup," she said.

"Why should you care?" the surly brute demanded.

"I merely wanted you to have plenty of room when you dip in your toast, dear!" she suggested sweetly.—American Legion Weekly.

WHO'S WHO—and WHERE

Gen. Taylor Now U. S. Chief Engineer

Brig. Gen. Harry Taylor is the new chief of engineers, U. S. A., succeeding Maj. Gen. Lansing H. H. Beach, who has been the incumbent since 1920 and now retires. General Taylor has been an assistant to the chief of engineers, in charge of the civil division, since 1918. He was chief engineer A. E. F. from May, 1917, to September, 1918, and has the D. S. M. and is a member of the Legion of Honor.

General Taylor was born in 1862 in New Hampshire and is a graduate of the United States Military academy (1884) and the Engineering School of Application (1887). His engineering duties have taken him all over the country. Until 1896 he was busy on the Columbia river and on river and harbor works in Oregon and Washington. Then he put in four years in charge of the Puget sound defense works. Next he went to the Philippines for four years. Next he was for several years engaged on defense and other works on Long Island sound. He was assistant to the chief of engineers, 1911-16. From then until he went to France he was in charge of the New York harbor works.

The Corps of Engineers, it should be understood, is not merely a part of the War department. It is charged with many duties in connection with the navigable waters of the country.

Anne Nichols and "Abie's Irish Rose"

A year ago in Chicago began a litigation suit to put a show called "Abie's Irish Rose" into the Studebaker theater. After a battle in the courts lasting nearly a month the play was opened. Three years ago this same comedy was fighting for breath in New York. Producers had spurned it and the Fulton theater in which it was exhibiting played to empty houses. It is now playing at five theaters to crowded houses.

So a woman, single handed, has won out. Anne Nichols began her stage career as an actress. For many years she barnstormed. Then she wrote seven plays for Fiske O'Hara. These were profitable in a small way. Then she wrote "Abie's Irish Rose." It had its first showing in Los Angeles. After 42 weeks on the coast it was moved to New York. The eastern critics gave it a cold shoulder and for five weeks it hovered between life and death. With much difficulty Miss Nichols managed to borrow enough to keep the comedy in the theater despite the fact that all her friends said it "didn't have a chance." She was $30,000 in debt before "Abie" made a nickel profit. It was later transferred into the Republic theater where it still is, now in the third year.

Scott Says U. S. Universities Are Best

Walter Dill Scott, president of Northwestern university, has returned to the Evanston campus after a ten-weeks' trip in Europe firmly convinced that the United States has by far the best universities and the best educational equipment in the world.

"Regardless of what may have been true in the past, there is no doubt that the best educational opportunities today lie in the United States," President Scott said. "There was a time when students had to go to Europe if they wanted the best education possible, but that is no longer true.

"Our colleges are much better equipped in every line from liberal arts to medicine. In France and England the universities are still tied down by tradition. Most of them do not even try to keep up with the latest ideas in education. Cambridge was the only university I found where they were beginning to modernize equipment."

President Scott plunged at once into the task of registration. This year freshmen, besides taking the usual mental alertness tests, must also be examined in mathematics and English. Before arriving on the campus they must have forwarded six recommendations as to their general character and give reasons why they want to enter college. All are being photographed.

Dr. Smith May Be Seeing 'Em in Alaska

Philip S. Smith, administrative geologist of the United States Geological Survey, will be back in Washington some of these days from Alaska with some interesting stories. At this writing he is exploring for petroleum in the region between the Porcupine and Colville rivers, which is practically unknown. A letter that came through to civilization by Eskimo hands has told of the discovery of a large river which flows west and then north.

London Tit-Bits thinks Doctor Smith may see things more interesting than rivers. It says it is rumored that there are weird animals of immense size up there. Strange tales, it says, have been spread amongst the fur traders and gold hunters by the native Eskimos and Indians regarding the territory which appears on the maps largely as a blank space.

They say the land is haunted by weird beasts, some of such great size that they leave tracks as large as dinner plates. It is stated that no Indian can be persuaded to penetrate this region even though tempted by the promise of abundant fur. Some of the more credulous of the white men, linking these tales with their scientific reading, contend that there may still lurk in the Far North remnants of the mastodon herds that have left their bones and ivory in almost every stream bordering the lower Yukon river.

"So" he remarked cooly, 'you have jilted me. Who has supplanted me?

"I don't like to tell you,' she answered with averted face.

UNTIL DEATH DO US PART

A very sly young man experienced consconsiderable difficulty in summoning up sufficient courage to pro pose to the girl of his heart.

One day he took her to a walkin a cemetery, and stood awkward and tongue-tied before his family tomb.

At last he blurted out "Lizzie ,d-d darling—would you like to sleep here someday?"

At the end of the sermon the preacher said, "Let every brother and sister who pays their debts stand on their feet." Every person with one exception then arose. "Be seated. Now, those who can't pay their debts stand up," and a poor white faced, hollow chested individual wearing a moth eaten suit, with the help of a cane, finally got to his feet. With tears in his eyes the minister asked, "Why, my poor man, are you unable to pay your just debts?" "I", said the poor brother, "publish a newspaper and most of these people are my subscribers." "Let us pray," said the minister.

Henry Ford's offer for the property was accepted by the House last spring and the bill, as well as the Norris bill providing for government operation, will be the special order of business in the Senate when Congress convenes in December.

The controversy over Muscle Shoals has been going on ever since Ford made his bid in July 1921, and has been the subject of bitter debate, both in Congress nad through the press.

MAKING VINEGAR IN SHORTER TIME

By controlling the temperature of th place in which the vinegar barrel is kept and by the intelligent use of starters, vinegar can be made in a relatively short space of time.

Use only sound ripe apples. Winter and fall apples are better than summer apples because they contain more sugar. All spoiled and wormy spots must be cut out. Cleanliness is essential throughout the entire process. The fruit must be washed, and the cider press clean and all containers washed and scalded.

Do not make the mistake of putting fresh apple juice in an old vinegar barrel which has not been thoroughly cleansed and scalded. Any barrel even though new, should be treated with lives team or boiling water.

If possible let the apple juice stand a few days before pouring into the barrel. This gives the sediment a chance to settle. The draw off the clear juice and fill the barrel two thirds full. Lay it on its side, bung holes open and up. A thin cloth tacked over the holes will keep out the insects and the dirt.

For every five gallons of this fresh apple juice, allow one cake of compressed yeast soaked in a little of the juice. Keep the barrel in a place where it will never be colder than 65 degrees F. or warmer than 75 dergrees F. The warmth and the yeast will cause the apple juice to ferment quickly. Never add "mother" or old vinegar in any form to the cider when it is fermentnig as it will stop the fermentation.

This first fermentation will be over sometime within three months. When the juice quits foaming and no new bubbles arise, the alcoholic fermentation is over and the second fermentation, or the acetic fermentation begins.

Draw off the clear liquid. Rinse out the barrel. Lay the barrel on its side as before. bore a hole 1½ inches in diameter in each head of the barrel at the top and tack a thin piece of cloth over each. These hole permit the supply of air which is necessary to help turn the alcohol into vinegar.

Acetic fermentation will take place without the help of a starter but it is a long process. By using a sarter of good unpasteurized vinegar and keeping the temperature of the store room between 70 and 80 degreesF., the second fermentation will be over within the year.

If "mother" is added, be sure it is good "mother." The heavy, slippery lump which is found in the bottom of vinegar jugs contains substances of disagreeable tastes and odors. Good mother is the thin, white film which forms on the surface of vinegar. It seldom becomes one-sixteenth of an inch in thickness. So long as it is kept floating on the surface it will continue to manufacture acetic acid and assist in the second fermentation. It can be floated on a splinter or on a little raft.

When the second fermentation is over, pour the vinegar into casks or bottles and cork tightly.

PRAGUE'S UNIQUE MUSEUM DEVOTED ONLY TO BUTTONS

"Button, button, who's got the button?" They know in Prague where buttons are to be found, for there is a button museum in the Czecho-Slovak capital in which every form of button ever manufactured or wrought by hand is on exhibit. The button museum is one of them ost unique institutions of its kind in the world.

The museum was founded by a button manufacturer by the name of Henry Waldes. Within a few years the institution has so expanded that it fills two floors of a large house in the suburbs of Wrschowitz.

A study of the materials used is in itself most worth while. There are buttons of goid, of silver of ivory, bronze, porcelain, of precious stones such as turquois, opal, carneol, etc. Some buttons date back 3,000 years before Christ. The flashiest and showiest buttons are those of the eighteenth century, when Europe seemed to enjoy luxury.

The most gruesome buttons are the so-called poison buttons, containing a tiny phial and surmounted by a sharp stud. In the days of political assinations it was an easy thing for a man attending as a ball, to approach his adversary and, in a crowd, to brush by him in such a way that the button scratched his skin the contents of the button would then flow with fatal consequences.

KOREAN CAVE DWELLERS SKELETONS DISCOVERED

Remains of the prehistoric inhabtants of Korea, believed by Japanese scientists to be 4,000 years old, have ben found in several dolmens, or burial chambers in Couth Heian province, near Pyrengyang. These domens are believed to be the burial places of a race of cave dwellers who inhabited the Korean peninsula about four millenia years ago, long before Korean recorded history began. The discovery is hailed by an thropologists as the most important in the history of the antiquarian research in Korea.

WHO GOES TO HIGH SCHOOL?

In all times in the memory of the oldest settler it has been generally understood that the town and city children get thebenefit of high school ducation while the country boys and girls are deprived of such. Time was when this was true, but not today. The increased interest in high school and the rapid growth of consolidated schools has changed all this. A recent survey of five widely separated states shows that 3.15 of the farm population is enrolled in high schools compared with 3.55 of the non-farm population This should give cause to the people who regard the farm as a backwoods area where education is not rated very high. It has been proved beyond argument that the high school education is valuable to the tiller of the soil just as it is to the pupil who goes into(mercantile business or takse up one of the professions.

BEHOLD HER

Consider the maiden. Lo, though the winds blow and chilleth, she weareth upon her feet shoes that are and hose that are like unto cob webs. And the neck of her gown existeth not. Yet she declareth she is warm as toast. She goes forth in to the highways, and she carr eth a party box, and therein are many strange things wherewith to kalsomine her countenance. Puffs there are and the skin of a chamois and many pigments, white as the lillies of Hebron and red as the sunsets over Jordon. She maketh up where she listeth and careth not who observeth, and though her lips become as pomegranate, yet she denieth there is any color in the stuff. With gaze or reproof she telleth thee that it is camphor ice and that it tintnot. And, behold, she putteth it on over t hee. She g oeth forth at night, she taugoeth until dawn is on the mountains and the morning breeze stirs the cedars and she is not a bit tired. But when her mother beggeth her to go up to the market place for a cubit of calico, lo she lingertth upon the vine. Wondrous are the ways of a woman; you bet.— Exchange.

AUTOMOBILE TOLL OF LIVES

Fourteen hundred killed in one disaster would shock the nation, yet aproximately that number, 1,398 to be exact, met death during the first eight month of this year in New York state alone through automobile accidents, without exciting any particular attention.

While medicine and surgery are working wonders in the saving of humanity, the grim toll of the auto mobile mounts higher and highre each year.

Most of this terrible sacritice is entirely unnecessary, being caused by reckless or incompetent drivers The pity of it is that so many of the victims were merely passengers in the wrecked cars, killed and maimed through no fault of their own.

If irresponsible speed maniacs destroyed only themselves there would be less cause for grief, but unhappily they often escape, while helpless victims pay with their lives for the folly of these criminally careless drivers.

TAKE THAT, CONSARN YE!

There is an occasional young man who cannot be induced to leave the farm for the city. One who recently got a job in the city wrote his brother as follows: "Thursday we autoed out to the country club, where we golfed until dark. Then we motored to the beach for the week-end." The brother on the farm wrote back: "Yesterday we buggied to town and baseballed all the afternoon. Then we went to Ned's and pokered until morning Today we muled out to the cornfield and geehawed until sundown. Then we suppered and piped awhile. After that we staircased up to our room and bedsteaded until the clock fived."—Exchange.

FAT CATTLE HIGHER—FEEDERS STARTING UP.

The rising fat cattle market which reached $12.00 last week in Chicago is affecting feeder prices. Only one man in a hundred would take out heavy feeders this fall, so they all went to packers. The natural result was a demoralized killer market on all heavy cattle, but pastures will soon be cleaned up now, and then—

There will be a scramble for heavy, fleshy feeders at higher prices for a short feed during the period, November 1st to April 1st, when heavy finished cattle will bring $13.00 to $14.00 in Chicago. Remember this prediction.

The foot and mouth report from a point near Houston, Texas, caused some unwarranted hesitancy and held back many buyers last week. The government reports complete control of it. The time is near when that disease will cause no more stir in cattle circles than cholera and cattle tick.

MASTER FORGERS' TRICKS EXPOSED

The "Perfect Forgery" Always Has a Weak Spot That Leads to Penman's Downfall.

NATIONWIDE DRAGNET OUT

Bankers Working Together to Catch Crooks Who Cause Losses of $150,000,000 With Bad Checks Yearly.

A bogus check scheme that was so original, sound and business-like that it became known in detective circles as "the one perfect forgery," but finally, like all of them, led to its own inventor being trapped, is described by Reuben A. Lewis, Jr., in the American Bankers Association Journal. The article, which says forgeries cost the banks and business concerns at least $150,000,000 a year, deals with the ways of forgers and the relentless warfare being conducted against them by the bankers.

"Crime does not pay," Mr. Lewis says. "Soon the law reaches out and seizes the misguided operator who thinks he can get away with it. For one of the peculiar things about the forger is that, while he may devise a clever scheme that brings a rich return on its initial trial, he continues to work it until caught.

"Fortunately, there appears to be a weak spot in the best laid scheme. And just as soon as this weak spot is uncovered, it is broadcast to all the banks in the land. So the banks, informed as to the method of approach that the forger will make, and the little peculiarities of the job, are on the alert to nab him when he makes his next reappearance.

The King of Forgers

"The 'master forger' is William Hamilton Harkins, probably the most dangerous operator known to the banking world. Several times in the toils of the law, Harkins has managed to escape. The daring 'king' of the forgers made a confession that he had defrauded banks of more than $300,000 during the years of his career.

"His scheme follows a certain set pattern. The key to Harkins' plan is obtaining a blank check from the checkbook of a well known firm. Recently Harkins sauntered into the office of a granite dealer. He ordered a monument and tendered a check for a substantial part of the memorial. He requested the proprietor of the store to permit him to dash off a letter to his folks at home. Seizing a propitious moment, Harkins spotted his checkbook, noted the exact balance, tore out a sheaf of checks and disappeared.

"Reproducing the proprietor's signature, Harkins drew up a sizeable check. On the reverse side he inscribed his alias as the payee and then added after 'O. K.' the facsimile of the depositor's signature. This acted as an identification indorsement, so when he presented the check at the bank it was readily cashed.

The Weak Spot

"The weak spot in Harkins' scheme is the identification indorsement. If the teller, before cashing any check bearing this alleged indorsement, telephoned to the depositor and checked up on its issuance, the scheme would have short shrift."

Banks throughout the country have been put on guard against Harkins and his plan and it is believed he cannot operate long without again falling into the net. The scheme that was pronounced unbeatable was devised by a forger known as F. Mayer and centered around the certified check fraud, Mr. Lewis says, continuing:

"F. Mayer would open accounts with four or five banks in a sizeable city. The largest account ran around $5,000. By kiting checks back and forth between the several banks, he would establish his identity with the tellers and become known as a man accustomed to deal in large figures.

"After conducting these preliminaries for a few weeks, Mayer would go to the bank where he had his largest account and ask that a certified check be issued to him for substantially all of the money remaining to his credit. From the genuine check, he would make four or five duplicates.

"In turn, Mayer would visit the other banks, where he had established small accounts. Inasmuch as he had cashed checks for some time, Mayer generally had little trouble in getting the banks to honor the certified checks. If a teller took the precaution of calling the issuing bank on the telephone to inquire if it had made out such a certified check, he would gain confirmation.

The Forger Caught

"But even the 'perfect' forgery scheme cannot be worked with impunity. Mayer succeeded in defrauding Kansas City banks out of $27,000 and made his escape. A few months later he was walking down the streets of Los Angeles when a teller who had honored one of the bogus checks in the middle western city recognized him. Mayer took to his heels with the former teller in hot pursuit, and the criminal lost."

The losses sustained through forgeries by banks may be mainly attributed to the failure of the tellers to observe the rules against cashing checks for strangers or allowing depositors to draw on uncollected items.

"A relentless, sustained hunt is conducted to apprehend the forgers. The new twists, the variations in the methods, the latest ruses used are followed by the detectives. The modes of operation are broadcasted throughout the country," the article declares. "The American Bankers Association alone, through its Protective Division, spends more than $100,000 a year to check depredations against banks."

The Red Line Trail

"TREASURE!"

SYNOPSIS.—Thrown from his auto in a New York village, a man is carried unconscious into the home of a Miss Edith Grant. A doctor discovers he has been shot, fatally. Consciousness returning, he babbles of "millions." He begs that Henry Archman, millionaire resident of the vicinity, be sent for, declaring he has important papers for him. Archman cannot be reached by phone, but word is sent that his secretary is on the way. A man announcing himself as Archman's secretary, Akin, arrives, talks with Morbach, and leaves with a package he gives him. Morbach dies. Archman's arrival, with his secretary, reveals that the man posing as Akin is an impostor. Archman denounces Edith Grant as a girl endeavoring to snare his son Harry. Archman, it appears, his millions made in Chicago, has yielded to the importunities of his family—his wife, daughters Nellie and Bessie (seventeen years old), and son Harry—and moved to New York in an endeavor to gain recognition by the Four Hundred. They have not succeeded. Mrs. Archman is bitter over her failure, particularly mourning the fact that she has not been "taken up" by a Mrs. Van Kull. Archman orders Nellie to get ready for a long journey with him. He refuses to reveal their destination to his wife, declaring it is "not his secret." Nellie tells Bess she is in love with James Carr, a youth working on Archman's ship, El Rio. She gives Bess a message for him. Archman and Nellie depart. Harry tells Bess of his determination to marry Edith Grant. Mrs. Archman receives a map, with the explanation that it was among Morbach's papers, and suggesting she forward it to Mr. Archman. Lord George Caruthers, traveling Englishman, arrives at the Archman home, by invitation. He makes a good impression. Bess meets Carr and tells him her sister's message. She learns from him that "Edith Grant" is his sister. He says he loves Nellie. Mrs. Archman decides to take Bess and Harry and Caruthers and sail with Captain Bunker on the El Rio to meet her husband.

"He doesn't go with you, you say?"

"No."

"I'm very glad to hear it." Mrs. Archman stared out on the deck. "Would you mind calling the young people in?" she asked. "I want to tell them."

The three tramped merrily into the chart house. "Hello, mumsy," called Bess. "What's up? You're plotting something. I can see it in your eye. Own up."

Mrs. Archman smiled. "Right," she said. "I've something to tell you. I've decided to take you all with me on the ship to meet your father."

"Wha-a-at? You're joking, mumsy!" It was Bess who cried out.

Mrs. Archman kept her eyes on her daughter. "No; it's true," she said. "Your father needs us and we must go."

Bess showed none of the dejection for which the older woman was looking. Instead, her eyes twinkled. "Good!" she exclaimed. "No more school for yours truly!"

"School!" Mrs. Archman hesitated. Evidently she had forgotten school. "I must take along a governess," she decided.

"A governess!" Bess shrieked.

"Yes! So, captain, there'll be five of us—myself, my son, my daughter, a governess, and at least one maid. Oh! And of course there'll be Mr. Akin. You'll make preparations?"

"Yes, madam."

Mrs. Archman got up. "It will be quite a rush to get ready," she said. "We'd better be about it." She turned to the Englishman. "Lord George," she said, "I'm very sorry to rescind my invitation to you. But you can see how it is. Unless you would like to go with us on the ship—"

"On the ship? Really? How positively ripping! I'll be delighted to go!"

Mrs. Archman colored and caught her breath. She had not had the slightest idea that Lord George would accept. However, she swiftly decided that it was all for the best. She could see the paragraphs in the society news: "Lord George Caruthers is yachting with Mrs. Henry Archman and party—" She turned quickly to him. "Will you come, really?" she exclaimed. "I'm very glad."

"Well, rather! It'll be awfully jolly and all that, you know. Er—where are we going?"

"I don't know. Captain Bunker has sealed orders."

"Sealed orders! Oh, by Jove! I say! That's ripping, you know—positively ripping!"

In various stages of pleasure and dejection, the visitors left the ship. Bess looked about for Mr. Carr, but she did not see him. As a matter of fact, he was on his way to Captain Bunker's cabin, where he had been summoned to receive orders in regard to new fittings for the extra cabins that would be brought into use by the new passengers.

CHAPTER VII

Ship's Company

The first snow of winter was falling thickly as the El Rio chugged downstream between the towering man-made cliffs edged with crowded ships. Besides Mrs. Archman, the El Rio carried as passengers Bess and Harry, Lord George Caruthers, Akin, Miss Denslow, the new governess and Ann Hawkins, a maid. Miss Denslow had been engaged after three days' frantic search for someone qualified for the purpose who was willing to leave town on a sea voyage of indefinite length.

She brought a letter of introduction and recommendation from Miss Van Kull, the daughter of Nicholas Van Kull, on whom Mr. Archman had called with apparently disastrous consequences on the night of the murder. Mrs. Archman had jumped at the chance to repair the breach, and had immediately engaged Miss Denslow tentatively. A little later she had called up Miss Van Kull on the telephone, and, though she had not succeeded in getting speech with her, had received assurances that Miss Denslow was everything she should be—a lady, highly educated, companionable, and versatile in her accomplishments—and a warm friend of Miss Van Kull's. This was enough for Mrs. Archman, who had instantly confirmed Miss Denslow's engagement.

Bess, though more or less put out by her failure to escape tutelage, had become speedily reconciled at sight of Miss Denslow, who was a sweet-faced woman of perhaps forty years of age, with white hair, good, though lined complexion, regular features and beautiful white teeth.

The El Rio was a good sea boat. She did not pitch much, and she rolled only in a leisurely fashion that was a guarantee that most of her passengers would soon recover from any sickness that might at first annoy them. In fact, only Mrs. Archman, who had sought her stateroom as soon as the vessel crossed the bar, seemed at all affected. Miss Denslow was still busy in her stateroom, and Akin was tick-tacking on his typewriter, but the other three were collected on deck. They were all in good spirits, even Harry, who seemed to have recovered from his depression of a few days before. "Well, we're off all right," he observed. "But I wish somebody'd tell me where we're going and what we're going for. We've moved so fast in the last week that I don't know where I'm at, at all."

"The question is, where is father at?" Bess remarked.

"Father? Oh, father and Nellie are roosting on that mysterious island! That's what mother says, anyway. For my part I can't see it."

Lord George chimed in. "It's jolly queer about that map, isn't it, what?" he observed. "As I understand the thing, Mr. Archman doesn't get the map and so he starts for the place shown on it. Then your mother gets it, and we all start for we don't know where. I say, it's quite a lark, isn't it?"

"I hope it will turn out to be a lark, Lord George," remarked Bess. I'm beginning to be a little frightened, I think. I can't understand why the thief should send the map back to us—if the map really is the one that was stolen. Oh, Miss Denslow! I'm glad you've come on deck, after all. Have you met Lord George Caruthers? Miss Denslow, Lord George!"

Lord George bowed. But as he raised his head, his eyes met those of the governess, and a curious expression of puzzlement came upon his face. Miss Denslow, too, seemed startled.

"It is a pleasure to meet Lord George," she said hastily.

"Ah! Yes! Quite so! It's a great pleasure, I assure you," stammered Lord George. "That is, I mean—er—haven't I met you before, Miss—er—Denslow? Did I catch the name? I'm a beastly duffer at catching names, you know."

Miss Denslow bowed. "Yes; it's Miss Denslow," she answered. "I fear it is unlikely that we could have met before. You know I am Miss Archman's governess."

"Governess?"

Harry laughed. "Bess isn't out of school yet, Lord George," he said, "for all she's put up her hair."

"Fancy, now! Oh! I say, I never would have thought it. I wouldn't really. At home, don't you know, a schoolgirl would be still in the nursery. But over here, upon my word, you can't tell them from young ladies."

Bess' teeth clicked viciously. Lord George seemed to be getting on her nerves. But for some reason she made no effort to counter. Instead she carried the conversation back to the earlier topic. "We were talking about our trip and how it will turn out. I suppose you know more or less about it?"

"More or less, yes!" responded Miss Denslow. "Rather less than more, I'm afraid."

"Well, it's this way." Bess recounted the events of the last few days. "We were just trying to figure out why the thief sent the map back," she ended.

Miss Denslow seemed to ponder. "Perhaps he was not a really bad thief," she suggested, rather breathlessly. "Perhaps he was after money and when he got only a map and saw that it wasn't any use to him, he just sent it back."

Bess nodded. "That must be the explanation," she agreed. "But still—"

From forward came four sharp strokes of the ship's bells. At the sound Harry jumped to his feet. "Ten o'clock!" he exclaimed. "Time for Captain Bunker to open those orders of his. I'll go see if he's done it."

Five minutes later he was back. "Captain Bunker says it will be fair and warm by morning," he remarked. "We ought to make more than a hundred miles of southing during the night and that'll make a lot of difference in the temperature."

"Harry!" Bess cried out sharply "What are you talking about? Hasn't Captain Bunker opened his instructions yet?"

Harry laughed. "Yes; he's opened them," he said. "But it was a case of April fool."

Lord George and Miss Denslow both turned their heads suddenly. "April fool!" exclaimed the Englishman. "Oh, come now, old chap. It's October and not April. You're spoofing, aren't you?"

"Not a single spoof," rejoined Harry light-heartedly. "Not one! Father never did give anything away till he had to. When Bunker opened the envelope he found another envelope with 'Open this when you get to latitude 19 and longitude 64.' Only that and nothing more."

"Oh!" Lord George settled back in his chair. "My word! It must be something jolly well worth while that we're going after," he said.

Bess, however, was disappointed and showed it. "Well, where is latitude—whatever it is?" she demanded.

"It's off the coast of Haiti," returned Harry.

"Haiti! Good gracious!"

"That's what I say. What do you suppose it's all about?"

Lord George shook his head. "Couldn't it be treasure?" he suggested hopefully.

"Treasure!" Bess screamed. "Oh, I never hoped for anything so splendid!" she breathed. "Did you, Miss Denslow?"

Miss Denslow smiled and shook her head. "Not treasure!" she exclaimed. "Oh, I beg of you, not treasure! Treasure is so banal. And the sailors always mutiny and kill everybody except the hero and the heroine. Oh, please don't let us go after treasure!"

"All right, we won't." Harry spoke promptly. "We strive to please. We—yes, what is it? Oh, coffee. Yes; pass it to the ladies."

A bare-headed steward had come soft-footedly along the deck and was proffering a tray set with tiny cups.

When he came to Lord George that gentleman shook his head. "No; thank you," he said. "I used to drink coffee, don't you know, when I first went to sea, but I found out jolly soon that it wasn't any good."

Harry laughed. "They say champagne is better for that bilious feeling," he returned feelingly. "Will any of you have some?"

Bess shook her head. "No," she said; "we don't want any, but you take Lord George down and see what you can find." She turned to the waiter. "Steward," she said, "see if there is any champagne in the cooler and get it out for Mr. Harry."

Harry got up, laughing. "That means we are not wanted here, Lord George," he said. "I guess Bess wants to talk to Miss Denslow about her lessons. Come along and let's sample that wine."

The two men wandered off along the swaying deck. When they were gone, Bess leaned forward. "I'd like to shake that man," she exclaimed viciously. "He gets on my nerves. I may be a schoolgirl, but I'll show him a thing or two before this trip is over. See if I don't!"

Miss Denslow smiled comfortably. "I don't doubt it, my dear," she said. "But don't be too hard on him. He seems to be a nice enough man."

Harry and Lord George came back along the dim deck. Lord George sat down, but Harry continued to stand. "I think I'll turn in," he said. "That champagne wasn't quite what it is cracked up to be. I think—yes, I'm sure I had better turn in."

Who is the governess? and what is there between her and Lord George?

Made Name as Sculptor

Clark Mills was an American sculptor, born in Onondaga county, N. Y., December 1, 1815. He died January 12, 1883. In 1848, when he was on the eve of leaving for Europe to study the art of sculpture, he received a commission to erect an equestrian statue of General Jackson. According to the story, Mills had never even seen an equestrian statue. He, however, set to work, designed his model and then found it necessary to learn the art of bronze casting, inasmuch as there was no one in this country prepared to mold his figure in bronze. The statue of General Jackson by Mills is in Lafayette square, Washington, and a replica is in New Orleans.

Egyptian Water Clocks

Casts of two ancient Egyptian water clocks have just been presented by the Egyptian government to the Science museum, South Kensington, London, England. One of the clocks comes from Karnak, and dates from the reign of Amenhotep II, 1,400 years before Christ. The other is from Edfu, in the Ptolemaic epoch. From an examination of these clocks and the scale of measurements recorded on each, it appears that the "hour" of that remote period was a variable length, being one-twelfth of the length of the day or night of the particular time of the year. A study of these ancient timepieces is regarded as important in the comparison of astronomical observations.

SPANISH VOGUE IN SHAWLS; WEARABLE TYPES IN COATS

FASHION, this season, is conspicuously a matter of following the Spanish vogue. At every style exhibit, at social gatherings galore, where modish women add to the picture, in cable reports from across seas, in messages brought by word of mouth by those incoming voyagers who have not left a stone unturned in Paris, London, Vienna and other style centers in their search for "the latest," the present-day modes are discussed and exploited in terms of picturesque Spain.

One of the outstanding notes in this overwhelming favor for modes Spanish is the vogue for the deep-fringed, graceful, gay-hued shawl. Creators of style who express their genius through knitted stitch, having "caught the vision," are scoring new triumphs in that they are introducing the shawl.

SHAWL OF KNITTED TAN FIBER SILK

These wizards of the knitted art are ensnaring the feminine heart with beauteous long-fringed shawl creations which reflect most fascinatingly true Spanish colorings of crimson, black, orange, green and purple. Sometimes the color glory is varied, as in the case of this lovely shawl shown in the picture, which is knitted of tan fiber silk with striking pattern in orange. A flattering accessory to any costume is this lovely exponent of knitted artistry.

A black silk knitted shawl designed in triangular form, with an effective green and blue peacock pattern interknitted in the corner section, is an outcome of the Spanish shawl vogue.

Among the large knitted squares simulating the crepe Spanish shawls, green and beige are successfully introduced in a particularly handsome model, which carries a wide border knitted in fancy stitch, repeating the two colors in the deep fringe.

Mary had a little lamb, but he can no longer keep up with her. Instead, he contributes his fleece toward making her a coat all trimmed with braid and fur, and everywhere that Mary goes the coat's along with her. This is an arrangement highly satisfactory to Marys in general, who are just now looking for coats that will do for all-round wear, give good service and be equal to holding their own with different kinds of hats. For Mary has learned to leave it to the hat, more than anything else, when it comes to adapting costume to occasion.

Here is one of those accommodating new coats, of a soft and becoming pile fabric, with rich, but sturdy trimmings that will fit in with almost any background. Its plaid lining proclaims comfort and serviceability. Its luxurious collar and cuffs are of Hudson seal and there is a little glint of gold in the silk braid that makes a finishing touch. Probably its owner has a simple plaid frock to match the coat lining and a plain felt hat to complete, with the coat, an ensemble for everyday street wear. But her ostrich-trimmed millinery indicates that a pretty crepe de chine or satin afternoon dress is on its way—somewhere.

AN ACCOMMODATING NEW COAT

There are many beautiful and wearable types among the coats that stylists have prepared for this fall. Among the handsomest are coats of chocolate brown velours, with long waist, surplice fastening at the front, which brings two very large, decorated glass buttons a little to the left side. Dyed squirrel makes the ample and long shawl collar and wide cuffs.

In climates where there is no very cold weather the new coats of heavy ottoman silk will be found practical and very chic.

APPROPRIATE

After many conferences had been held by the board of directors of a small-town bank about buying a new water-cooler, a grouchy old member had this to say:

"Gentlemen, before we adjourn, I move that our next conference be held on a merry-go-round."

And, as they looked at him in astonishment, he added the tag of explanation:

"We never get anywhere."—Wall Street Journal.

Advisory Committees for Town Beautifying

Ugliness is becoming the rule in many of the extreme aspects of modern town life, the Literary Digest comments sadly. The suave writer calls it "indifference of the greater public" to "the general artistic and natural amenities of towns and rural areas." The beauty of the past is sacrificed to make way for modern improvements, says the Christian Science Monitor, voicing a plea for concerted effort at town-beautifying:

"It is when things get bad, when they seem at their worst, that endurance reaches its limit. Already in parts of America something has been done toward the suppression of billboards that bade fair to conceal the country as completely as the smoke screen in a battle at sea shields the fleet, and without the same reason or necessity. The preservation of the American amenities, if too local for the art commission in Washington, is left largely to woman's clubs. The English would take more thorough measures. Architects, roused to a realization of the sadness of a land from which beauty has flown, and eager to stay its flight, suggest the formation of advisory art committees in towns and country both. Their function would be much the same, though on a more restricted scale, as that of the English art commission modeled after the pattern of the American. The committees would advise and interfere in their own districts—interfere when some avoidable piece of vandalism was proposed; advise when new buildings were to be put up, new streets laid, new open spaces planned.

"They would have no power but, the hope is, would exercise an influence gradually growing irresistible as the public consciousness should awaken to a sense of the part beauty plays in life. Such, in a few words, is the scheme suggested by the Royal Institute of British Architects for the guardianship of beauty in England."

Removed Billboards From All Highways

Definite steps by civic organizations to eliminate billboards from the highways of the Pacific coast are expected to result from the impetus given the movement by the Standard Oil company of California, which has torn down 1,200 of its roadway signs in California, Oregon and Washington.

The company removed its highway advertisements on the ground that they detracted from the beauty of the roads, and ordered that hereafter such signs should be confined to commercial zones.

"There was instant public response up and down the coast," said Kenneth R. Kingsbury, president of the company. "We have had editorials, letters and telegrams by the hundreds indicating that a keen feeling exists concerning the marring of our great highways by signs."

The Skyline boulevard, a great highway being completed from San Francisco southward along the high ridges overlooking the Pacific ocean, is reported to be insured against billboards.

Ugliness a Liability

Attractiveness has been deemed an important asset in the development of such thoroughfares as Fifth avenue in New York and Michigan boulevard in Chicago. There is no question that the beautiful home in an attractive residence district has a value far in excess of the commonplace home in a district of uneven development. But does attractiveness pay in commercial building in general as in the case of residences? Is it good business to put up an attractive office or store building rather than a plain, unadorned structure, even an ugly structure? It was observed in one of the large cities recently that the ugly commercial building was the one most often without tenants and the structure that as a rule was the first to be torn down and replaced. No doubt that observation would hold in many instances, in many cities.—Kansas City Times.

Make Home "Fire-Safe"

The man who builds a fire-safe home is a good citizen. He is adding something permanent to the wealth of his community, and he has provided a fire barrier that in itself will tend to lessen conflagration and provide stopping points for them.

Put a fire-safe roof covering on your home. Various kinds of fire-resistive roofing have been tested and tried and found to be well worth their slight extra cost.

The man with a fire-safe home will generally find that his banker will grant a larger proportion of its cost on first mortgage loans owing to the added security.

Guard Against Fire

When the house is completed you do not want the fear of fire always before you. Those who have seen the results of large conflagrations will realize something of the tragedy of thousands of homes being destroyed and hundreds of home owners losing their all. Even those who are insured never get full compensation for all their losses. Many things are destroyed in a home that money cannot replace, and there is no adequate insurance against the risk of human life.

WOMEN OF MIDDLE AGE

Praise Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

"A Blessing to Suffering Women," Writes One

Louisville, Illinois.—"I certainly thank you for the great benefit I have received from taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I first learned about it from my step-mother who got so much help from it. Several years ago I took it for inward weakness and since then I have taken it during the Change of Life and it has been a great help to me. It certainly is a blessing to suffering women and I take pleasure in recommending it. My health has been better this summer than it has been for five years. I am now able to do all my work and have canned 340 quarts of fruit and vegetables this summer."—Mrs. KATE MCPEAK, Louisville, Illinois.

Wants Letter Used As Proof

Frankford, Pennsylvania.—"I am sure if women who suffer through the Change of Life as I have, with hot flashes, nervousness and other weaknesses, would give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial they would be benefited as I was. My nerves were so bad that every little noise made me jump, but now I am not bothered that way at all. My husband says he really hated to look at me I looked so miserable. I hope you will use this letter as proof of the help the Vegetable Compound is giving me."—Mrs. ABBIE HARVEY, 5701 Leonard St., Frankford, Pa.

Forced To Remain in Bed

Carlisle, Illinois.—"During the Change of Life I suffered with severe nervousness and with disturbances of the entire system. These continued probably two years before I began taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I could do none of my work and was not always able to be up. For ten days at a time I was forced to remain in bed with my hips propped higher than my head and the pains were terrible. The doctor helped some but each time I was forced to go over the same suffering. I had taken the Vegetable Compound in 1910 after my twins were born and it had helped me so I decided to try it again. I became better and gained in strength. I have taken it for about three years now but not steadily. I am able to do my housework but I avoid all heavy lifting and washing and ironing as I know I am not strong enough yet. I give the Vegetable Compound to my daughters and recommend it to my friends."—Mrs. LOUISA B. BRAND, 450 Fairfax Street, Carlyle, Illinois.

In a recent country-wide canvass of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, over 100,000 replies were received and 98 out of every 100 reported they had been benefited by its use. For sale by druggists everywhere.

WINDMILL POPULAR FOR POWER ON FARM

More than $6,000,000 worth of windmills were turned out by 16 manufacturers making this popular farm power for pumping last year, according to the U. S. department of commerce. Sales everywhere indicate that the farmer was taking advantage of nature in doing the pumping than ever before. The great improvements that have practically eliminated tower climating and caught th gentlest breeze for turning the wheel have also been added with practically no increased cost. The self oiling and the ball bearing features have undoubtedly added many days work in each year to the possibilities of the windmill.

The piping of the running water to the farm kitchen and its storage for live stock and fire insurance risks have also been gaining tremendously in recent years. The hookup of the farm home to the windmill for a water supply for the kitchen, bath and laundry is comparatively easy and cheap. Augmented by a gas engine, it can be made a combination that can be depended upon for unlimited supply of water at any and all emergencies.

MR. AND MRS. HENRY GRIEWE CELEBRATE GOLDEN WEDDING

OVER 60 FRIENDS AND RELATIVES GATHERED AT THEIR HOME LAST MONDAY

They Were the Second Couple Ever to be Married in Ell Township

On Monday, October 13, Mr and Mrs Henry Griewe celebrated the Fiftieth Anniversary of their marriage.

Henry Griewe is 75 years old, was born in Eldenau, Mecklenberg, Germany. At the age of 16 he came to America, worked as a farm hand for a few years at Colesberg, Iowa, and then came west to Hancock County.

Mrs. Griewe, ne Mary Ell, is 70 years old and was born in Marysville Ohio. At the age of 16 she moved with her parents to Hancock County, this family being the first settlers in the township which bears their name.

On Thursday noon, October 13, 1874, Henry Griewe and Mary Ell were married. Written invitations were not sent out, but the grooms brother, William Griewe delivered this joy message to each guest by word of mouth. He rode horseback from farm to farm and invited thirty guests. It was necessary to ride many miles to do this and thirty people in those days was quite a crowd. This was the second couple who were ever married in Ell Township.

This wedding took place in a near-by school house. The bridal party arrived "on foot" and the thirty guests more than filled the small school house. There was no organ on which to play a wedding march, so Rev. Dudolph Feigenbaum, the officiating clergyman, led the congregation in singing the old familiar hymn, entitled "Der Besu Fruend ist in dem Himmel". William Griewe was best man, and Christiana Ell, now Mrs. Hosmer, was Bridesmaid.

These people stood up with the bridal pair and witnessed their taking the solomn vowes which made them man and wife, after congratulations and best wishes were extended the entire essemblage partook of a bountiful chicken dinner at the Ell home.

The very next week after the wedding this bride and groom got a job picking corn and they picked corn at the same wagon for three weeks, after which they hauled a few loads of lumber to their new farm in Liberty township and built a two room house and for 31 years this farm was "Home Sweet Home" to them.

Here they raised their family of five, and improved their farm from year to year until it was known far and near as one of the best kept farms in the county.

And then came the time when the children were all grown and it was necessary for them to retire from the farm and they moved to Klemme where they have lived 19 years, and are still quite active and strong.

A SILVER WEDDING

The following is an account of Mr. and Mrs. Griewe's Silver Wedding, which was clipped from the Klemme Times of Twenty-five years ago.

"Twenty-five years ago last Friday evening Henry Griewe ceased to be in single blessedness and took unto himself a wife. It may be that he had forgotten about it, but his friends and neighbors had not, and was forcibly brought back to his memory. At about 8:30 o'clock, when they were seriously thinking of going to rest after the day's labor, the household were startled and frightened by unseemly noise—guns were fired, sleigh bells jingled, tin pans sounded the tum-tum, pandemonium seemed to have turned loose for a holiday. Going to the door to investigate he was confronted by F. W. Lenz and wife, J. L. Carr and wife, E. H. Lenz and wife, George Kluckhohn and wife, John Quetzmacher and wife, Philip Ell and wife, Dr. Richter and wife, Geo. Bartholomew and wife and Mrs. Nissen. Surprised! well I guess so. After the guests had congratulated their host and hostess, F. W. Lenz, in a neat little speech, presented them with a beautiful silver tea set of four pieces.

ments were served, consisting of ice cream and cake, coffee, fruit, etc., to which all did justice. They do say th t John Gruetzmacher has a great liking for fish—but that is another story. Itw as an enjoyable evening and although the surprise was complete, Mr. and Mrs. Griewe were equal to the occasion, and in their usual good style, royally entertained their guests."

And now, fifty years of married life brings them to their Golden Wedding Day, and sixty friends and relatives were called in this week Monday to help commemorate the occasion.

Tre first eight invitations to go out were to those who were still living of the gay party of thirty guests who witnessed the original ceremony fifty years ago. They are: Philip Ell, Mrs. C. Hosmer, Mrs. K. Nissen, Mr. and Mrs. George Kluckhohn, Mrs. William Bredlow, Mrs. Henry Lau and George Ell.

The Griewe home was appropriately decorated with autumn leaves, golden rods and yellow chrysanthemums. Three long tables, each in a separate room were laden, same as fifty years before, with a bountiful chicken dinner.

The minister of honor, at this Golden Wedding was Rev. G. Haefner, 89 years old. He was to have conducted the ceremony fifty years ago but other duties made it impossible for him to do so, but at this occasion he officiated in good form.

After the guests were seated at the tables, Rev. Heifner opened the festivities by giving thanks nd asking God's blessing.

The guests then joined in singing the same German hymn which was sung fifty years before, and at intervals between the courses of the meal, talks were given by Rev. F. C. Griewe, Rev. F. W. Ortmeyer and Rev. A. W. Gauger, interspersed with music by the grandchildren.

In the evening of this Golden Wedding day Mrs. and Mrs. Henry Griewe were at home to their neighbors and friends, and while the home filled with the guests of the evening, the Klemme Band stole up to the porch and serenaded the gathering with several appropriate selections.

And later in the evening the charivari crowd arrived, with the usual din and noise. After the bride and groom came out to greet them the ladies of the charavari crowd snag several heart songs, such as "The Old Gray Bonnet," "Long, Long Trail," etc.

Lunch was then served to all the guests, the band and the charivari crowd.

The bride and groom were radiant with happiness, as the guests bestowed unto them their Best Wishes and said, Goodnight.

Mr. and Mrs. Griewe leave Friday of this week for a few days visit with their son, John of Minneapolis

"THAT'S WHAT THEY ALL SAY"

"I can't keep the visitors from coming up," said the office boy dejectedly to the great editor. 'When I say you're out they don't believe me. They say they must see you."

"Well," said the editor, "just tell them that's what they all say. I don't care if you get rough with them. I must have quietness."

That afternoon there called at the office a lady. She wanted to see the editor, and the boy assured her that it was impossible.

"But I must see him! she protested. I'm his wife!"

"That's what they all say," replied the boy.

K. H. S. BASEBALL BOYS ARE DEFEATED AGAIN

Swaledale Boys Have Easy Walk Away Last Friday

Last Friday the local High School baseball team journeyed to Swaledale, and there gave very good demonstration of how not to play the national game. The Swaledale boys took advantage of every error made and proceeded to give the locals a trouncing to the tune of 7 to 1.

The game played by the K. H. S. boys was charactrized chiefly by errors. A couple of nice "pop-flys" were missed in the infield, several grounders drifted into the outfield, unnecessarily, and once the 3rd base man went to sleep with a man on second, stealing third. Gimer, on the mound for Klemme, pitched a fairly good game, but certainly lacked the backing, needed for a winning baseball team.

Pat and Mike were lying in bed in pitch darkness. Suddenly Pat got up. He lit a match, looked around and then blew it out and lay down again.

"What did you do that for?" asked Mike.

"Oh," replied Pat, "you see, I forgot if I blew out the candle cut or not, so I just looked to see.'

He is a fine young man, of good habits and a sunny disposition. We are not acquainted with the bride but we are informed that she is a delightful young lady and will make Donald a good helpmate.

Mr. and Mrs. Donald Nissen arrived in Klemme last night for a visit with their relatives and many friends here.

"Then I am to understand that you have —er—given me the mitten, as it were.'

John William Waterman

John William Waterman was born September 21, 1869 in Volga township, Clayton county, Iowa. He was the oldest son of Henry and Pauline Waterman who belonged to the early settlers of that community. His parents were members of the Luther an Church and John was confirmed in the Emanuel Lutheran Church of Elkport, Iowa on April 6, 1884. He was united in marriage to Mary Boehm of the same place on May 27, 1896. They made their home on a farm in Benton county for a number of years and then came to Klemme, Iowa in 1902. Mr. Waterman soon engaged in business and conducted a general store for eleven years selling out to John N. Day in the spring in 1913. In 1914 he was appointed Postmaster and for nine years served the public of this community in a most satisfactory manner. In the same year he built the large double store now occupied by G. W. Kluckhohn and Sons selling to them in 1919. He also erected the present postoffice building. In April of this year he moved to Clarion, Iowa, where he conducted a cash store until failing health necessitated his retiring from business.

He and his wife then located in Belmond where the deseased hoped to build up his system and regain his health, but a wise providence willed otherwise. Two weeks ago his condition changed for the worse. He was taken to the hospital where he passed away Wednesday, October 8th at the age of 55 years and 17 days of a chronic Brights desease and unusual high blood pressure. Their home was blessed with two children; a son, Clarence of Klemme and a daughter Mabel, now Mrs. Chester Cullinan of Belmond. Besides his berieved wife and children, he leaves one grandchild, Marion Lucille, daughter of Clarence; six brothers and two sisters, George, William and Martin of Sanborn, Minnesota, Henry and Charles of Luzerne, Iowa, August of Rockford, Illinois, Mrs Emma Buch of Keystone, Iowa and Mrs. Charles Behrens of Springfield Minnesota, and a host of friends.

Mr. Waterman was of a quiet and reserved temperment, thoughtfull and upright in dealings, manly and firm in his convictions, a gentleman with high respect for others. He remained loyal to the Church in which he was reared, but supported other churches in which he worshiped. A good man has gone from us. His being taken away from us so suddenly in the prime of life should be a earnest call to us to work while it is yet day as the night commeth when we can work no more.

Card of Thanks

We wish to enterd our heartfelt thanks to all who helped us during the illness and death of our husband and father; also thanking all for their expressions of sympathy, acts of kindness and beautiful florl offerings in our hour of sorrow.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH
A. W. Gauger, Pastor

Our last Sunday's service was an altogether enjoyable service. The splendid audience was an inspiration. The choir did its full share to make the service a success. All present enjoyed tht anthem very much.

At the evening service one of Klemme's former boys, the Rev. F. C. Griewe, filled the pulpit and preached an inspiring sermon. This was a fine forerunner to the Golden Wedding celebration of his parents which took place on Monday. Well may these parents be proud of their firstborn.

Included in our next Sunday's program is Rev. P. H. McBeth, who will be the morning speaker both in Klemme and Liberty. Mr. McBeth is Assistant Superintendent of the Anti-saloon league of Iowa. Let many come out to hear him.

Our evening worship will be regular.

"MISS DENSLOW."

SYNOPSIS.—Thrown from his auto in a New York village, a man is carried unconscious into the home of a Miss Edith Grant. A doctor discovers he has been shot, fatally. Consciousness returning, he babbles of "millions." He begs that Henry Archman, millionaire resident of the vicinity, be sent for, declaring he has important papers for him. Archman cannot be reached by phone, but word is sent that his secretary is on the way. A man announcing himself as Archman's secretary, Akin, arrives, talks with Morbach, and leaves with a package he gives him. Morbach dies. Archman's arrival, with his secretary, reveals that the man posing as Akin is an impostor. Archman denounces Edith Grant as a girl endeavoring to snare his son Harry. Archman, it appears, his millions made in Chicago, has yielded to the importunities of his family—his wife, daughters Nellie and Bessie (seventeen years old), and son Harry—and moved to New York in an endeavor to gain recognition by the Four Hundred. They have not succeeded. Mrs. Archman is bitter over her failure, particularly mourning the fact that she has not been "taken up" by a Mrs. Van Kull. Archman orders Nellie to get ready for a long journey with him. He refuses to reveal their destination to his wife, declaring it is "not his secret." Nellie tells Bess she is in love with James Carr, a youth working on Archman's ship, El Rio. She gives Bess a message for him. Archman and Nellie depart. Harry tells Bess of his determination to marry Edith Grant. Mrs. Archman receives a map, with the explanation that it was among Morbach's papers, and suggesting she forward it to Mr. Archman. Lord George Caruthers, traveling Englishman, arrives at the Archman home, by invitation. He makes a good impression. Bess meets Carr and tells him her sister's message. She learns from him that "Edith Grant" is his sister. He says he loves Nellie. Mrs. Archman takes Bess and Harry and Caruthers and sails with Captain Bunker on the El Rio to meet her husband. A Miss Denslow, engaged as governess for Bess, and Akin, sail with the party. Captain Bunker has sealed orders.

Bess laughed. "'It is best that I should leave,'" she quoted. "'Best for you and best for me.' Run along, Harry. I think I'll go below myself. It's getting pretty chilly up here." She started to rise from her chair and Lord George leaped to his feet and helped her up. "Will you come below, Miss Denslow?" she finished.

But the governess did not move. "I think I'll stay up a little longer, if you don't mind," she said.

"Oh, not at all!" Bess took a step toward the companionway. Then she clutched at Lord George's arm with a little squeak. "Gracious!" she exclaimed, as the Englishman caught her. "I haven't gotten my sea legs yet."

"It's only a matter of practice," laughed Lord George. "In a day or two you will do it quite well. It's just like riding a wheel, don't you know." Still supporting the girl, he moved toward the companionway and the two vanished down it.

Miss Denslow sat still in her chair. Her eyes did not leave the companionway after the two had vanished. Her whole attitude had taken on a curious tenseness. "He'll come back," she muttered. "Oh, he'll come back."

A moment later when Lord George's head appeared outlined against the glow of light that came up the companionway, she nodded to herself. "I knew it."

Lord George came aft and stood above her. "May I sit down?" he asked.

Miss Denslow laughed. "Oh, of course," she said. "You don't need to put on any ceremony with me. I have been expecting you. I saw that you recognized me."

Lord George sat down. "Yes," he said; "I did. I fancy we would better come to an understanding, what?"

Miss Denslow nodded. "I am in your hands," she said. "It's your move. Are you going to expose me?"

"That depends! It's jolly queer, meeting you this way, you know. It seems to call for an explanation."

"It's very simple. I was tired of things and I wanted a change. So I snatched at this chance. It would do me much harm and do no one else any good for you to say anything."

Lord George nodded. "I fancy you're right," he said slowly. "I'll think about it a bit before I say anything. Perhaps you and I might be useful to each other, don't you know!"

Miss Denslow started. She opened her mouth to speak; then turned suddenly. "Who's that?" she demanded.

"I, madam." The steward had approached noiselessly over the dim deck. As he spoke, he began to gather the cups from the table.

Miss Denslow eyed him curiously. "Ah, yes!" she said. "Your name is—"

"Price, madam."

"You're new on the El Rio."

"Yes, madam. Everybody's new except the captain and chief engineer, madam." He placed the last cup on the tray. "Is there anything more, madam?" he asked.

"Nothing!" Miss Denslow remained silent till the man had gone. Then she turned to Lord George. "Then I may count on your silence for the present?" she asked.

Lord George nodded slowly. "Yes," he said.

CHAPTER VIII

Without Lights.

The morning of the fifth day saw the El Rio approaching latitude 19, longitude 64, the spot at which Captain Bunker was to open the envelope inclosing his instructions and was presumably, to ascertain the exact place where he was to find Mr. Archman. Naturally, all on board were agog to learn what the envelope contained. Bess was especially and admittedly excited.

A little before noon she had a surprise. She had torn herself reluctantly away from the deck and had gone below to get one of her lesson books. She found the book, but she also found, lying on top of it, a folded paper addressed to herself in a handwriting that she did not recognize. It ran as follows:

"Warn Captain Bunker to keep special watch over his instructions. An effort is likely to be made to find them out in advance, probably today."

The note bore no signature. Bess read the words again. Then she sat down and stared at the paper. Was it a hoax? she asked herself. Why should any one want to learn the contents of the instructions in advance of their formal opening? Who could want to do such a thing?

"Warn Captain Bunker," said the note. But should she do it? Would she not make herself ridiculous by doing it? Would the writer be watching to laugh at her? Such a note seemed like Harry's idea of fun.

After a while she decided to go on deck and see if she could find any clew in the expressions of her fellow passengers. As she passed Harry's stateroom the sound of a man's and a woman's voice within it, engaged in earnest though low-pitched discussion, came to her ears. She paid little attention to them, supposing that Harry was giving instructions to the maid about sewing on a button or some such trifle. After a brief pause in her mother's stateroom, she went on deck and met Harry. She made some reference to his visitor. Harry started and stared at her, half angrily, half suspiciously. "What are you trying to start now, Bess?" he asked. "I'll bite. What's the joke?"

Lord George Nodded. "I Fancy You're Right," He Said Slowly. "I'll Think About It a Bit Before I Say Anything."

Bess stared. "No joke," she said. "I certainly heard voices in your stateroom and—"

"Not in mine! You're daffy, Bess."

Bess shrugged her shoulders. "Oh, well! Never mind. Maybe it was somewhere else," she granted. "It's of no importance, anyway. I wonder what Captain Bunker's instructions will say?"

Harry shrugged his shoulders indifferently. "Search me," he replied.

In vain Bess made other remarks, both to Harry and to the other passengers, attempting to obtain some answer that would help her suspicions to settle. None of them disclosed anything, and it was not until the sun had crossed the meridian and Captain Bunker, with his sextant under his arm, passed by on his way to work out the noon observation and determine the position of the ship that she got her chance.

"Are we there, captain?" she demanded eagerly.

Captain Bunker shook his head. "Not yet," he said; "but we shall be soon. When I've worked out the observation, I'll be able to tell you just how soon."

"Oh, isn't it thrilling, captain! You'll let Lord George and me open the instructions, won't you?" Bess glanced at the Englishman as she spoke.

Captain Bunker shook his head. "Can't do that, Miss Bess," he declared. "I'll have to do it myself, and I'll have to seek the seclusion that my cabin grants before I do it."

Bess turned to the Englishman. "You hear, Lord George?" she exclaimed. "He wants to keep all the mystery to himself."

Lord George nodded comfortably. "He jolly well better had keep it to himself," he declared. "Mr. Archman would court-martial him if he didn't. What!"

Bess drew a long breath. Clearly, she decided, Lord George was not especially interested in the instructions. "Well, I call it mean," she said. "Beware, captain, or when you come to open your instructions you'll find I've got ahead of you and read them first."

"Not you, miss—unless you wheedle the combination of my safe out of me," laughed the captain, as he vanished into the chart house.

Bess said nothing more. She had warned the captain in a way, without betraying the fact that she had received the note, which she more than ever believed was a hoax. A little later, when Captain Bunker announced that he would open the envelope at five o'clock that afternoon, she decided that nobody could possibly manage to steal the instructions out of a locked safe in less than four hours, and that, therefore, she would say nothing.

The tasks of the day had been finished and, the weather being good, there was little for the crew—except those in the engine room—to do. Of all on board, only Lord George was busy; he had borrowed a light rifle from Captain Bunker and was amusing himself by shooting at floating objects.

Eight bells struck. Bess sat up in her steamer chair, throwing back the light rug that covered her feet, and looked about her. As she did so, Lord George raised his rifle and fired at something directly aft. Bess rose and stared curiously across the taffrail.

"Gee! That looks exciting," she remarked casually.

Lord George looked up at her. "It's jolly good practice, you know," he said. "It's the shooting season at home now, and everybody there is popping away. It's lots of fun, it is really. Excuse me." He turned and sent a bullet at a shark's triangular fin that cut the water off the starboard quarter. The fin disappeared and he turned back to Bess. "I'm not much of a shot," he explained. "The best bag I ever made was sixty brace."

"Sixty brace! One hundred and twenty!"

Lord George did not answer. He swung his rifle up. Bess had just time to see that he was aiming at something that looked like a bottle with a small flag stuck into its neck, when the piece exploded and the bottle disappeared. "Good gracious!" she exclaimed. "Where did that bottle come from?"

"Bottle?" Lord George looked surprised. "Where is it?"

"It's at the bottom of the sea, now," exclaimed Bess. "You blew it to pieces. Didn't you know what you were aiming at?"

Lord George's expression of surprise was obvious. "Really, now, really, Miss Bess," he mumbled, "are you sure it was a bottle?"

"Of course, I'm sure. I've got eyes, haven't I? It looked like a message, too. It had a flag in it. Maybe it was a message from some poor shipwrecked mariner. And you've destroyed it. Good Lord!"

Lord George had fired again, and at another bottle, which flew in fragments like the first.

Bess stared at the water. Then she stared at Lord George. But that gentleman kept his eye fixed on the water, either failing or refusing to meet her eyes. "Oh!" she breathed significantly.

The rudder chains leading along the rail began to rattle, and the wake of the El Rio began to change its direction. The sun, which had been on the girl's left, shifted behind her. For a moment Bess did not understand; then she realized that the El Rio had changed its course from south to west.

Now, why was Lord George breaking those bottles? and what will the captain's sealed orders say?

Our Wills

Our wills are queer things. They are like plaster of paris; for after they have been melted into liquid form they tend to "set." They do thus preserve the contour of that about which they have been molded. If it is a good cast, well enough; we make a cast for a permanent possession. Here it is—fixed and final! Is the lethargy of a standard pattern, no matter how excellent it may have been at one time, to prevent any future change and growth?—The Living Church.

LATEST IN KNITTED MODES; VARIETY OF STYLES IN HATS

WE ARE so apt to take for granted the good things of life, to accept them as a matter of course. In regard to present-day apparel, for instance, through the knitted arts, what a wealth of handsome, no less practical raiment is being lavished on the world of fashion these days.

No item written in the book of exquisite costuming is omitted in the realm of things knitted. Even the delicately wrought, gorgeously colored and deeply fringed Spanish shawl is exworn by everybody else. This fall these millions of women have but a single thought and that's to get a hat a little different from every one else's. There seems to be nothing to stand in the way of their success, for millinery this fall presents a wider scope in styles and greater variety in their interpretations than we have had for many a year.

Velvet is the most important medium for winter hats and the group leads off with two hats covered with pressed through the intricacies of knitted stitch.

Just now interest centers about beautiful knitted tapestry and brocade effects, also complicated plaids, checks and stripes which once were thought possible to produce only by weaving on the loom. Jacquard patternings are attracting special style interest such as is exploited in the exquisite knitted suit here pictured. Cheery colorings are decreed for both street and sports apparel this season. This striking jacquard pattern is developed in peach color against a white background. As an exponent of perfected knitted art, this altogether lovely suit ranks with the highest.

A chic note is introduced throughout knitted styling in that solid colored it. The hat at the left is very simply trimmed with a big cabochon of satin-covered cord. Next to it a hat with a rich feather fancy, made of ostrich flues, reiterates the harmony of velvet and ostrich. Below, at the left, a suggestion of the poke bonnet appears in a wide-brimmed hat of black hatters' plush, with round crown. A collar of metallic brocade ribbon and an airy feather pom-pon adorn it. Next to it a very popular shape is shown covered with velvet. The height of the square crown is apparently lessened by a band of georgette above one of velvet which makes a background for a collar of embroidered medallions. A rosette and sash of georgette are posed at the left side. The group is finished with a picturesque and lovely model plain stitch garments are embellished with elaborate jacquard trims, wide borders being especially favored. Often the design contrasts; silk or fiber against a woolen background always maintaining color blendings as chief interest. Indeed fanciful knitted trimmings are the order of the day. Very interesting are the remarkable simulations of fur, done in yarns and zephyrs.

Toward the close of the reign of the little cloche hat it seemed that millions of women had but a single thought, and that was to get a small, close-fitting bit of headwear like that made of corded silk and trimmed at the front with a huge rosette of rich satin ribbon having a fancy edge. None of these hats leave anything to be desired in the fine art of millinery. Black and dark brown continue the favorite colors for hats made of hatters' plush. Velvet has an extensive color range, including black and many shades of brown, with purple, orchid, fuchsia, light and dark green, strong and soft blues, the fur and pheasant colors and tones similar to henna.

Stomach Distress?

Waterloo, Iowa.—"My stomach was so bad that almost everything I ate would distress me terribly. Sometimes just a drink of cold water would hurt me. I was hungry and weak. I had constantly a dull pain in my side caused by my liver, and I would get up in the morning with that tired feeling, and had terrible headaches. I surely was a wreck. I had only taken two bottles of the 'Discovery' when I began to feel so much better, I could hardly believe it was myself."—Mrs. Frances A. Pyle, 511½ Sycamore, Apt. 3.

Skin so sore could not touch water to it

Resinol relieves it within few hours

Washington, D. C., Aug. 25:—"I am so grateful to you for your splendid products and for what they have accomplished for me that I feel I must give you the details.

In attempting to improve the appearance of my chin, I used a soap which had been recommended for that purpose but which proved to be too harsh for when I washed off the lather, the skin came with it. I applied cold cream, but the damage was too severe to yield to so mild an agent. My husband consulted our neighborhood druggist and asked if it would not be advisable to call in our family doctor. The druggist said: "You do not need a doctor in this case. Get a jar of Resinol Ointment and a cake of Resinol Soap and have your wife use them according to directions—they will beat everything else a hundred ways." So my husband bought the Resinol products and hopefully brought them home.

My skin was so tender and sore that I could not touch water to it, so I cleansed it gently first with pure olive oil and then applied the Resinol. I used a soft handkerchief that night for protection. In the morning, I bathed it gently with warm water and Resinol Soap, rinsing off with tepid water, and I could hardly believe that such a miracle of healing could occur during one night. The raw surface had filmed over and now looked only like a bad case of sunburn. I kept my face anointed with Resinol all that day and by night the improvement was so great that I was able to go out.

This experience is now only a memory for my face is softer, fairer and smoother than ever. A jar of Resinol is my best pal in the future and I will never be without it."—(Signed) Mrs. C. P. Tapley, 1008 8th St., N. W.

WHO'S WHO in the WORLD

MacMillan Back Again From the Arctic

Capt. Donald B. MacMillan is back from another of his Arctic trips—he makes less ado about them than some of us make over a summer vacation. This time he and his party of six were gone fifteen months. They reached a point within 11 degrees of the North pole, where their schooner, the Bowdoin, was frozen in for 320 days. This point was off the coast of North Greenland, within 20 miles of the spot where 17 members of the Greely expedition starved to death in 1884 and the survivors were in their last gasp when rescued by United States naval vessels. Note the contrast. No one was ill. Everyone was comfortable. They explored and got scientific data. They got all the news by radio, including Christmas greetings and the latest jazz.

Incidentally, they discovered enormous soft coal deposits in Ellesmere Land, near Eureka sound; in places the seams were 25 feet thick. But it will not help us this winter, for the deposits are 800 miles beyond present transportation systems, dog sledge included.

MacMillan took into his employ an Eskimo who said he was with Dr. Cook in 1909. Cook, said the Eskimo, got to Axel Heiberg Land, which is within 500 miles of the pole. Cook and his two Eskimos slept two nights in a snow hut 12 miles out on the Polar sea and it was there he raised the American flag, declaring he had reached the pole.

Another Unsolved Gem Theft Mystery?

Is the Cosden-Mountbatten robbery to be added to the long list of mysterious gem thefts that have never been solved? Anyway, it has started out well as a mystery. Mr. and Mrs. Joshua S. Cosden and their house guests, Lord and Lady Louis Mountbatten and the Hon. Mrs. Richard Brinsley Norton, had attended a dancing party on Long island, given for the prince of Wales. The Cosden home is at Sands Point, L. I. It was 5 o'clock in the morning when they retired, after a little breakfast they cooked for themselves in the kitchen of the Cosden home. At 8:30 o'clock Mr. Cosden's valet missed a pearl shirt stud valued at $8,000. But that loss was trifling compared with others discovered soon after. From the dressing table of Mrs. Cosden (portrait herewith) had vanished jewelry worth $100,000. From Lady Mountbatten's table were gone gems worth $42,000. Mrs. Norton was the only member of the household fortunate enough to escape despoliation. Lord Mountbatten's wallet, containing 2,000 pounds in English banknotes, and lying on his wife's dressing table, had not been disturbed. A watchman had been on duty downstairs up to 7 a. m.

Mr. Cosden is a wealthy oil man, whose racing stable is prominent in the East.

James A. Drain Heads American Legion

James A. Drain of Washington, D. C. (portrait herewith), is the new national commander of the American Legion, succeeding John R. Quinn. Commander Drain is fifty-four years old. He was born in Warren county, Illinois. He is a lawyer. He will move to Indianapolis shortly, because it is there that the Legion offices are located. Drain is a picturesque figure. His right hand is missing. It was shot off in an accident while he was hunting. Despite the handicap, Jim Drain went overseas with the Yanks. He was the only man in the great army who had but one hand. He has been in the National Guard. He's been a buck private, and he's a brigadier general. He served in the Spanish-American war, and he was with the tank corps six years ago in France.

"What work is ahead of me?" he asked. "My whole mission can be told in three words: 'For God and Country,' the first words of the preamble of the legion's constitution. For God and country without partisanship in politics, without intolerance in religion, making, as we always have, the care of the disabled comrade our first concern. Second only to rehabilitation is our obligation to care for the orphaned children of our fallen comrades. We are going to make one of our big labors the getting out of the voters on election day."

American Back of Gen. Chang Tso Lin

Not even a Philadelphia lawyer could unravel the Chinese civil war mixup now going on in continuous performance. However, here are some of the leading participants: Gen. Chang Tso Lin (portrait herewith), Manchurian war lord, who controls Manchuria and would capture Peking. Gen. Wu Pei Fu, Chihli war lord and backer of the present Peking government, headed by President Tsao Kun. General Wu is striving to bring all of China under control of Peking. Dr. Sun Yat Sen, president of the South China republic, with his capital at Canton.

An interesting thing is the fact that an American, Edward Carleton Baker, former assistant chief of the far eastern division of the State department, is the man behind Gen. Chang Tso Lin's great military movement against Peking. He is a native of Alameda, Cal., and three years ago was American consul general at Mukden. Ever since Chang's defeat by Wu Pei Fu in 1922, Baker has been the Manchurian general's chief of military preparations, with carte blanche to develop them for the day of reckoning with Peking. Authorities assert that Chang today is well nigh invincible through the thoroughgoing "organization for victory" which has been carried on by the young Californian.

Paper Makers Complain of Scarcity of Rags

It seems like harking back to early days that the manufacturers of high-grade papers have called on Secretary Hoover of the Commerce department to aid them in procuring a reserve stock of rags. Some of the mills had less than a week's supply on hand when they made the request, and none of them had any considerable stock.

In the days following the Revolution paper manufacturers advertised in the newspapers urging housewives to save their rags that they might have a sufficient supply for their use.

This was before the discovery that paper could be made from wood pulp, says the Brockton Times.

In the early days of paper making tombs were rifled and the wrappings of mummies were converted into paper.

For many years most of the rag stock for paper mills had come from across the sea. Smyrna was the great shipping point, and thousands of tons were sent here every year.

Due perhaps to the prevailing poverty, Europe is sending less than half the usual amount of rags. Probably the people are still wearing them.

Associate of Aaron Burr

Blennerhassett's island is an island in the Ohio river near Parkersburg, W. Va., famous as the residence of Herman Blennerhassett, a wealthy Irishman. The island was purchased by him in 1798, and a spacious mansion was erected on it. In 1805 he was visited by Aaron Burr and induced to assist him in his treasonable scheme of founding an empire in the West. Blennerhassett was arrested as one of Burr's accomplices, but was finally discharged without trial. His house and grounds were ruined by a mob. The remainder of his life was spent in an unavailing attempt to retrieve his fortunes.—Kansas City Star.

LEN SAMPSON BUYS HERD SIRE

Selects Prize-Winner as Nucleus of Fine Guernsey Herd

Leonard Sampson received a Guernsey sire from Whitewater Wisconsin last Friday to place at the head of his herd. This individual was purchased from W. R. James, of Ft. Atkinson, Wisconsin, immediately after the Mason City Fair, but being booked to complete the show circuit, was not shipped until last week.

This sire has been at the head of the James herd for the past two years and is a fine specimen of the May Rose Strain.

He comes from a long line of producers. His dam and sire's dam as well as himself have A. R. records He received the blue ribbon at the following fairs; Mason City, Iowa, Lincoln, Nebraska, State Fair, Topeka Kansas state fair and Hutchinson County fair as well as winning the Senior Championship at the Nebraska State Fair

Mr. Sampson has received many congratulations on his purchase.

Joe Frank and family, who are employd in the beet fields on the Herman Ax farm, met with an auto accident Sunday afternoon on the highway at the west end of Main Street. They were coming to Klemme from the north in their car and when they came to the turn east to Klemme failed to turn quick enough and their car ran into the ditch on the south side of the road. The high bank opposite the road kept the car from turning over. The occupants of car were cut some by flying glass of the broken windshield. The car was badly damaged.

A. L. Rooks, of Thornton, met with an auto accident Saturday when coming to Klemme. He was coming from the south and going down the hill near the U. G. Smid place just south of town when he met a car coming from the north. Mr. Rooks was near the bridge and had turned out too far and when he had stopped the car was astraddle of the bridge and balancing perfectly. The axle, wishbone and fenders were bent a little but the car was not seriously damaged. It was lucky that the car balanced on the bridge or it would have fallen down perhaps ten feet into the ditch.

K. C. LIVE STOCK REPORT

Another enormous run of stockers and feeders this week came to this market starting Monday with 47,000 cattle. Very few fat cattle coming now and these are higher while stockers and feeders are being neglected on account of the heavy receipts and not enough buyers to take them all out.

Prices range generally steady with our recent quotations but the accumulation will be heavy before the end of the week and many will sell lower Some real bargains will be offered in order to clear up the yards.

All kinds are plentiful, choice medium, and plain feeders, also cows and heifers and calves are here in abundance, any quality wanted, all weights.

Pastures will soon be cleaned up After that we can reasonably look for higher prices on Stockers and as fat Cattle will gradually work higher to $13.00 and $14.00 in the winter months feeders will naturally sell higher.

It is the time right now to order all the cattle you can use while the market is in this condition and while selection is good.

GERMAN LOAN PLAN SIGNED

Trustees Named to Float Bonds—U. S. Share Is $110,000,000.

Paris.—It was announced by the reparations commission that the $200,000,000 Dawes plan loan to Germany has been signed and is ready for issue. New American officials in the operation of the system were appointed.

October 16 is the date set for issuance of the loan in the United States, England, France, Italy, Germany, Belgium, Switzerland, Holland and Sweden. America is expected to handle $110,000,000 of the loan. The bonds will run for 25 years and will be sold at 92 with 7 per cent interest. This means that they will yield about 7¾ per cent.

America's representative on the transfer committee will be Joseph E. Sterrett, member of the firm of Price, Waterhouse & Co. of New York. The transfer committee will act as an exchange rate board under the Dawes plan. Gates McGarrah of the Mechanics and Metals Bank of New York, an American member of the Reichsbank governing board, recommended the appointment of Mr. Sterrett.

Thomas Nelson Perkins was named by the reparations commission to be the American voting representative on the commission. Mr. Perkins is a member of the law firm of Ropes, Gray, Boyden & Perkins in Boston. Although Mr. Perkins will not represent the United States government, he will be an active voting member of the reparations commission on all questions of administration of the system.

Col. James A. Logan will be retained as the official observer for America, it was announced.

Railway debentures representing about 11,000,000,000 gold marks or $2,750,000,000 were turned over to M. Leverve, the French expert, who will have charge of the German railways, by Herr Meyer, as a representative of the German war burden commission. The entire amount was placed in charge of Owen D. Young, agent general of reparations.

More than $1,500,000 in industrial debentures had been turned over two days ago.

The trustees entrusted with the floating of the German loan in all the countries were named. They are Seymour Gilbert, permanent agent general of reparations; Gen. Dean Jay, member of the firm of Morgan, Harjes & Co., and Ter Muelen, banker of Holland.

Washington Team Wins World Series Prize

Griffith Stadium, Washington.—Walter Johnson rounded out his 18 years as a baseball hurler by winning the world's championship for Washington, long the home of last place ball clubs. He went in with the score tied, so receives the credit for winning the contest.

The score was 4 to 3 in the twelfth round. McNeely slammed out the final double that brought Ruel across and copped the victory. Curley Ogden opened the game for the Senators and Virgil Barnes went to the mound for the New Yorkers.

Griffith stadium was packed in every available bit of standing room and every profession and walk of life in the nation's capital was represented in the stands. President Coolidge and his party, diplomats from nearly every nation in the world and just plain regular fans made up the 40,000 crowd jammed into a 37,000 capacity stadium.

1 Killed, 5 Injured When Bomb Wrecks Army Blimp

Newport News, Va.—Lieut. Bruce N. Martin died as a result of injuries sustained in an accident at Langley field when a bomb, carried by the United States army blimp TC-2 prematurely exploded, wrecking the craft and injuring the five members of the crew. The accident occurred during target practice and caused the craft to crash 150 feet to the earth. That all of the crew were not killed was attributed to the fact that the blimp was inflated with the noninflammable gas, helium. Lieut. Alfred Puryear of Hendersonville, Tenn., and Master Sergeant Fitch are said to be in serious condition, while Sergeants Wells and Jensins were said to have sustained only minor injuries.

BRITISH LABOR CABINET TO QUIT

New Election to Follow Defeat on Red Editor.

London.—Great Britain's first Labor government virtually came to an end at eleven o'clock Wednesday night when by a combination of Conservative and Liberal votes the house of commons carried a motion demanding that a select committee of the house investigate the action of the attorney general, Sir Patrick Hastings, in withdrawing prosecution in the case of the Communist, James R. Campbell, acting editor of the Workers' Weekly, charged with inciting his majesty's forces to sedition.

The government declined to accept the motion and treated it as a vote of censure which, if adopted by the house, would involve an appeal to the country against parliament's verdict.

The debate was sharp and exciting and the opposition wanted to drop Sir Robert S. Horne's motion of censure and vote on Sir John A. Simon's amendment calling for an investigation.

On the government's refusal to accept this course the house divided on the question as to which it should vote on. By a vote of 359 to 198 it decided to vote on the Simon amendment.

This was equivalent to the defeat of the censure motion, and the Simon amendment became the substantive motion and was carried, 364 to 198.

Super-Power Radio Rights Given O. K.

Washington.—President Coolidge assured the delegates to the Third International Radio conference that the government would do everything in its power to assist in stimulating the progress in radio as well as safeguarding it for the public.

The most important conclusion reached was that in regard to the power to be employed in transmission by stations. The subcommittee on problems on broadcasting decided to recommend to the secretary of commerce that broadcasting by superpower stations be permitted on an experimental basis, with the definite understanding that it be discontinued, if found to interfere with smaller power broadcasters.

The Radio Corporation of America proposes to erect a chain of stations throughout the country employing 5,000 watts each. Those who favor super power claim it will mean better reception, and will not tend to smother out smaller stations. Those opposing it claim it would give the owners of super-power stations a monopoly of the air, since they would be able to drown out all others.

U. S. WHEAT CROP 856,000,000 BU.

Corn Crop Short 587,000,000 Bushels From Last Year's Harvest.

Washington.—A corn crop of 2,459,000,000 bushels, the smallest since 1903 with the exception of 1913, the largest wheat crop, 856,000,000 bushels, in three years and close to the average, and an oat crop of 1,509,000,000 bushels, the best since 1918, were the outstanding features of the government crop report given out here.

An aggregate yield of 5,091,000,000 bushels for the five grains—wheat, corn, oats, rye and barley—is only 4,000,000 bushels less than last month's returns, but 310,000,000 bushels short of the final yields in 1923. Of small grains there is an aggregate of 2,632,000,000 bushels, an increase of 50,000,000 bushels for the month, mainly in wheat and oats, and an increase of 285,000,000 bushels over last year's harvest.

A feature of the crop report was the increase of 19,000,000 bushels in spring wheat, with a yield of 266,000,000 bushels, one of the largest in recent years, gaining 43,000,000 bushels over last year and only 9,000,000 bushels short of the five-year average. In the total wheat crop there are 856,000,000 bushels or 18,000,000 bushels more than last month, 70,000,000 bushels in excess of last year, and only 26,000,000 bushels short of the five-year average.

Minnesota, Montana and the Dakotas have 224,000,000 bushels of spring wheat, or 18,000,000 bushels more than a month ago, or 80,000,000 bushels in excess of last year. North Dakota has raised one of the largest crops for that state, 115,000,000 bushels, while last year it only had 59,000,000 bushels.

This is putting the farmers in that state in better condition than for several years, as the yield per acre is about double that of 1923. The United States is most fortunate in having a large wheat crop, as it will be needed abroad owing to the shortage in Canada of nearly 200,000,000 bushels, and so far it is estimated that 100,000,000 bushels or more have been sold for export.

Cold weather and early frosts cut down the corn crop to 2,459,000,000 bushels, a drop of 54,000,000 bushels from the September returns and 587,000,000 bushels from last year's harvest. There is also a less of 440,000,000 bushels from the five-year average. Conditional figures range from 54 to 56 in Ohio and Indiana to 69 in Illinois, 67 in Iowa, 73 to 75 in Missouri, Nebraska and Kansas, the latter being the highest in the country.

Iowa makes the poorest showing of all big corn states, its yield being reduced 22,000,000 bushels last month, and is 337,000,000 bushels compared with 430,000,000 bushels last year and an average of 427,555,000 bushels. Illinois lost only 2,000,000 bushels for the month, having practically 280,000,000 bushels against 337,000,000 bushels last year and an average of 317,000,000 bushels.

An oat crop of 1,509,000,000 bushels is 209,000,000 bushels in excess of last year. Flax crop is the best in many years. White potatoes are a good crop in excess of the average. The tame hay crop 95,100,000 tons, is 6,000,000 tons greater than last year.

Traction Experts Hit Downtown Auto Parking

Atlantic City.—A committee of experts presented before the American Electric Railway association convention a detailed report dealing with traffic conditions in American cities. Summarized, the report declares that city traffic congestion cannot continue at its present rate and that taxpayers must decide whether they will prohibit downtown parking and keep traffic moving or build new thoroughfares.

They declared that the cost of street widening is almost prohibitive and is unnecessary, and indorsed the enforcement of anti-parking laws and speeding up traffic.

"The most important means of increasing the street flow is the elimination of the standing vehicle during at least peak-hour periods," the report says.

The state convention of the Iowa Library association which met in Boone adjourned after selecting the following officers: President, Miss Mary Rosemond of Des Moines; first vice president, Miss Mary Egan of Clinton; second vice president, Miss Frances Mason of Boone; secretary, Miss Elizabeth Walpole, Storm Lake; treasurer, Miss Sadie Stevens, Carroll; registrar, Miss Lucille Peterson, Estherville, and members of board of certification, Mrs. Gilliland of Waterloo.

Recently the Decorah-Posten completed a half century of existence. It was in September 1874, that the founder, B. Amundsen, engaged in the newspaper business in Decorah. The earlier days were ones of struggle, but throughout the latter part of the eighties the Posten experienced a substantial growth and success upon which Mr. Amundsen and those who have been in charge since his death have built a publication that is credited with being one of the models among foreign languages publications in the U. S.

"Many thousands of lives have undoubtedly been saved in Iowa in the last seventeen years", says the biennial report of the Board of Control of State Institutions just issued. Since 1907 when the Board first began its educational work aimed at the prevention as well as the arrest of tuberculosis. The death rate from that disease has dropped from 76 per hundred thousand to 43.5, a decrease of approximately 43 per cent. The death rate in Iowa is now less than half of that prevailing throughout the entire United States. The total amount spent in Iowa last year in purely educational work directed against tuberculosis was $85,000, most of it raised through the sale of Christmas seals.

Muscatine county farmers who depend largely upon truck gardening, are approaching the end o fthe most unsatisfactory season they have known since melon and sweet potato raising became a leading industry. The watermelon crop was the most dismal failure. At Conesville, in the western part of the county and in the center of the melon territory, not enough melons were produced to justify shipping even a single carload to eastern markets. This condition has never before existed in the memory of the oldest inhabitants. Cantaloupes were more plentiful, but the crop was less than half of normal, and those that were marketed were below standard in quality. Sweet potatoes are in better condition, but even that crop will not exceed 50 per cent of normal.

At the Dairy Cattle Congress held at Waterloo Robert Stewart of Maynard won the club dairy show with fifty-nine junior Holstein heifers. Gerald Peterson of Fort Dodge won the senior Holstein class with twenty-three heifers. Webster county won over nine other counties in junior calves. Marple Mountain of Des Moines took grand championship for Guernsey club heifer against twenty-three others. Black Hawk county won the Guernsey group contest against three other counties. Donald Hansaker of Melcher took first on Jersey club heifer. Margaret Mooney of Fort Dodge won the Brown Swiss competition. Louis Frost of Waterloo was victor in Ayrshires. John Wilcox of Monticello was awarded first as the best Holstein showman. Harold Bauer of Jesup was the best Guernsey showman.

Only 1,300,000 out of a possible 4,500,000 veterans have applied for the federal soldier bonus, Adjutant Geneneral Robert C. Davis said, urging expedition in applying.

HELPED HER IN EVERY

So Writes Mrs. Trombley of Vt., Concerning Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Sharon, Vermont.—"I was run-down, had a tired feeling, bearing-down pains, saw an advertisement in the paper about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, began taking it, and have stopped bearing-down pains and other troubles, and I recommend it to others who have similar troubles. I have so much to be thankful for in the Compound that I keep it on hand all the time and recommend it to others when I have the opportunity."—Mrs. TROMBLEY, Sharon, Vermont.

Glad to Help Others

"I had pains in my back and was sick many months, and my work would have to be left undone at those times. My sister told me what good Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound had done her, so I tried it, and from the first bottle I was well and every one says I looked better. I am glad to tell others regain their health, and will use my testimonial."—Mrs. MANN, 1824 Greene Ave., Brooklyn.

The New-Rich

Mayor Hylan of New York, at a dinner in New York:

"Our new-rich multimillionaires are very amusing. The naive way they display their wealth reminds me of little Willie.

"Little Willie was wearing his first pair of pants for the first time. He played in his father's library when another lawyer dropped in. The two lawyers talked away together without a word about the new pants.

"Willie stood this as long as he could. Then he said in a casual, indifferent way:

"'There's three pairs of pants in this room.'"

WANT SOME DUKE STOCK?

The British public is being invited to buy stock in the duke of Rutland, father of Lady Diana Duff-Cooper, for the duke has now turned himself into a stock company. The reason for this maneuver is that it is cheaper to pay taxes on a big fortune when it is held by a stock company than by an individual. The company is being floated with a capital of 500,000 pounds. The duke controls the company.

LEGION IS PRAISED

GOV. CHANNING H. COX, of Massachusetts, speaking at the state convention of the American Legion held at Pittsfield recently, praised the Legion as patriots at a time when patriots are needed. He said:

"At times when it has seemed that the people had forgotten their obligations to their state and nation, the Legion has always called their attention to them. It was the Legion that came to the rescue last Patriots' day in Boston. It rallied a parade through the streets of the state capital and averted the effects of the propaganda which was being circulated at that time. On Armistice day, too, with the huge demonstration in Boston the Legion showed its strong right arm. It means much to have you men who know your duty and do it, of conserving the patriotism of the people of this country, and your leadership is indeed appropriate and timely."

LEGIONNAIRES AID VETERANS OF 1864

The things that will or will not make good news copy vary greatly with the passing of the years. Announcement that the Union Veteran Legion would hold its annual national convention some time in September in Altoona, Pa., made only a bare inch of newspaper copy. "And who, and what, is the Union Veteran Legion anyway, that they should be given even an inch of space in the newspapers? I don't recollect ever having heard of them," you say. Which is rather surprising, for at one time in the nation's history the Union Veteran Legion was making column after column of breathless copy. Sherman's march to the sea made good copy in those days—first-page stuff that was avidly read by a grateful populace. But that was more than a half century ago and news values change and the makers of much of that copy, the Union Veteran Legion, are dropped from the first page entirely and get only a skimpy inch on an inside sheet.

However, there are those in these United States who read the newspapers rather carefully, among them the American Legion, and the bare inch of copy concerning the proposed national convention of the Union Veteran Legion was sufficient to catch the eye of American Legionnaires of Altoona and interest them to such an extent that a committee was immediately appointed to aid the Union Veteran Legion in preparing for their national convention. In appointing the committee to help the Union Veteran Legion with their convention, the American Legion was motivated by the following facts:

To be a member of the Union Veteran Legion one must have been a volunteer and have served not less than three years in the Civil war. Most of the surviving members of the organization are very old, and the toil, harassments and uncertainty of preparing for a national convention would be a severe strain upon the strength of the veterans of '64. So the American Legion decided to lift the load from the shoulders of their venerable comrades to enable them to be free to enjoy themselves without the worries and trials incident to the administration of a convention.

Takes Rap at Wealthy Women Who Seek Honor

If bachelors of the Legion could only figure out some way to induce rich American heiresses to heed the words of Gov. Pat M. Neff of Texas when he addressed the sixth annual convention of the Texas department of the Legion, they would, as the saying goes, "be sitting pretty." Governor Neff sympathized as follows: "I have no patience and very little respect for those wealthy American daughters who are willing to trade their wealth to an empty European title. If I were an American girl I would rather be the wife of an American Legionnaire, though of humble means, than the wife of a silly duke with no other claim than that he is the son of some queen and lives among the pictures of a forgotten past."

Notables Present at Ball Given by Legion

When the Legion gives a party it generally has the company of most folks worth while, and such proved to be the case at the grand ball given at the state convention of the Legion at Pittsfield, Mass., recently, which the following personages attended: Gov. Channing H. Cox, Mayor James M. Curley of Boston, Senator David I. Walsh, Maj. Gen. Clarence R. Edwards, Commander Ham, G. A. R.; Mrs. Elizabeth O'Brien, department president, American Legion Auxiliary; Congressman Allen T. Treadway, Congressman Louis A. Frothingham, Rear Admiral de Steibuer, U. S. N.; Commissioner Richard Flynn, and some five hundred more of our leading citizens.

Substitute for Glass

A chemical product which resembles glass and can be used for many of the same purposes has been produced in Germany. It can be rolled, bored, polished or cut and does not have the tendency of glass to splinter. Because of this quality it has been recommended for the glass panes of automobiles, optical instruments, ornaments, and toilet articles. Fritz Pollak, the inventor, arrived at this product by condensing carbamide and theocarbamide with formaldehyde. Amides are simple, nitrogenous substances related to proteins.

Have Lived In Ell Township Nearly Fifty Years

September 24, 1924, marked the Fiftieth or Golden Wedding Anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Ax, of Ell Township, who live on a farm a few miles north of Klemme. It was not convenient to celebrate on that day, so the event was postponed until Saturday, October 11, 1924, when the anniversary wsa observed.

A big Golden Wedding dinner was served at the Ax home to which all of the children, and their families were invited and partook of the big wedding feast. There were prtsent thirty three people to help Mr. and Mrs. Ax to celebrate the day.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Ax were both born in Germany. Shortly after their marriage in that country they came to America to make their future home and they settled on a farm in Ell township which has since been their home. They have been residents of Ell township for nearly a half century and went through all the hardships and trials of the early pioneer. Of their seven children, three are at home with them on the farm and four are married and are settled down on farms. In honor of the Golden Wedding Mr. and Mrs. Ax were presented with appropriate gifts as a remembrance of this rare occasion.

We join the many friends of Mr. and Mrs. Ax in congratulating them on their Golden Wedding Anniversary.

GOOD ROADS BODY WOULD REFUND $3,000,000 PAVING TAX

Oppose Levy On Abutting Farms; Hard Surfacing Not a Necessity to Farmers

DES MOINES — Approximately $3,000,000 in taxes already paid by owners of property abutting on Iowa roads now paved will be refunded if the program of the Iowa Good Road Association is approved by the legislature and the people of the state of the state.

Good roads boosters will ask the 41st general assembly this winter to amend the present law and abolish the existing 12½ per cent assessment against abutting property for paving primary roads, at the same time, authorizing that assessments already paid, estimated at $3,000,000 be refunded to property owners.

"The levying of an assessment against farm property for paving obligates that property to pay a portion of the cost of a type of road which is not absolutely necessary, so far as 'farm market' travel is concerned," Col. Glenn B. Haynes, executive secretary of the Iowa Good Roads Association, said in discussing this proposal of his organization.

"While it is generally admitted that a paved road increases the selling value of abutting property," he continued, "it does not add to the crops, and a lower type of surfacing would answer so far as going to market is concerned. For that reason, and in absolute justice to the farmer, our association proposes that the present 12½ per cent assessment for paving be abolisehd, and that levies already paid be refunded." The road user is the one who profits more by improved highways and can best afford to pay for the cost of such roads."

Under the plan of the Iowa Good Roads association about 3,000 miles of the state's primary road system would be hard surfaced and the remaining 3,000 miles would be surfaced with gravel or sand clay, with out adding a cent to general taxation; money for this work to come from the primary road fund, which includes motor license fees and federal aid revenue, and from a gasoline tax of two cents a gallon.

It is estimated that such tax would provide revenue of $4,5000,000 a year. Of this amount, the Iowa Good Roads association proposes that one-third be used on primary roads, and that two-thirds be expended for the imprvement of our county highways.

Col. Haynes declared that the people of Iowa, who are nearly 6,000,000 motor vehicles over two billion miles a year on the state's unimproved roads, are losing more than $25,000,000 anually through unnessary wear and tear on their cars. This represents an economic loss every year almost six times more than the gasoline tax would cost the pleople of the state, yet the gas tax is the only new tax comtemplated by the Iowa Good Roads association to provide revenue for its comprehensive, state-wide program for improvement of all primary and secondary roads.

COWS WILL MARKET CORN

Dairy Specialist at Ames Recommend Feeding of Immature Grain to Livestock.

While soft corn is not an ideal feed for the dairy cow, getting the dairy cow to market such corn in the form of milk products is perhaps one of the best ways for the dairyman to dispose of a large amount of immature corn.

Thes ilo is the ileal place for soft corn, John Shaw, dairy husbandry specialist, Iowa State College, points out, but many farmers do not have silos and many others who do are going to have surplus soft corn even after the silos are full. For the man with a silo a good way would be to cut the corn and shock it, refilling the silo during the winter. Such silage, experiments has a feeding value nearly equal to that of corn ensiled at the usual time.

Perhaps the next best plan is to feed the ears in the form of corn and cob meal. A mixture of 200 pounds corn and cob meal, 100 lbs ground oats and 100 pounds linseed oilmeal or cracked soy beans is recommended. This mixture should be fed at the rate of about 7 pounds for each pound of butterfat produced, if fed in connection with a good legume hay. If timothy or wild hay is fed, the grain portion of the ration would have to be increased to 10 or 11 pounds per pound of butterfat.

Cutting or breaking the ears of soft corn and feeding them to the dairy cow in that form will give fairly satisfactory results, providing corn and corn fodder does not constitute the entire ration. Good clover or alfalfa hay is practically essential when a large amount of corn is being fed. For the man with lots of good hay and cows; the soft corn problem is not such a difficult one. Soft corn should be ground in small amounts so that it does not become moldy before being fed, since molding materially reduces the feeding value of corn.

Let Me Walk With the Men in the Road

(This poem was written as an answer to "The House by the Side of the Road," by Sam W. Foss.

'Tis only a half truth the poet has sung
Of the house by the side of the way;
Our Master had neither a house nor a home,
But he walked with the crowd day by day.
And I think when I read of the poet's desire,
That a house by the road would be good,
But service is found in its tenderest form
When we walk with the crowd in the road.

So I say, let me walk with the men in the road,
Let met seek out the burdens that crush,
Let me speak a kind word of good cheer to the weak
Who are falling behind in the rush.
There are wounds to be healed, there are breaks we must mend.
There's a cup of cold water to give;
And the man in the road by the side of his friend
Is the man who has learned to live.

Tell me no more of he house by he road,
There is only one place I can live;
It's there with the men who are toiling along,
Who are needing the cheer I can give.
It is pleasant to live in the house by the way,
And be a friend, as the poet has said,
But the Master has bidden us, "Bear ye their load
For your rest waiteth yonder ahead."

I could not remain in the house by the road
And watch as the toilers go on;
Their faces beclouded with pain and with sin,
So burdened, their strength nearly gone.
I'll go to their side, I'll speak in good chear,
I'll help them carry their load;
And I'll smile at the man in the house by the way
As I walk with the crowd in the road.

Out there in the road that goes by the house,
Where the poet is singing his song,
I'll walk and I'll work midst the heat of the day,
And I'll help falling brothers along.
Too busy to live in the house by the way,
Too happy for such an abode,
And my heart sings its praise to the Master of all,
Who is helping me serve in the road.

SALTING TO SAVE SOFT CORN

Experiments in Iowa Show It to Be Inexpensive—Will not Make Poor Corn Good, However.

Salting soft corn has already become a general practice in some sections of Illinois and according ac tests conducted at the Iowa Experiment Station is an inexpensive simple operation that will help solve the soft corn problem.

The chief advantages in using salt are that it tends to prevent heating and molding until the corn dries and turally.

In tests at the Iowa Station and substantiated by farm practice in Illinois the following facts were found.

1. Two pounds of salt per 100 pounds of ear corn was found to retard mold and heating more than a lesser amount, but one pound of salt per 100 pounds of ear corn is as much salt as most livestock should eat with corn. Do not use more than 30 pounds of salt to each 40 bushel load of corn.

2. Use special ventilators in center of crib when salting soft corn in the crib. Salt retards heating and molding while the corn is drying.

3. Spread the salt evenly over the corn, getting it as well distributed as possible.

4. Salt will not make good corn out of poor corn, as some might expect, but will tend to prevent heating and molding until the corn dries.

Ventilators should be installed in corn cribs whether or not salt is used to prevent molding. A combination of ventilation and salting may save the soft corn for many Iowa farmers according, to E. S. Dyas farm crops specialist, Iowa State College.

ZR-3 MAKES TRIP FROM GERMANY IN 81 HOURS

Traveled 5,066 Miles at Average of 62 Miles an Hour— Big Mechanical Triumph.

Lakehurst, N. J. The ZR-3 slumbered last Tuesday night safely cradled in the Lakehurst airdome after a memorable flight across the Atlantic.

Her German crew slumbered and also her four American passengers. The dirigible which had set a record for a non-stop flight, appeared none the worse for her flight. She swaycrooningly to and fro to the tune of the soft creaking tackle. Her luminous sides shimmered under the beams of a moon that penetrated her glass domed hangar.

But the humans whom she had carried so far, sheltered beneath her protecting bulk—they were red-eyed and weary. They had traveled 5,066 miles under hazardous circumstances and they had done it in a single continuous flight of 81 hours and 17 minutes.

This was the official record as compiled by Dr. Hugo Eckner, commander of the Zeppelin interests and by Commander J. H Klein, Jr., of Lakehurst field, who made the transoceanic flight.

The ship's log recorded that she left Freidenchshafen, Germany, at 6:35 a. m. on Sunday, Oct. 12, the time being one hour east of Greenwich. She touched earth here at 9:52 a. m. Tuesday. Dr. Eckner was authority for the statement that the mileage was 5,066. Thus the average speed of the ZR-3 for the whole distance was approximately 62.35 miles an hour. The approximate average of the British R-34 during her westward flight of 3,200 miles across the Atlantic in 108 hours, made in 1919 was 29.63 miles per hour.

The Statesman

DID YOU FAIL TO VOTE IN 1920?

Get-Out-The-Vote Campaign Started To Arouse People to Their Duty

Where were you in 1920 on election day? Only half of the citizens voted that year. The past four years has been one of the worst in American history for unrest. People everywhere are kicking and finding complaint with the government and with the officers from the president down to township trustee. Do these people who did not vote kick? Have they any license to find fault when they did not deem it of importance to vote?

It is a surprising fact that since 1896 the proportion of voters has dwindled in each national election until at present less than half of the people entitled to vote do so. The evils of such a concern among the thoughtful that a national campaign has been started to awaken the people to their duy.

Representaives from many statewide organizations met some time ago and organi ed a state co-operative committee which will direct the Get-Out-The Vote campaign in Iowa. This is not in the interest of any particular candidate or party and is waged to arouse public conscience in the matter of going to polls on election day.

In 1920 those eligible to vote in Hancock county were 8033. How many voted- 4474—a little more than half. Where were the rest?

This year they shall not escape their duty according to plans made by the county committee, which has many plans for awakening the public to its responsibility. The work in Hancock County among the women's organizations is being directed by Mrs. W. S. Pritchard, who will have workers in each township to direct the work at close range. Those in charge at present are: Mrs Chris Gillstrap, Crystal and Bingham; Mrs. Will Finch, Boone, Magor and Corwith; Mrs. E. P. Healy, Britt and Orthel; Mrs. Charles Meleney, Erin Mrs. J. R. Risser, Amsterdam, Mrs.S. B. Durant, Madison and Ellington; Mrs. Frank Rayhons, Garfield; Mrs. G. R. Lockwood and Mrs. Chester Moe, Concord, Liberty and Ell; Mrs. Elmer Schneider, Mrs. Lew Wesenberg and Mrs. Dennis Conlan, Twin Lake and Avery.

Besides some efficient plans for election day, everything possivle will be done beforehand to get people interested. The schools of the county have been asked to help, also the ministers of churches. The many social, fraternal and civic organizations are asked to call the attention of their members to the campaign. A speakers bureau in charge of Mrs. E. P. Healy of Britt and Mrs. C. R. Lockwood, of Garner, will send someone to address any meetings where desired.

A number of prizes offered by prominent persons will be awarded to the state, counties and townships making the best showings in the election results. These will be published in the daily and county papers.—Britt News-Tribune.

THE HANDKERCHIEF.

SYNOPSIS.—Thrown from his auto in a New York village, a man is carried unconscious into the home of a Miss Edith Grant. A doctor discovers he has been shot, fatally. Consciousness returning, he babbles of "millions." He begs that Henry Archman, millionaire resident of the vicinity, be sent for, declaring he has important papers for him. Archman cannot be reached by phone, but word is sent that his secretary is on the way. A man announcing himself as Archman's secretary, Akin, arrives, talks with Morbach, and leaves with a package he gives him. Morbach dies. Archman's arrival, with his secretary, reveals that the man posing as Akin is an impostor. Archman denounces Edith Grant as a girl endeavoring to snare his son Harry. Archman, it appears, his millions made in Chicago, has yielded to the importunities of his family—his wife, daughters Nellie and Bessie (seventeen years old), and son Harry—and moved to New York in an endeavor to gain recognition by the Four Hundred. They have not succeeded. Mrs. Archman is bitter over her failure, particularly mourning the fact that she has not been "taken up" by a Mrs. Van Kull. Archman orders Nellie to get ready for a long journey with him. He refuses to reveal their destination to his wife, declaring it is "not his secret." Nellie tells Bess she is in love with James Carr, a youth working on Archman's ship, El Rio. She gives Bess a message for him. Archman and Nellie depart. Harry tells Bess of his determination to marry Edith Grant. Mrs. Archman receives a map, with the explanation that it was among Morbach's papers, and suggesting she forward it to Mr. Archman. Lord George Caruthers, traveling Englishman, arrives at the Archman home, by invitation. He makes a good impression. Bess meets Carr and tells him her sister's message. She learns from him that "Edith Grant" is his sister. He says he loves Nellie. Mrs. Archman takes Bess and Harry and Caruthers and sails with Captain Bunker on the El Rio to meet her husband. A Miss Denslow, engaged as governess for Bess, and Akin, sail with the party. Captain Bunker has sealed orders. Miss Denslow and Caruthers, it appears, have met before. They decide to keep it a secret. Bess finds a note urging her to warn Captain Bunker to guard his instructions. She thinks it a joke, but playfully warns the captain she will see them before he does.

Bess glanced up at the bridge where Captain Bunker's form was outlined against the sunset. Then she turned back to Lord George, as if to speak.

But the Englishman anticipated her. "That really was a bottle now!" he cried. "It was, 'pon my word. Did you see it?"

"Yes; I saw it." Bess spoke shortly. Her vague suspicions suddenly flattened.

"Jolly good shot. What?"

"Yes; it was a good shot. Where do you suppose those bottles came from?"

"Where? Oh, I fancy somebody tossed them overboard up forward somewhere. Er—Captain Bunker must have opened his instructions. What?"

Bess started. Undoubtedly that was the explanation of the change, of course. "I'll go see!" she cried, and raced forward.

Captain Bunker was on the bridge. If he saw Bess ascending the ladder to his perch, he showed no signs of his perception. His broad back and indeed his whole attitude was repellent. Almost Bess hesitated.

Almost, but not quite. Curiosity drove her on. "Captain!" she said timidly.

Captain Bunker turned. His face was forbidding. "Miss Archman," he said coldly, "can I do anything for you?" Suppressed anger thrilled in his tones.

Bess faltered. "No—nothing," she stammered. "I only wanted to ask—ask whether you had opened the instructions yet?" She tried to make her tones light, but failed lamentably. What could be the matter? she wondered.

"Yes; I have opened them." Captain Bunker's face grew grimmer. Abruptly he turned upon the girl. "Miss Archman," he said, "when you threatened to see those instructions before I did, I thought you were joking. I did not dream that you would attempt to carry out so dishonorable a threat, or that you could succeed even if you did attempt it."

"Why! I—I—I—Good gracious! I was joking, of course." Bess' face lengthened with dismay. "How dare you speak this way to me?" she burst out.

"I fancy you know why." Bitterness rang in Captain Bunker's tones. "I do not know how you got into my safe, Miss Archman," he said. "True, it was old-fashioned. But I compliment you on your extraordinary skill in opening it. But I cannot compliment you on your respect for your father's wishes or on your carefulness in hiding your tracks." The captain plunged his hand into his pocket and drew out a bit of cambric. "Permit me to return your handkerchief, Miss Archman," he said. "You left it in the broken drawer in the safe."

Bess took the handkerchief. Her lips had grown quite white. Silently, she scanned it, identifying it by the mark in the corner. Then she lifted her eyes to Captain Bunker. "This is my handkerchief, Captain Bunker," she said. She was very young and her heart was beating furiously, but she spoke with dignity. "It is mine," she repeated, "but I have no idea how it got into your safe. Certainly I did not leave it there. I did not open your safe. I didn't even see your safe. I never dreamed of violating my father's wishes. I had reason to believe that some one else might try to get at those instructions and I tried to warn you. I seem to have failed."

"Good heavens!" Captain Bunker stared. "But—but—the handkerchief!" he protested.

"Whoever broke in evidently left it there accidentally or in order to make you suspect me. Plainly, he succeeded."

Captain Bunker ignored the innuendo. "But," he protested again, "you suspected that—What do you mean? Whom did you suspect?"

"I don't know."

"You don't know whom you suspected?"

"No; I don't. Some one—I don't know who—left a note in my stateroom asking me to warn you to be careful, that an attempt might be made to get at the papers. I thought is was a hoax, but I warned you nevertheless. But my warning failed."

"But who wrote the note?"

"I don't know. I found it on the dresser in my stateroom."

"But who left it there? You must have some suspicion."

Bess shook her head. "I haven't an idea," she said. "At first I thought it might be Harry trying to play a joke on me. Now I don't know what to think."

"But you must think! Listen to me. I opened the safe this afternoon. I unlocked the inner drawer and looked at the packet. It was secure, just as it was when I put it there three days ago. I locked it up again. I locked the safe. I will swear to it. Half an hour ago I opened it again. The lock of the inner drawer was broken. The packet had been opened and sealed up again neatly. Your handkerchief lay beneath it. If it had not been for the broken lock, I might not have noticed that the safe had been entered and might not have thought anything of your handkerchief being there. But the lock spoke for itself. I opened the envelope and read the instructions. They were explicit. They ordered me to go to a certain island. They warned me that I should probably be followed by one or more ships. They told me to evade them at all hazards—that it was a matter of life and death. Life and death, you understand. And here—here—I've simply got to find out who's on board spying for them, before it is too late. And you've got to help me. Consider a moment. Who could have gotten into your stateroom? Did you leave it locked?"

"Lord George Has Been Sitting at the Stern All Afternoon, Breaking Them With Rifle Bullets."

"No."

"Then anybody who could have come aft could have gone in. We may take it that it wasn't your or your mother or your brother. How about Miss Denslow?"

"Miss Denslow!" Bess cried out the word. "Oh, it couldn't have been Miss Denslow! We haven't known her very long, but she came to us from Miss Van Kull. Of course, it couldn't have been she."

"Humph!" Captain Bunker seemed only half satisfied. "I'm glad. Miss Denslow seems a very pleasant lady and I'd hate to think her guilty of such treachery. How about Lord George? I suppose he is a genuine nobleman?"

"Genuine! Good gracious! Mother would have a duck fit if he wasn't. She met him—Oh, of course. What was I thinking about! The British ambassador introduced him to Mrs. Paxton, and Mrs. Paxton introduced him to mother."

"How about your maid?"

"We've had her for years and years. Besides, I know her writing, and this wasn't a bit like it."

"That settles the passengers." Captain Bunker tugged at his beard. "I've had my officers for years, and can trust them. That leaves only the crew. Only the steward is allowed aft. He's new to me. Have you noticed him?"

Bess nodded. "Yes," she said. "That is, I've noticed him casually. He looks rather above a steward's place. But—"

"I guess he's the thief. I'll attend to him, all right." Captain Bunker's jaws set themselves grimly. "But I'm afraid it's too late to stop him from sending word to his employers!"

"His employers?"

"Yes. Of course, he's not working for himself. He's working for the people who murdered that man Morbach and who stole the map. When they found that it didn't tell where the island was, they sent it to your mother and then managed to follow her. There isn't a doubt of it. And—and—"

Captain Bunker turned on his heel and pointed toward the northern horizon, now dark with the shadows of coming night. "Look," he said. "Probably you can't see it, but that smoke yonder comes from a boat that has been hanging on my heels ever since we left New York. It is swift, amazingly swift, and silent, amazingly silent. It comes without lights. But once in so often a flash of sparks from its funnel betrays its presence. It's following us, trying to find out where we are going. And some scoundrelly spy on board of us is helping it. And—and"—Captain Bunker choked—"no doubt he's sent the information long ago."

Bess' face wrinkled with perplexity. "But how could he send it?" she questioned.

"Probably in a bottle with a flag and with its cork rubbed with phosphorus. If he tossed enough of them overboard his masters would find one."

Bess' face cleared. "Don't worry about bottles, captain," she said consolingly. "Lord George has been sitting at the stern all afternoon, breaking them with rifle bullets."

CHAPTER IX

From the Taffrail.

Dark fore and aft except for the tiny sheltered light that illumined the compass, the El Rio steamed along southward. Captain Bunker was violating the most stringent rules of the sea, and was running no slight risk in his efforts to throw his pursuer off the track.

Until the swift-paced tropic night descended, he had continued his westward course, knowing full well that his change of direction must have been betrayed by the vessel's smoke. Then, when darkness had screened his movements, he put out his lights and sped eight or ten miles southward; then turned and ran eastward for twenty miles or more; then veered to the southeast and ran on through the night.

Whether he had thrown his pursuer off the track, he did not know. Once or twice he stopped his engines and listened, silently and intently, without hearing any measured propeller beat behind him. This, of course, was not conclusive, but it was encouraging.

About midnight he stopped again—this time for longer than before. Orders for silence fore and aft were passed quietly through the ship, and the low hum from fo'castle and from poop died away. For a time the hissing of the water along the sides continued, then it ended as the El Rio lost way. For perhaps five minutes the ship lay quiescent; then, abruptly, the screw began to revolve. The El Rio was off once more.

Captain Bunker had been occupied not only by his efforts to throw the supposed pursuer off the track, but also by an attempt to discover the spy who had robbed the safe. This proved to be extremely difficult. Every one on board who might reasonably have been suspected of committing the robbery seemed to be above suspicion, and were able to prove a perfect alibi, into the bargain.

Very speedily the captain demonstrated to his own dissatisfaction that the steward, James Price, whom he had first suspected, had been forward with the men during the entire time available for the robbery.

Evidently there is a spy on board. Who is it? And what ship is following the El Rio?

First Divorce Court

The first divorce court in England was instituted in 1858. The court consisted of three judges. At the first sitting five marriages were dissolved, and in the first year of the court's operation 38 divorces were granted out of 288 petitions. From the time of the Reformation up to 1858 there had been but 317 divorces in England, granted by acts of parliament. Until the passing of the divorce act in 1858 the theory in English law regarding divorce was the same as that of the Roman Catholic church, although in practice this rule was not strictly adhered to, and wealthy and influential persons, through parliament, secured freedom from galling ties. The divorce act provided that the wronged husband could be released from his obligation to an unfaithful wife, but gave no such recourse to an injured wife, unless the husband's offense in this direction was aggravated by other offenses.

Coats Achieve Varied Styling; Winter Hats to Suit Everyone

IN COATS the mode continues to show much partiality for simplicity and even severity of line, and there is no question that the straightline outergarment is "correct." This is reassuring knowledge, but every woman aspires to own a coat that is even more than correct—she wants one that is distinctive. Designers strive by different means to achieve this desired "chic"—through the use of novel fabrics or by unusual decorative features or originality in design and management of styles.

The creator of the charming coat shown here chose unusual decoration to place it in the ranks of those that claim distinction. Like many winter coats it fastens to one side and is made of wool velours, with straight, standing collar of fur. Loops of braid placed in rows, in a novel arrangement, make a beautiful finish for it and one that has the additional feature of being thoroughly practical as well.

To be chic and practical at the same time, is all that any coat needs, to be popular as well. This is a consummation devoutly to be wished—the end could be said of them for there was never so much diversity in headwear as there is now. Or perhaps it seems that way since the reaction came and we turned our backs on the small cloche so universally worn.

The group starts off with one of those soft off-the-face velvet shapes with a wayward brim widened at the front and caught to the crown with a ribbon and fabric ornament at the right side. This is one of many that keep to the right in placing their trimmings. When winter comes we shall see many soft off-the-face hats, some of them covered with the most brilliant embroideries and gold braidings. Others go further and are set with mock jewels, and queens are not more gorgeously crowned than their wearers will be.

"Spain" is written on the hat at the right quite as plainly as if the great seal of state had been affixed to it. It is one of many popular sailor models with a row of sequins about the brim edge and a chin strap of moire ribbon which appears to slip through the brim, for it crosses the crown. Many a youthful head adds to its attractions that all designers strive for. Beautiful fabrics that wear well help solve the problem for manufacturers, and there are novel stripes and plaids, new patterns in flamingo cloth, corded silks and fabric furs that need almost nothing in the way of decorations, being highly decorative in themselves. Fur bandings are liked for them in collar and cuffs, and occasionally bordering the hemline or front fastening. When plain materials are used the styling is varied by ingenious collars, jabots, three-tiered capes or odd front openings.

Here are five winter hats, each one beautiful and interesting, but each entirely different from all the others. If the group contained fifty hats it is likely that the same things when this picturesque hat adorns it. The model is in black.

A beautiful velvet hat in which a light facing relieves the dark covering is shown in the center of the group. It is a forerunner of the mode in flower-trimmed hats for midwinter. Its crown is high and made higher by two huge silk and velvet roses posed at the left side. Many color combinations are possible in hats of this kind and they look best on the dignified heads of mature types. At the lower right a chic velvet hat, with an eccentric brim line is shown—it has a flare of ostrich across the back—likely to be in flame color and a gold cord about the crown. It will find its proper resting place above an animated face. Felt and velvet are combined in the familiar shape that finishes the group and it is trimmed with one of those white-tipped black pompons that have so much style.

Advice to Suffering Women!

Springfield, Mo.—"I had a nervous breakdown and tried several remedies without getting any permanent benefit from them. I suffered from bloating, chills and terrible headaches. I advise all suffering women to give the 'Prescription' a fair trial."—Mrs. Bert Faulkner, 2069 Howard Ave.

THIS PRESCRIPTION FOR KIDNEYS

No Drugs—Just Roots and Herbs

6 Ounce Bottle, 75 cents

Daniel G. Carey, M. D.

Years ago Dr. Carey said, "When backache comes get after your kidneys—and don't waste any time."

"Right at the start, go to your druggist and ask for Dr. Carey's Marshroot Prescription No. 777; take it as directed until backache ceases and your eyes are clear and bright."

For more than 40 years Dr. Carey specialized in diseases of the kidneys and bladder, and when in the height of his remarkably busy life he decided to dispense his most effective kidney and bladder prescription through the better druggists, he helped thousands who could not afford to go to him for treatment.

Thousands of observant people have kidney ailments and never know it until too late. High colored urine, getting up in the night, and puffy eyes tell the story.

If you even suspect—start today with Dr. Carey's Marshroot Prescription No. 777. It will drive the poison from your kidneys and your druggist knows all about it.

Druggists dispense lots of it. It comes both in liquid and tablet form. It will help you as it has a host of others. If it should not, if you aren't glad in a week's time that you bought it, you'll gladly returned—and only 75c. If your local druggist hasn't it he can order from the Carey Medical Laboratory at Elmira, N. Y.

DEAD MAN GOT BOOZE; DRUG RECORDS SHOW

DAVENPORT—"Dead men drink no booze as well as tell no tales," is the contention of Roy Muhs, federal prohibition agent, who Tuesday charged Dr. Ora C. Robers, practicing physician here with issuing a prescripition to a man dead two years. The prescription was issued May 15, 1924, to Micheal Dempsey who died in May 1922.

A. G. Bush, United States cimmissioner, rfused to bind the doctor over to the grand jury, however Prohibition officers said the doctor's license to issue prescriptions had been revoked.

U. S. MOVES TO PUT DOWN RADIO STATIC

WASHINGTON—Conditions were announced by the department of commerce under which licenses will be issued on a strictly experimental basis for the use in radio broadcasting of power up to 5,000 watts. The conditions were drafted in the line with the recommendation of the National Radio conference that a general increase in power over 1,000 watts was desirable in all stations to overcome static and give better service o liseners. Super-power stattions having 25,000 to 50,000 watts are not considered in the plan and each station is taking out on experimental license will be considered as a separate entity in view of the varying local conditions.

In our real estate transfers of the last issue we made an error in regard to the Haberkamp transaction and it should have read as follows: August Haberkamp wf. to Verner A. Haberkamp W. D. date 10-9-24 E½ SE¼ 2-95-24. This is as it should have been and the two lines above the description regarding a mortgage did not have any connection with the Haberkamp deal and was not to have appeared at all as that part belongs to another party and was an error in setting the type. The Haberkamp tract is clear on the records.

Please take notice of the following change in the Auto Law in reference to change of ownership of cars:

"If transfer of ownership of Motor Vehicle is not made within ten days after change of ownership, a penalty of Five Dollars ($5.00) shall accrue against said vehicle and no certificate of rgistration shall bt issued until said penalty is paid."

DANGER IN MOLDY CORN

Horses Are Most Susceptible, Says Dr. C. H. Stange.

Much immature corn this fall will mean considerable mold and decay, both before and after gathering. Since certain farm animals are liable to injury or death from injudicious feeding of such corn, care should be exercised in feeding.

Of all farm animals, horses are most likely to be harmed by moldy or spoiled corn, according to Dr. C. H. Stange, dean of veterinary medicine at Iowa State College. Corn for the horses should be selected so as to eliminate any moldy or spoiled ears. Hogs and poultry are probably least susceptible to injury from poor quality feeds, and cattle may be fed poor corn in moderaae amounts with comparative safety. This applies not only to corn but also to all other feeds.

Docked Lambs Bring High Market Price

In Warm Weather Pine Tar Should Be Put on Tail.

Failure to dock and trim lambs costs New York sheep growers a tidy sum every year, for lambs that reach the market without this having been done bring a lower price.

"When the lambs are from one to two weeks old they ought to be castrated," says R. B. Hinman of the state college at Ithaca. "Select a bright day. Have the lambs on clean dry bedding, or if on pasture, have them on clean, dry grass. Provide some warm water containing a disinfectant. Wash the hands clean. Have a sharp knife, dip both hands and knife in this solution.

"It is well when there are a number of lambs to be castrated to sort them from the flock.

"Have someone catch a lamb and hold it up against his chest with its four legs together. The operator takes hold of the scrotum and cuts off one-third of the lower end. The testicles, now being exposed, are pulled out slowly, one at a time. After this, drop some of the disinfectant into the holes and put the lamb with its mother.

"A week after the buck lambs have been castrated and are almost healed, all lambs, ewes, and wethers should be docked. This work is commonly done with a chisel and block. A sharp knife is also used. The regular docking pincers, however, are better, as their use prevents loss of blood. They should be heated till they are red hot. In warm weather, when flies are troublesome, pine tar should be put on the stub of the tail to prevent attack by maggots. This operation can be performed by anybody exercising a little care."

Pruning Tomatoes Will Greatly Increase Size

The size of tomatoes can be greatly increased, and the season of ripening can be hastened, by pruning tomato plants to one stem and by training them to stakes. By this method, the tomatoes are lifted up from the ground and do not rot as readily. The size is increased, possibly because most of the plant food which would go into the formation of extra leaves goes into the production of tomatoes instead. Pruning should commence as soon as the suckers or shoots start to form in the axils of the leaves of the plant. This should be cut before they attain any great size. If these are kept out continually, the plant automatically has but one stem. The final ripening of the crop can be further hastened by pinching off the terminal bud when six or seven clusters of tomatoes have been set on the plant.

The practice of pruning results in securing very early tomatoes, and the maturing of a larger proportion of the crop of late tomatoes. When tomatoes are planted in this way it is permissable to plant them quite close, especially on good, rich soil. Tomatoes that are to be pruned to one stem can be planted two feet apart each way.

Cut Alfalfa for Hay

Until recent years the accepted practice has been to cut alfalfa for hay when about one-tenth of it was in bloom or when the crown shoots were two to three inches tall. An excellent quality of hay is obtained when the crop is cut at that time, but the experimenters claim that such early cutting injures the stand; that it has a tendency to kill out some of the plants whereas later cutting helps to maintain a good stand. It also keeps out weeds.

FARM FACTS

Remember soy beans make more hay and seed than cowpeas.

* * *

Don't fail to have velvet beans, cowpeas, or soy beans as a companion crop in all corn.

* * *

Cultivate the garden frequently to conserve the moisture and destroy the weeds.

* * *

The yield of hay from the Otootan will usually double or triple the yield of any variety of cowpeas planted under the same condition.

* * *

One ton of pumpkins, including seeds, equals in feeding value for dairy cows about 330 to 400 pounds of mixed hay or 800 pounds of corn silage.

* * *

Clover failures may result from improper soil conditions, diseases, non-adapted seed, improper methods of seeding, or the use of harmful nurse crops.

* * *

Soy beans should not be planted until the ground is warm and the field free of weeds. The ground should be thoroughly worked and the weeds killed before the crop is planted.

* * *

In growing alfalfa for seed, the seeding is the same as if we were growing it for forage. A person should then allow the alfalfa to run to full bloom stage and take the first cutting for hay.

* * *

Alfalfa has a very delicate blossom and a shower or often a heavy dew on succeeding nights through a period of several days would destroy the fertilization and little if any seed would be produced.

Egg Grades for Country Buyers

Try to Simplify Standards and Facilitate Trading on Uniform Basis.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Buyers' egg grades have been prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture in an effort to simplify egg standards and to facilitate trading on a uniform basis between producers and country buyers. Only two grades, No. 1 and No. 2, are provided for sound shell eggs.

Grade No. 1 consists of eggs of an average weight of 24 ounces net per dozen with a minimum weight at the rate of 22 ounces per dozen for individual eggs. The shell shall be practically clean and sound; the air cell shall be of a depth of 3/8-inch or less, localized, and may be slightly tremulous; the yolk may be visible and mobile; the white reasonably firm, and the development of the germ may be slightly visible.

Grade No. 2.

Grade No. 2 consists of eggs of an average weight of 22 ounces net per dozen with a minimum weight at the rate of 18 ounces per dozen for individual eggs; the shell, clean or dirty, but sound; the air cell having a depth of over 3/8-inch, and bubbly or freely mobile; the yolk plainly visible and freely mobile; the white weak and watery, and the germ development clearly visible but with no blood showing.

Despite heavy prospective production of eggs this year, the supply of eggs of high quality will not be excessive and will bring much better prices proportionately than ordinary eggs, the department points out in urging farmers to produce high quality eggs and to market them through agencies or to buyers who appreciate quality and will pay for it. Under the present system of paying a flat price for eggs the producers of good quality eggs is penalized by receiving a lower price than his eggs are worth, whereas the careless producer whose eggs are poor or bad receives more than he is justly entitled to receive, the department says. Use of the buyers' egg grades just promulgated is expected to correct this situation.

Enlisted in Campaign.

The services of county agents and extension agencies generally over the country are being enlisted in the campaign to bring about the marketing of eggs according to quality. It is felt that the grades of eggs used by the wholesale trade in terminal markets are too complicated for use at country points, hence the set of simple buying grades proposed by the department. When buyers pay prices for eggs based on quality, an incentive is immediately offered producers to produce and market eggs of the higher qualities, the department says.

Use of the new grades requires the candling of eggs by buyers. Information regarding candling methods may be obtained from the local county agent or by writing the United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.

Continual War on Weeds Necessary for Big Crop

If you are to grow a record crop on your corn patch, you will have to fight the weeds continually. They are one of the worst enemies of corn. They use up much of the food and water which should go to the corn plants.

Just as soon as the corn plants are a few inches high, use the cultivator. The first cultivation may be fairly deep because the root system is not extensive. The following cultivations should be shallow to avoid cutting the roots. Four cultivations during the season are generally considered an economical number to make. Above all have your corn patch clean, and if this requires more than four cultivations, make them.

Besides getting rid of the weeds, cultivation lets air into the soil making the corn roots large and stronger, and it makes a soil "mulch" which helps to prevent loss of soil moisture through evaporation.

Curing Alfalfa Hay in Cocks to Save Leaves

There is general agreement that putting alfalfa hay into cocks in the field saves more of the leaves—the best part of the feed—than when curing is done in the windrow, but it takes more labor and, since more time is required, there is more danger from rain. Where the weather promises to be fair for two or three days, it may be advisable to hurry the curing by doing most of it in the windrow. The amount of shatterings will be greater than when the curing is done in the cock, provided the weather remains fair in both cases. However, when the hay is cocked it requires longer to cure, thus increasing the danger of exposure to unfavorable weather. If the hay is exposed to several days' rain, even though cocked, the loss is likely to be greater than would result from taking advantage of the favorable weather and curing more rapidly.

Give Tomatoes Room

Do not allow tomato plants to grow long-legged. Transplant them to other boxes or frames and give each plant room enough to become stout stemmed and story. If well hardened off, they may be set in the open ten days earlier.

Cleanliness Is Big Factor With Chicks

Many Ailments of Youngsters Can Be Prevented.

"The biggest factor in growing good pullets is cleanliness," says W. H. Allen, specialist in poultry husbandry at the New Jersey State College of Agriculture, New Brunswick. "Such troubles as intestinal worms, coccidiosis, and paralysis are some of the troubles in pullet raising which can be prevented by cleanliness. At the time of hatching the chick is free from all diseases except bacillary white diarrhoea, and is free from this disease as well, unless the breeding stock is infected. Deaths alone are not caused by disease; digestive organs of surviving chicks may be injured, thus resulting in inefficient food assimilation.

"Cleanliness starts with the coop. This should be thoroughly cleaned each week, the litter and droppings removed and new litter put in. The ground is the next source of trouble to be watched. The soil next to the house should be turned under from time to time, and especially during wet weather. The house should be wired so that the chicks cannot get under it, as this ground will get moldy and become infected with disease. All poultry manure on the farm should be kept dry during the summer months and the manure shed should be screened to prevent flies from breeding in it. Flies are the source of much of the tapeworm troubles. Just because one flock is laying 50 per cent during November, is no reason why all will. Whether a flock lays well next winter or not depends upon how well they have been grown.

"Last, all old birds should be quarantined from the young stock. Old stock often carry disease, though they may not show it; hence, they are a menace to the growing stock."

Imported Parasites to Control Alfalfa Weevil

Destructiveness of the alfalfa weevil in the West has led entomologists to give attention for some years to the possibility of using parasites to assist in controlling this pest and to search in Europe, where the alfalfa weevil is native, for suitable species. Of the 12 species which have been brought from Europe into the United States five have shown promise of practical usefulness in Utah. One in particular, Bathyplectes curculionis, has become well established, so that it actually swarms in infested fields in this state and, in some instances, destroys over 90 per cent of the weevil larvae. Several promising species of parasites which might aid in controlling other stages of the weevil have thus far failed to become established.

A new department circular, No. 301, entitled "Introduction of Parasites of the Alfalfa Weevil Into the United States," by Thomas R. Chamberlin, entomologist, gives a brief account of the more important imported parasites and discusses the effectiveness of Bathyplectes curculionis. It may be obtained, while the supply lasts, by applying to the United States Department of Agriculture, Washington.

Weeds Harm Soy Beans

One thing the successful soy bean grower learns is that they must be given the right care at the right time. Nothing is so disastrous to them as a crop of weeds growing with them. It is more profitable to grow five acres right than twenty acres full of weeds. Weeds reduce the yield and quality of the beans severely, make cutting very difficult and at threshing time there is a mass of stuff to handle.

Farm Hints

Owning a farm home makes for ambition, industry and thrift.

* * *

Buy or prepare bluestone paste for treating watermelon stems.

* * *

Plan to get some resistant crop into the rotation on soil infested with root knot.

All varieties of soy beans are soil-builders and are worth the labor and expense of planting for that purpose alone.

* * *

Time invested in helping to build up a better community will pay big dividends in happier and more prosperous people.

All farmers should not go into the raising of hogs in large numbers, but every farmer can have some hogs and make swine raising fit into his other farm operations.

* * *

Farmers who grew soy beans last year and saved the seed have made from $20 to $100 per acre from the sale of seed, and the crop can be grown after grain.

* * *

Any common tin can filled half full of axle grease in which is placed an old, worn-out paint brush, will be found very handy on the farm for greasing plow shares and cultivator shovels.

* * *

Legumes mean more and better live stock, a more productive soil, better quality and better yields of grain, less expense and larger profits; in brief, more prosperity for the farmers, the business men and the community.

Culling Poultry Big Money Saver

Fowls Should Have Plenty of Mash and Green Feed and Be Vermin Free.

Although the poultryman should do some culling every month in the year, if he can make but one culling, the time to make it is the first of September, say the Cornell poultrymen who give some practical culling rules. They declare that culling out the poor producers from the flock is the easiest and the quickest way to save money.

During the culling season, the hens must have plenty of mash and green food and be free from mites; otherwise good layers may show all the signs of non-layers. It is also well to keep in mind that changes of feed, buildings, weather, and the like may bring about the appearance of non-laying conditions. Broody hens also have this appearance.

Signs of Good Producers.

Hens that have laid long and heavily have a different appearance from those that have not. These differences are in physical appearance and actions. The heavy producing bird is a worker, a good feeder, intelligent, elusive but not flighty, keen of eye, a good ranger, late to bed, early to rise. The low producer is indolent, flighty and an indifferent eater, with little activity.

In all yellow-skinned breeds like the Leghorns, Rocks, Reds, Wyandottes, Brahmas, and the like, it is possible to tell by the color of certain sections of the body whether the hens are laying or not. A heavy layer is flesh color, or white, in the beak, eye ring, ear lobe, vent and shanks, while a non-layer is distinctly yellow. A sick hen shows white in all sections and must not be confused with a layer. Also some breeds have a white skin naturally, and in these breeds there are no color changes.

There are changes in form as well. A laying hen has a large abdomen and the rear end of the keel is much deeper than the front. She also has well spread pelvic bones, full moist vent, soft flabby skin, broad flat back, while in a non-layer the abdomen is small, the vent dry and puckered, the skin thick and dry, and the back short, narrow and arched.

Hens Molt in July.

A molting hen usually stops laying, but in some of the heavier breeds they will molt to some extent and still lay. Leghorns usually stop laying when they begin to molt. Molting during the summer is one of the best ways to distinguish the non-layer from the layers. A good layer, well managed, will not begin to molt until October 1 or later. Hens that have been well cared for and are in full molt by the middle of July are not worth keeping.

The eyeballs of the laying hen can easily be seen when viewed from the rear, the comb is bright red and full, the beak short and curved, the face full and of fine texture. Non-layers have dull, embedded eyes, long straight beaks, hard shriveled combs and fat faces.

Excellent Qualities of Texas Honey Ball Melon

A new type of melon, called the Texas Honey Ball, which is a cross between the Texas Cannon Ball cantaloupe and the California Honey Dew melon, will be found in the markets this year, reports the United States Department of Agriculture. The melon is almost perfectly round in shape and averages about five inches in diameter.

Approximately 2,500 acres of the melons have been planted in Texas, the department says, which should produce, under favorable conditions, around 1,250 carloads. Only 65 acres of the melons were planted last year, largely for experimental purposes.

The meat of the new honey melon is similar in texture to that of the Honey Dew, 1½ inches thick, and is covered by a smooth, thin rind, fairly well netted. The chief merits of the melon are its shipping qualities and flavor. Shipments can be made without refrigeration to any section of the United States requiring ten days' to two weeks' time. The melon is not susceptible to damage from bruises caused by ordinary handling.

Save Small Grain Seed for Planting This Fall

That farmers will do well to plan for the acreage which they expect to plant in small grain this fall and to secure good planting seed for the fall, is a suggestion from the agronomists of Clemson college.

Good seed oats are very scarce this season, and should be carefully saved by farmers who have them. They will bring a good price this fall, if properly stored and kept so that they will be free from injury by rats, mice and weevils.

It is very difficult to prevent damage to small grain during summer months. It is important to have some place, either a granary or a barrel, where planting seed may be fumigated.

Continuous Garden

A "continuous" garden is possible for many months of the year if replanting is done. Why should all of the lettuce or beans be planted at one time? Why not utilize the space left after the young onions are pulled, by planting late cabbage?

Mystery, Magic, Romance Before Old Fireplace

What a spot of joy and creature comfort is the fireplace during cold spells! Time was when the open fire was a very important factor in the heating of homes in these northern parts; but the furnace, with its hot air, hot water and steam, more efficient and infinitely more prosaic, has put the fireplace in the background for utilitarian purposes.

The passing of the fireplace is to be regretted. Too frequently the modern home does not have this adjunct of comfort. It isn't really needed, so why have it? That's the American spirit of the practical carried to an excess. The fireplace isn't actually required for heating purposes, although it is a mighty aid in carrying the peak load when the mercury drops down to 20 degrees below. But are we to have only what we actually need?

Sitting up in front of a sizzling radiator or over a register which belches forth its heated air is not to be compared with lounging before an open fire with a good book, to doze or read as desire prompts. There is mystery, there is magic in the open fire. There is a heightening of creature comfort to the point where it has curiously odd and satisfying mental effect.

Let the storm rage outside, let the northern blasts assail windows and door, but here we have our comfort right before our eyes, and not brought up to us through sensitive pipes, which are no more responsive than a water main. No, give us a cold drive, an open fire and a good book, and we ask no odds of the most rigorous in southern climes.—St. Albans Messenger.

Production of Rosin Is One of Oldest Industries

Production of turpentine and rosin is one of the oldest industries of America, records of exports dating as far back as 1662, showing these to have been among the first products exported by the early colonists. While they were originally used in shipbuilding for caulking wooden vessels and protecting rope rigging, thus gaining their name of "naval stores," chemistry has developed an amazing number of uses for rosin and turpentine, making them indispensable in a large number of important industries. Soap manufacture leads in consumption of rosin, with surfacing of writing and printing paper ranking second. Rosin is also extensively used in the manufacture of varnishes, water-proofing compounds, roofing materials, leather dressings, lubricants, waxes, linoleum and electric insulation. Turpentine is an important industrial factor as a thinner for paint, solvent for inks, waxes, rubber and water-proofing compounds, as well as in chemical and pharmaceutical combinations.

Bond Issued in 1865

An eastern financial journal has brought to light an interesting bond. It is dated 1865 and was issued on a horse car line. The bond is for $1,000 and is carrying its third set of coupons, having been twice extended from its original maturity in 1880. Although the property has long ago been abandoned the bond is still "going" at four per cent and is an underlying lien of the New York city railways. It has paid $3,330 in direct interest. If all interest payments had been promptly reinvested at five per cent, the original investment in 1865 would have returned almost $25,000 up to the present time. From 1865 to 1900 the bond carried seven per cent interest, but since that year it has been reduced to four.

Not Worth It

A little boy was given $5 by his uncle. He had heard that a certain make of car is very cheap and he wrote to the factory for one. They were so amused that they asked him to visit them. His aunt took him to the factory.

"Go round," said the manager, having taken the money, "and choose the car you like best."

He wandered around, looking at the various specimens.

"Well?" said the manager, after he had made a thorough inspection.

"Please, I'd like my $5 back," said the boy.

No Demand

An elderly man approached the president of a big New York firm and asked for a job. The president, himself no youth, looked the applicant over thoughtfully and finally said: "Sorry, sir, but I can't use you. You appear to be more than thirty."

"Don't you want a man of some sense?" asked the applicant.

"Personally, yes. But I have stockholders and a board of directors to consider. The cry, you see, is all for ginger, vim, pep. There seems to be no demand for sense."

Would They Stay?

"Who's in that henhouse?" shouted the irate owner, as, hearing a noise in the night, he rushed out and aimed a shotgun at the door. "Speak, or I'll shoot!"

"Ain't nobuddy in here," responded a faint and trembling voice from the inside. "Ain't nobuddy, sah, 'ceptin' just us chickens!"—Exchange.

All Hallow-Eve

BY MYRTLE WALLACE MARTIN

The old wives tell that on All Saint's Eve
It were better to bide in bed,
With the shades all drawn, and the candles out,
And the bed clothes over our head!
How the black cats larch and yowl
For they tell weird tales of fearsome sights.
While the marsh mists rise 'round the voodoo ring
And the witches dance and howl.

And none can look on such sights and live—
So the old wives solemnly say,
So we all must shudder behind locked doors
Whitle the witch folk have their play
Lest we catch a glimpse of the sheeted dead,
Or a touch of their icy breath.
Thus the old dames mumble and groan away
Just scaring themselves to death.

But I can't see how anyone knows
If nobody lives to tell
What sights he saw. when the gastly crew
What nobody saw, that nobody knows,
And so I am not afraid,
Came forth at the night-shades' bell.
And the Jack-o'-lanterns I have in store
Would rout any witch parade!

TEACHER LICKS SON AND THEN THE FATHER

C. B. Donahue—he must be Irish—is a scrappy teacher of a rural school near Hampton who was hired to teach the school and is going to do it. A family by the name of Winters, said to be a troublesome outfit, have been annoying Donahue's pupils during school hours. Young Winters would stand across the road and call to the children. The young teacher made numerous reque ts that the Winter's desist, but to no avail. Last week he made his final plea, and was laughed at. Whereupon he trounced young Winters soundly with his fists.

In twenty minutes came old man Winters, with abusive language and a hammer. And young Donahue licked him. Then he filed informotion and the Hampton Justice of the Peace fined both Winters $25 and costs, totalling $66.50, and put the elder Winters under $500 peace bond. The school is very peaceful now.—Belmond Independent.

ELECTION LAWS EXPLAIN HOW TO "SCRATCH" BALLOT

Marking Circle Means Vote for Party Candidates

As there will without a doubt be a large number of voters who will vote for candidates in two or more parties at the coming election protions of the election law dealing with this question will be given below.

One matter that seems to be particuariy a puzzle to voters s how to "scratch" the ballot. The law states that when the circle at the top of a pary ticket is marked the ballot is to be counted for all candidates upon he ticket under the circle with exception of those offices for candidates designed by marking squares in another column.

How to "Scratch"

A voter, for instance, may mark the circle in the republican column and then go over into the democratic column and mark the square before the name of Dan Steck, candidate for United States senator. That means that all republican candidates with the exception of the one for United States senator will receive a vote. as well as the democratic candidate.

If the voter then also marks the presidential square in the progressive party column, it means that his vote for these candidates instead of the republican ones are to be counted.

LAW Quoted

Following are excrepts from the election law on this matter:

"He (the voter) may place a cross if he desires, in the circle at the head of the ticket on the ballot and the voter may place a cross in the square opposite the name of any candidate for whom he desires to vote, whether he has put a cross in the circle or not.

"If the voter does not want to vote for all candidates of his party to an office where more than one candidate is elected, the cross at the top of his ticket shall not apply to said office, but the voter must mark crosses in the squares opposite names of the candidates for whom he intends to vote. The voter may also insert in writing in the proper place the name of any person for whom he desires to vote, making a cross opposite thereto, of the making of a cross in a square opposite a blank without writing a name therein shall not affect the validity of the vote.

Shall Be Counted

"When a circle is marked the ballot shall be counted for all the canddates upon the ticket beneath said circle, except those offices for which some candidate has been voted for by marking a square. A cross placed in a square shall be counted for the candidate before whose name the square is so marked.

"When a square in front of any candidate has been marked, a mark in thec ircle shall not count for any particular office. When more candidates than the number to be elected to the same office are voted for by marking the squares opposite their names the vote shall not be counted for any candidate for this office. If less than the whole number of candidates to be elected are voted for by marking the squares opposite their names the vote shall be counted only for those marked in the square and the mark n the circle shall not apply. If for any reason it is impossible to determine the voter's choice for any office, but a mark in the circle of any ticket on the ballot shall not beheld to make it impossible to determine the voter's choice. Any ballot marked by the voter in any other manner than as authorized in this chapter, and so that such mark may be used for the purpose of identifying such ballot shall be rejected.

Vote! Vote! Vote! Everybody go to the polls and vote.

IT'S YOUR DUTY TO VOTE ON TUESDAY NOV. 4

No Matter What Party You Support Go To The Polls And Give Your Support

We are not going to tell our readers how they should vote at the coming presidential election on Nov. 4th—that is not our business. But, we do urge every voter in this community to go to his or her voting place and cast your ballot.

"Get Out The Vote" is the slogan adopted and spread all over the U. S. at this time. "Get Out The Vote" is the only way citizens of this great land of ours can voice their opinion as to their choice.

At the last presidential election less than fifty per cent of the voting public cast their ballot, which meant that more than fifty per cent of the people of the United States did NOT indicae their choice for the man who should be president, vice-president, and so on down the line.

It is a great privilege to be able to vote and you should grasp that privilege. If you do not go to the polls and vote yu have no right to kick if the government is not run in a way that pleases you.

If you are for Coolidge then go to the polls and vote that way. If you are a La Follette man, then go and vote that way. If you are a Democrat go and vote your democrat ticket. It's up to you and remember—your vote counts one!

See to it that all voters in your family go to the polls on Tuesday, November 4th.

Another thing. Study over the ballot before you go to the polls. Know just what you are going to do and then d it! Instruct your family in how to mark the ballot so they will make no mistake.

Vote Tuesday, November 4th.

Go to the Polls and Vote!

RUSSIANS CARRY OFF U. S. COLONY

Men Who Intended to Establish Title to Wrangell Island Kidnaped.

Nome, Alaska.—A colony intended to establish American title to Wrangell island, in the Arctic ocean, north of Siberia, was carried off by the Russian armed transport Red October, which raised the Russian flag there August 20, it was learned here.

The news came from Whalen, by which name Alaskans call that part of Siberia extending inland and north and south from Bering strait.

The Red October, which was sent to claim Wrangell island for Russia, bucked the ice 32 days to reach its destination, to which the coast guard cutter Bear and the gasoline schooners Herman and Silver Wave, three American vessels, tried in vain to penetrate this summer.

The colony carried away by the Red October is to be landed at Indian point, in Whalen, or at Vladivostok, 1,000 miles south, according to advices from Whalen.

This colony, consisting of 13 Eskimos, with Charles Wells, an American of Nome, in charge of them, was taken to Wrangell island by Harold Noice of Seattle, who found that an expedition led there in 1921 by Alan Crawford of Toronto had perished with the exception of an Eskimo seamstress, Ada Blackjack.

Officials aboard the Red October confiscated stores of furs, according to the Whalen messages. This consisted of 40 fox and 40 polar bear skins.

New York.—Vilhjalmur Stefansson, who a year ago founded the colony on Wrangell island which is reported from Nome to have been carried off by a Russian transport, said that the colony comprised 13 Eskimos and Charles Wells of Uniontown, Pa.

The colony was not founded in behalf of Great Britain, but of the United States, through an American corporation in Nome, Mr. Stefansson declared.

A cablegram from Nome giving the Soviet government's version of the affair was received by Leonard D. Baldwin, New York attorney and official of the Lomen Reindeer and Trading corporation of Nome.

Mr. Baldwin explained that responsibility for the island colony was a private venture undertaken by Carl Lomen of Lomen Bros., Nome, at the request of Mr. Stefansson.

Washington.—While official silence remains unbroken with respect to recent developments on Wrangell island, there is little reason to believe the connection of an American citizen with the colonization plan will alter the Washington government's attitude of noninterference in the question of the island.

Illinois Dedicates New $1,500,000 Stadium

Champaign, Ill.—The University of Illinois annual homecoming program opened officially on Friday when all university classes and offices were closed for dedication of the new $1,500,000 memorial stadium to the Illini war dead.

Fifteen thousand students, graduates and visitors attended the exercises, which opened with a parade to the stadium, headed by former service men. Robert F. Carr of Chicago acted as master of ceremonies and addresses were made by President David Kinley and General Huff, Director of athletics.

Dedication of the stadium is "our eternal rejection of the philosophy of brute strength," President Kinley said.

"This stadium is a memorial to those of the university who died in the World war. We are dedicating it to them. We cannot hallow it by our words, but they have hallowed it by their deaths in defense of ideals and principles in which they believed. It is for us to keep it hallowed by living those principles. The uses to which this great structure are put must be uses which exemplify those principles."

U. S. GUNBOATS AID CANTON FOREIGNERS

Casualties Due to Fire and Fighting Total 1,000.

Washington.—The gunboats Sacramento and Pampaugo of the South China patrol have been ordered to Canton owing to disturbances there, the State department heard from Consul General Douglas Jenkins in Canton.

Mr. Jenkins reported that there had been fighting in Canton between Sun troops and merchant volunteers, followed by many disastrous fires. All Americans are safe, though one has been wounded. He said the situation in Canton is critical.

Canton.—With gunfire abated and ruins of burned houses only smouldering, Canton nevertheless looks forward to more severe trouble to add to the street fighting between local factions which have disturbed the city during the past five days.

Casualties are estimated at 1,000, including those who perished in the fires which destroyed three-quarters of a square mile and those killed by soldiers sniping from housetops.

Looting on a large scale continues. Some foreign residences were reported disturbed.

Planes Crash in Clouds; Two Navy Men Killed

San Diego, Cal.—Two men were instantly killed and a third had a miraculous escape from death in a midair collision 1,300 feet above Coronado of two naval Vought airplanes.

The dead are:

Ensign Merritt J. Flanders, twenty-four years old, attached to the transport Vega.

Robert H. Kerr, aviation chief machinist's mate, naval air station.

Gunner William Cole escaped with his life when he walked out on the wing of his Vought and plunged head first to the ground, his parachute opening after he had fallen 500 feet. He is suffering from shock, but is otherwise uninjured, according to naval physicians.

The midair collision occurred when Kerr dived with his Vought plane out of a cloud hole. Cole, traveling faster than 115 miles an hour directly below, did not see Kerr's plane until the crash.

Senator Brandegee Ends Life by Gas

Washington.—Financial difficulties and ill health are believed to have caused Senator Frank B. Brandegee (Rep., Conn.), sixty, one of the most prominent members of the senate, to commit suicide at his home in Washington.

The district coroner gave the cause of death as "suicide from inhalation of illuminating gas."

Senator Brandegee was unmarried and left no immediate relatives.

Secretary Weeks, in a statement issued in New York, said that he knew that "the reason for taking this rash step is due to personal financial troubles resulting from investments in real estate."

ZR-3 REACHES UNITED STATES

Huge Airship Safely Crosses Atlantic Ocean From Germany.

FACTS ABOUT FLIGHT

Following are outstanding facts in the ZR-3 flight from Germany to Lakehurst, N. J.:

Smashed all flight endurance and long-distance nonstop speed records.

Flew from Friedrichshafen, Germany, to Lakehurst, N. J., in 81 hours.

Total over-land-and-sea distance covered 5,066 miles.

Crossed the Atlantic at twice the speed of the fastest ocean liner.

Is second dirigible to cross the Atlantic ocean.

First sighted American soil at almost exact spot where Pilgrims found first refuge.

Had aboard more persons than were ever carried across the Atlantic by airship before.

Lakehurst, N. J.—The glimmering bulk of the ZR-3 hove into sight at the naval air station at Lakehurst at 9:16 a. m.

It was 80 hours and 45 minutes since she sailed from Friedrichshafen, Germany, bound for this country, with 28 Germans and 4 Americans and destined for delivery at this station as the largest dirigible ever constructed and flown.

Her nonstop flight was estimated by officers of this station at 5,000 miles. The previous record was about 3,500 miles, set by the Zeppelin L-59 during the World war.

Throngs Greet Zep.

She appeared to be critically surveying the broad expanse of level beneath her, being particular about where she brought her gilded self to rest.

Thousands of persons lined the main highway leading into the field. Motorcars were parked in squadrons by the roadside. Excited groups of officers and civilians scattered about the airdrome rushed to the point where the signal bearers were heading.

Four hundred sailors and marines equipped with landing tackle marched onto the field with their officers ready to deploy along the drag ropes. Motorcars laden with heavy tackle and heroic letters in blue and canvas were made ready to indicate the spot chosen for the landing.

The cabin of the ZR-3 came lightly to rest upon the earth at 9:55 a. m.

She completed her journey from Friedrichshafen in 81 hours 25 minutes.

Makes Pretty Landing.

She made a beautiful landing, appearing over the northern edge of this naval air station at 9:16 a. m. She drove straight over the airdrome to the far edge of the field, where she headed around and skirted the station for a quarter of its circumference, before nosing downward into the breeze and coming to a stop before the airdrome.

VOTE!

Vote on Election Day, Tuesday, November 4!

Vote as you please—but vote!

The suffrage is not your inherent, God-given right. The suffrage is a privilege given you by your country, the United States of America, the richest, the most powerful, the freest nation of earth and of all lands the most desirable. It is a privilege that carries with it the responsibility of the good American citizen to carry on the work of the patriots who gave us the Declaration of Independence.

Abraham Lincoln, fifty-nine years ago, asked for renewed vows of fealty "—that government of the people, by the people, for the people, shall not perish from the earth." How shall that government live—if the people do not vote?

Don't be a slacker — in this duty of citizenship.

Vote—or shut up!

Mr. Kohlsaat was a close friend and adviser of Mark Hanna and President McKinley, Roosevelt, Taft, Wilson and Harding, and had been the guest of President Coolidge during his recent visit to the capital.

CONGRATULATIONS

"THE American Legion is the peculiar guardian of the great traditions of the World war. Its posts, scattered throughout the country, teach, by their presence, the lessons which the next generation should learn. Your annual conventions challenge the thought of the country to the significance of the events out of which your organization grew. You are therefore appointed to be the teachers and leaders of patriotic activity and your sacrifices in France and your service at home are the seeds out of which progress is to grow in our country. I close this word of greeting and remembrance with my congratulations upon what you have done and the great opportunity for further service which lies at your feet."

Such, in part, was the message sent by Newton D. Baker, to the sixth national convention of the American Legion held in St. Paul recently.

MAY AID VETERANS IN INSTITUTIONS

In Oklahoma there is an organization sponsored by the American Legion, known as the soldiers' relief commission of Oklahoma, which has recently done a great service to those veterans of the World war who are confined to Oklahoma penal institutions and who, the commission finds, are for the most part either mentally deficient or suffering from physical disability. The Legion wants these facts taken into consideration in the care and treatment of these unfortunate evidences of a world at war. They base their appeal for reform and a new consideration of the incarcerated veteran upon the following facts disclosed by their survey of Oklahoma prisons:

Of the 358 former service men now confined in Oklahoma institutions, approximately 15 per cent of the whites and 10 per cent of the colored inmates were found to be either mentally deficient or otherwise psycopathic. One hundred and fifty inmates, former service men, were found to be suffering from physical disabilities. Twenty-one former soldiers in Oklahoma prisons are classed as illiterates; 20 have had no schooling whatever, while 72 men can barely read and write. Only nine whites and two colored have completed high schools, a great majority having less than a common school education. Only 41 of the 358 confined are serving second sentences; 97 are married and 86 have children.

Apparently a large number of ex-service men were attracted to Oklahoma, following the war, in search of the liquid gold called oil. And then came the "dry holes" and the business depression, resulting in many of these men, abnormal in many instances and lacking the restraints of home in other instances, being led into trouble.

In presenting their report the commission made the following recommendations:

"The confinement in a penal institution of an honorably discharged soldier, sailor or marine does not forfeit a claim on his part against the federal government, arising from his military service. Such men, however, are usually ignorant of their rights and very largely reluctant or helpless to assert them. The work done in connection with this survey is done with a view towards the establishment of these rights. We further recommend that a full-time neuro-psychiatrist expert be assigned to the prisons, that the prisoners may be closely observed and reclassified where necessary; construction of a psychopathic ward inside the prison walls, in which should be confined the mental defectives; better wards for tuberculars; separation of first offenders from hardened criminals and vocational training classes along lines of preferential selection by the inmate."

Georgia Legion Ready to Aid Atlanta Police

Asa W. Candler, national executive committeeman of the American Legion from Georgia, in a speech at Atlanta, pledged the moral support of the Argonne post of the American Legion to the Atlanta police department and offered active assistance if ever it should be needed. Mr. Candler declared: "The police force of Atlanta has been constantly hampered by interference of petty politicians. We are proud of our police force and are behind you in your efforts to enforce law and order. The Argonne post has more than 1,200 members, trained, organized and capable of meeting any emergency that may arise."

"And now," said the minister, concluding a talk before the Sunday school, "are there any questions you wish to ask?"

"Yes, sir," piped an urchin who had watched him intently. "Do you wear a shirt under that thing?"—American Legion Weekly.

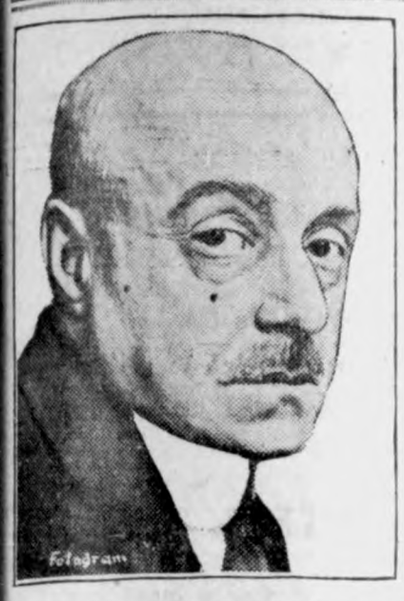
PEOPLE TALKED ABOUT

Knox New Head of American Bankers



William E. Knox of New York (portrait herewith) is the new president of the American Bankers' association, succeeding Walter W. Head. Mr. Knox is president of the Bowery Savings bank. He came to this country from Ireland as a boy of nine. In his thirty-nine years' connection with the Bowery Savings bank he has climbed through every position from junior clerk to president. The institution of which the former immigrant boy is the head has resources of more than $230,000,000, its depositors number 187,000 and it pays to these depositors $8,000,000 annually in interest.

Oscar Wells, president of the First National bank, Birmingham, Ala., is the new vice president of the association. Following are the newly elected presidents of divisions: Lucius Teter, Chicago, trust company division; Alvin P. Howard, New Orleans, savings bank division; Carl W. Allendoerfer, Kansas City, clearing house section; W. F. Augustine, Richmond, Va., state secretaries' section; William C. Gordon, Marshall, Mo., state bank division; Edgar L. Mattson, Minneapolis, national bank division.

In opening the convention, Walter W. Head, retiring president, unequivocally opposed government ownership of railroads and other great basic industries, urged the bankers to combat vigorously all efforts to give congress the power to override decisions of the Supreme court, and declared that the causes of the agricultural crisis were predominately economic and the remedy lay in the application of sound economic principles rather than in the pursuit of political panaceas.

Doctors of Ancient Egypt Knew a Lot

Prof. James H. Breasted of the University of Chicago (portrait herewith), whose fame as an Egyptologist is world wide, says that the old idea that Egypt was exclusively a land of magic, mystery and superstition is dispelled by the discovery of a document showing that Egyptian physicians of the Seventeenth century before Christ studied anatomy in the spirit of pure scientific research.

Upon an ancient papyrus now in America there was inscribed in the writing of ancient Egypt what Professor Breasted calls "the oldest nucleus of really scientific medical knowledge in the world."

Professor Breasted is making a complete translation of this important document which, although it has been in America for a number of years, has never been properly studied. The manuscript, known as the Edwin Smith papyrus, now in the possession of the New York Historical society, Professor Breasted says "contains incomparably the most important body of medical knowledge which has survived to us from ancient Egypt, or, for that matter, from the ancient Orient anywhere."

Mrs. G. W. Vanderbilt Sets Elite Talking

Mrs. George W. Vanderbilt and her daughter, Cornelia (portrait herewith), have set the smart set of New York and other eastern cities talking and—it may be—thinking. Miss Cornelia Vanderbilt, it will be recalled, was married last spring with much pomp and ceremony to Hon. John Francis Amherst Cecil of the British legation. A clause in her father's will provided that Cornelia, to inherit, must keep her American citizenship. So Mr. Cecil resigned from the legation and announced his intention to help manage the famous Vanderbilt estate, Biltmore, which consists of 100,000 acres in the mountains of North Carolina, near Asheville.

Mrs. Vanderbilt returned from a long trip in Europe the other day, and announced that she was homesick for the North Carolina hills and was going back to resume the management of her big dairy business, which she has carried on since her husband's death in 1914.

"We sell all our milk to North Carolina cities," said Mrs. Vanderbilt. "In fact, they take more than we can produce. Oh, yes, dairying is most profitable. I'm a plain farm woman, you know. I'm building a small house on the estate for myself; the larger house belongs to my daughter. It seems to me the next development in social life in America will be the country family life, similar to the country life in England."

Dave Windsor, One Grand Little Mixer

Well, Dave Windsor—more formally Edward Albert Christian George Andrew Patrick David, prince of Wales, heir apparent to the throne of Great Britain—has recently been in our midst and has departed to visit quite extensively among the dominions and commonwealths of the British empire. Dave had a good time, even if the British polo team was beaten by the American team. As everyone knows, Dave, who is now thirty, has successfully dodged all attempts of his royal parents to get him married. On the face of it, the casual reader might imagine that Dave's ambition in life was to have a good time.

But the truth is, largely, that Dave is one grand little mixer and is doing his mixing with a purpose. If he keeps on, he'll know a whole lot about the world and the people thereof by the time he comes to the throne. He's got the same talent for mixing with all sorts of people that distinguished his grandfather, Edward VII, who was a pretty wise sort of king. Dave is an even better mixer, because he goes in for athletics and sport—and sport is the most democratic thing on earth.

Dave makes a good impression on everyone. He listens well and he asks intelligent questions. This sort of thing makes for kindly feeling everywhere. And good will is an asset these days, with nations as with men.

POLICE ARE AFTER HIM

Photograph of Gerald Chapman, now being sought by police, who believe him to be the yegg that fatally shot a policeman in New Britain, Conn., while escaping from a store he was robbing. Chapman is thought to be accompanied by "Dutch" Anderson, his old pal. Chapman first became prominent when he led the $1,000,000 mail pouch robbery in New York, for which he was sentenced to 25 years in the Atlanta federal penitentiary. He escaped early in 1923, was shot in the stomach and caught, then induced a nurse in the hospital to aid him to escape again.

Going to Waste

"The sports of other days don't appeal to the youths of today," declared an elderly resident. "Horse chestnuts are ripe and popping out of their prickly shells, but I haven't seen a single boy whirling strings with two of these nuts tied to the ends. That used to be my finest fall frolic. We'd whirl the strings and then let go, and the device would wind around telephone or light wires. All the kids enjoyed the sport. And to such a degree that the coppers on the beats used to chase us merrily when we became over-zealous in cluttering up the wires. But the boys of today don't know this pleasure. And it seems a shame for all the fine horse chestnuts to go to waste."—Detroit News.

RUTH SUCKOW, FAMED WRITER IS HONORED

FOREST CI TY—Miss Ruth Suckow was the honor guest at the initial meeting of the Woman's Club her Tuesday evening at the Cunntry club. . She was introduced to all present and must have felt that Forest City has not failed, in spite of all that may have been said to the contrary, to appreciate its own genius.

The club house was cleverly converted into a little theater and after the necessary business of selecting delegates to the tenth district meeting which will be held at Emmetsburg Ocober 14 and 15, and electing of delegates to the meeting Friday afternoon at Rice Lake, held for the purpose of perfecting a county federation, was disposed of a fantasy "The Garden of Wishes," was presented by the drama department. Wilma Thompson had previously played the "Woman" under the direction of Mrs. Hallie Flanagan, the author, and pleased her audience. Mrs. Maben, admired for her wonderful voice and faithful portrayal took the part of "The Grantor" and Almer Osher truly acted the dashing and romantic part of the "word" completed the cast which made the worthy little play a delightful entertainment.

The social committe, assisted by some of the younger members, served refreshments. Mrs. Wilson and Mrs. Holman, poured. The selected orchestra playd for the gathering throughout the evening.

APPLES FOR WINTER STORAGE

Bruised Fruit Will Not Keep so Well Fairly Constant Temperature is Desirable.

Apples intended for winter use should be left on the tree until they are thoroly ripe or until there is danger of actual freezing. An ordinary frost will not hurt apples but they should not be allowed to freeze Care should be exercised in picking not to bruise any of the fruits and good sound apples should be stored. Wormy and otherwise unsound fruit should be discarded.

It may be a good plan to put the apples in tight containers and place them in a shed until cold weather starts in when they should be removed to the cellar. An outdoor cave or cellar in which apples are stored should be kept as cool as possible without freezing. Until cold weather sets in it is a good plan to keep the cave or cellar doors closed in the day time and open at night to help in keeping the temperature constant The best time to place apples in the cellar is in the morning after they have laid overnight and become chilled off, according to C. V. Holsinger, horticulture specialist of Iowa State College.

Wrapping of apples will probably help somewhat in preserving them, but is essential that they should be properly handled and stored. If apples should become slightly frozen it is best not to disturb them until they are thawed out. Even fall varities such as Wealthies and Wolf Rivers may be kept as late as March if cared for as directed.

MANY BILLBOARDS MUST BE REMOVED

highways on private property in positions where they cannot be held dangerous to the public safety. It is significant that the new law received the hearty backing of the Iowa Poster Advertising Association The Association was wise in urging the state to regulate their business rather than taking a defiant attitude and insisting upon putting signs any and every place they pleased. The latter policy would have had the effect to so antagonize the public that eventually sentiment would have demanded the doing away of out door advertising entirely. As it now stands, it is not likely there will be any serious public objection to well regulated poster and billboard advertising such as the law calls for.

Iowa's new law dealing with outdoor advertising went into effect October 1. It prohibits the erecting of billboards in any place that might prove dangerous, as where a sign might obstruct the view of any any portion of a public highway or of a railroad track. Futhermore the law provides that billboards and advertising signs shall not be placed or erected within the boundry linss of the public highways. The latter provision refers only to such signs as are placed on the fences or between the fences and not those on private property. The law should improve the appearance of the state's highways in addition to making them safer. It will prevent the tacking of miscellaneous signs on fences or telephone poles, and also do away with all signs that might interefere with a drivers vision, such s billboards at crossings or near railway tracks. It does not ,of course do away with the outdoor advertising business, since billboards can still be erected along

WHAT A PRESIDENTIAL DEADLOCK WOULD MEAN

Every voter of the United States should understand that the talk about trouble incident to a possible deadlock in the presidential election is not exagerated. There are some republicans who are inclined to look upon the prediction as a joke when it is said that Governor Bryan, of Nebraka, may be the next president. The placing of Mr. Byran in the White House, by election, in the sen ate, may or may not be probable, but the fact that it is possible prevents the matter from being considered as a joke.

The observers and prophets of po litical affairs are not talking throu their hats when they refer to the perplexing puzzle which would result if no candidate receives a majority, in the November election. A majority in the Electoral College is necessary. If there is no majority, the lower house of the present congress would be called upon to elect a president. A presidential election in the house of representatives is conducted strictly along state lines. Every state votes as a unit and the vote of each state goes to the party which has a majority in that state. There are forty-eight states. Hence at least twenty-five states must stand together for one candidate if there is to be an election by the house. As a matter of fact the house of representatives at tht present time appears to be hopelessly deadlocked in advance of any vote for president. Republican and democratic congressman are divided in five states. Hence these states can not vote so long as each adheres to its party affiliations. These states are Maryland, New Jersey, New Hampshire, Nebraska and Montana With the initial deadlock, neither of the two major parties in the present congress can command a majority vote. The republicans have a majority in twenty-two states, three short of a majority; the democrats have a majority in twen y -one sta es, four short of the numbe: necessary to elect a president.

The talk about Bryan as president is based on the fact that the choice of a vice president rests with the senate if there is no majority in the popular vote. It is possible that the coalition of democrats and insur gent republicans, which was the tive short time, geologically speaking, the reptiles practically died out. This developement is one of the greatest in geological history—great er even than the developement of man, who taking the evolutionist theory at its face, sprang from a low er order of mammals.

In what manner the mammals con quered is not known, but it is known from signs in the rocks, that they won through intelligence. The reptiles indeed had brains, some larger than man's, many smaller; but the mammals had better brains, inproportion to the work to be done, and could r ason. Mind, in some way we do not know, conquered over body.

This triumph of mind over matter, small as it was then, made all present day civilization possible. Mind has conquered the elements, even to navigating the air. It is reaching out, never satisfied. What the future will be cannot be told but it is certain that man, endowed with intelligence and reasoning powers will continue to rule, unless in time supplanted by and even more intelligent animal.

School now teach in a few years all the lessons of the past learned by slow, bitter experience, and accumulated knowledge gives man power greater than that of any mammal of lower degree, even though it be sixty or a hundred times larger in size and physical strength.--Advance.

Saxon and Norman Forms of Speech

When the Normans conquered England and dispossessed the Anglo-Saxons of their lands they spoke what is known as Norman-French. This continued to be the official language for many years, according to a writer in London Tit-Bits.

One of the most remarkable, though often unnoticed, results of this dual language in the same country is the different names we give to the dead and living animals used as food.

The Saxon was the serf who tilled the soil and tended cattle; the Norman was the overlord who ate the meat thus provided. While we call the living animal a cow, we call the dead animal beef, the first word being Saxon and the second Norman.

Similarly, the serf called the living animal a sheep, but when it was served on the baron's table it was mutton. In the same way deer became venison, calf became veal, and the hog became pork.

Every man's conscience is just a little different from every other man's.

—11—

Next the captain turned to Lord George. Captain Bunker had his own opinion about so-called noblemen; he distrusted them and their credentials on principle, and set little store by the fact that Lord George had been introduced by another nobleman. Only the fact that Lord George had been indubitably popping away with his rifle from the quarter-deck all afternoon prevented Captain Bunker from taking him to task directly. He did question him shrewdly as to the bottles at which he had been firing. But he got no results; though apparently open and frank to the limit, Lord George gave no information of the slightest value; and Captain Bunker was unable to decide whether this was because he was exceptionally shrewd or entirely ignorant.

Last, the captain sought out Miss Denslow, and inquired into her whereabouts during the afternoon, and found that she was fully accounted for.

There remained only Mrs. Archman's maid, in the family employ for twenty years, who had been with her mistress nearly all afternoon, and who seemed entirely incapable of carrying through such a desperate enterprise as safe robbery.

Mrs. Archman, Harry and Bess seemed above suspicion; and any lingering doubts that Captain Bunker may have entertained as to the complicity of any one of them, or of the maid, were dissipated as he reflected that they really could not possess the technical skill necessary to open a safe by fingering the tumblers of the lock. Only a person of unusual skill and of long training could possibly have done this.

Captain Bunker was forced to conclude that some member of the crew had taken desperate chances and ventured aft, where he had no business, and had succeeded in reaching the cabin and getting into the safe. Investigation, however, cast no slightest shadow on any one of the men.

Bess knew how busy Captain Bunker had been and she tried to hold herself in leash away from him, so as not to add to his annoyance. All the early part of the evening she lay in her chair, listening to the chat of the others, especially to that of Lord George.

When the steamship started again Bess rose from her chair. "I'm going to the bridge," she announced.

Harry looked up. "Captain Bunker won't want you," he began. Then, noting that his sister had waited for no comment, he turned to Lord George with a laugh. "We men will have to get up an association in America to regain our rights," he said.

Lord George did not answer for a moment. Then he started. "Oh! Ah! Yes! Quite so, old chap," he answered, heartily but vaguely.

Harry stared at him, but the Englishman said no more, and after a moment Harry got up and wandered away forward.

Meanwhile Bess had ascended to the bridge and had gone to Captain Bunker's side. "I couldn't stay away any longer, captain," she murmured. "I was too anxious. Have we dodged them?"

Captain Bunker turned a dim face to the girl. "I think so," he said. "At all events we're going in."

"Going in?"

"Yes. We've just passed Lobos island. Yonder it lies." He pointed to the east, but Bess could see no trace of the blacker shadow of the land. "Our destination is just ten miles due south. It's the island shown in that map your mother brought me."

"Oh!" In the stress of the greater emotion that had arisen out of the violation of the instructions, Bess had forgotten the map. "Is it the right map?" she asked. "I have forgotten to ask."

"Yes; it's the right map." Captain Bunker looked about him long and steadily. Then he turned to his first officer. "Keep her as she is, Mr. Collins," he instructed. "I'm going to the chart house." He glanced at Bess. "Will you come, Miss Archman?" he invited. "I want to talk with you."

Bess went very willingly. Captain Bunker led the way to the chart house, and held open the door for her. That young woman stared into the blackness, then stepped in, and waited while Captain Bunker closed the door, shutting out the faint light that leaked from the clouded stars. She heard the captain moving about in the darkness, apparently blanketing the windows; then she heard a faint click, and saw a closely shaded electric bulb glow out, throwing a cone of light upon the table in the center of the room. By its aid she made her way to a chair beside the table and sat down.

Captain Bunker sat down opposite her. "Here is your map," he said, laying the muddy, bloodstained square of parchment on the table. "And here is the chart of Moro island, the spot where my instructions bid me meet your father. As you see, they are the same, except that the government chart shows no red lines."

Bess stared at the chart in feverish excitement. Undoubtedly Captain Bunker was right. The outlines of the island on the map and chart were plainly the same. The parchment map, however, was on a much larger scale; when Bess laid it on top of the government chart it hid a whole group of islands of which it formed a part.

With sparkling eyes, she looked up as Captain Bunker spoke. "There is nothing on your map to show whether the island is one mile or fifty miles in length," he said. "But the government chart shows it to be about five miles long and three miles wide, and to consist chiefly of an extinct volcano. This red line"—he pointed it out with a stubby forefinger—"comes down to the water on the east side. My instructions say the northeast side, and that is perhaps near enough. At any rate, we will go to the end of the red line first. The other islands of the group are placed so as to form a sort of natural harbor with fairly good anchorage."

"I see." Bess could scarcely sit still. "And what do the crosses mean? Treasure?"

"Lord knows. I don't," answered Captain Bunker seriously. "Of course a map like this suggests buried treasure and other accompaniments. But, of course, Mr. Archman isn't the man to take his daughter on a chase after treasure, so we can leave that out."

"Oh!"

"Yes; we can leave that out." Captain Bunker spoke severely. "And thank God for it! I went treasure hunting once in my young days and I had my fill of it. It isn't the romantic child's play you young people think. This isn't treasure hunting, but I'm afraid it's worse. It seems very plain to me now that somebody committed murder to get this map. They failed at first, but they succeeded later. Then finding that it did not give complete information, they sent it to your mother, hoping that she would do exactly what she did do—send it to your father by someone whom they could follow. That they have followed is proved by the fact that my safe was robbed, and the fact, if it is a fact, as I strongly suspect, that they are trailing us in another ship. This thing is mighty serious. I only hope we'll find your father and sister alive!"

Bess' face had grown paler and paler. "Alive?" she gasped. "You don't think that—"

"No; I don't; after all." Captain Bunker caught himself up in swift contrition. "No; I don't. They're probably all right. If these scoundrels knew where to find them, they wouldn't be following us. But the situation is certainly alarming. If I could only find the spy—but I can't. What I particularly wanted is to ask you to notify me of the smallest suspicious thing that you may notice. Don't stop because you think it may be a hoax."

Suddenly Bess remembered the man's and woman's voices she had heard apparently proceeding from Harry's cabin and his denial of having been one of the talkers. It had seemed a very trifling thing at the time, but in view of what had happened since, it perhaps became important. "There's just one thing, captain," she said. "It's like this," and she went on and told of the event.

Captain Bunker brought his fist down with a crash. "There isn't but one woman it could have been," he rasped, "and she—"

A tap at the door made him break off and lift his hand to the electric bulb overhead. The light snapped out. "Come in," he called.

The door opened and a man's head appeared against the dim sky. "Mr. Collins says will you please come on the bridge, sir," said a voice.

"All right." Captain Bunker turned to Bess. "I'll look into the matter, Miss Archman," he said, as he rose and hurried out of the room, followed more slowly by Bess.

The El Rio was approaching the land, whose loom Collins had made out. Captain Bunker rang his engines off and on and kept the engine-room telegraph spinning like mad. A rift in the clouds ahead was growing momentarily brighter; the captain watched it and swore softly to himself.

Brighter grew the rift and brighter, changing from a rift to a gash, and widening, till abruptly a fat, yellow moon gleamed out for an instant, then slipped away again. It had stayed just long enough to show a black island, with a mountain peak thrusting high above it.

Captain Bunker rasped an order and the wheel spun madly. The El Rio turned on her heel and darted westward for a little way, then headed south into the mouth of an invisible channel.

Steadily the steamship went on, till even Bess could see the peak of the mountain a little off the port bow and could make out a lower lump of land that ended with a smother of white foam to starboard. She looked aft and saw that the two lines of foam had arisen apparently out of the sea and seemed to be closing in behind the vessel. Then suddenly they began to move swiftly to starboard. Bess started, looked around and saw that the peak of the mountain had swung far to port, and she realized that the El Rio had passed into a harbor and was turning, probably to seek some anchorage screened from the outside view.

Involuntarily she spoke. "Good! Good!" she exulted. "We've dodged them. We're safe."

But even as she spoke a sudden glare filled the night, sending its brilliant gleam over miles of heaving waters, lighting up the quarterdeck, the breaking waves, and the tall cliffs that rose on three sides.

Someone had set fire to a red flare placed upon the taffrail.

CHAPTER X

Behind the Island

Bess was up early the next morning. El Rio lay nearly quiescent on a silver and gold flecked sea that rocked to the base of the bounding mountain peaks. To right, to left, behind, before, rose islands. Bess knew by the chart that there were many of them, but where one began and another ended, she could not see; their outlines melted indistinguishably into each other.

To the west lay the island of the chart, bathed in sunlight and easily recognizable by its shape, a tall, apparently flat-topped peak which rose with amazing steepness out of a hump of tree-clad rounded hills that sloped downward gently to twenty or thirty feet above the water and then broke away abruptly to the sea as if cut by a gigantic knife. There seemed to be no beach, the shores rising sheer from the water's edge. No sign of a dwelling place, not even the smoke from a fugitive fire, rose to tell that the island had any inhabitants at all.

Disappointed, Bess once more scanned the waters of the bay, but detected no sign of life. The broad bay seemed utterly deserted.

Bess glanced up at the bridge and saw there the tall figure of the first officer, Mr. Collins, instead of the bulky frame of Captain Bunker, with whom she might discuss the situation.

The events of the afternoon and evening before were still unexplained, so far as the discovery of the spy was concerned. As to his object, there could no longer be any doubt. The red flare on the taffrail, following the secret examination of the sealed instructions, could have no other object than to give information to a pursuer.

When the red flare broke on the night, the quarterdeck was deserted both by passengers and sailors. Collins, springing from the bridge and rushing aft to hurl the treacherous light into the waves, had seen no one. All the passengers, except Mrs. Archman, who was in her stateroom, seemed to have been collected far forward, straining their eyes to penetrate the darkness into which the ship was heading. Captain Bunker's most strenuous inquiries failed to cast suspicion on anyone. And other inquiries, addressed to the crew, had, so far as Bess knew, met similar failure.

And there was no sign of any pursuer! Bess could only hope that, after all, neither floating bottle nor red flare had succeeded in carrying the spy's information to his patrons.

Place at the Top

Andrew Carnegie said: "I would not give a fig for the young man in business who does not already see himself a partner or the head of the firm." Do not rest for a moment in your thought of yourself as a head clerk, foreman or manager, in any concern, no matter how big it is. Say to yourself each day, "My place is at the top." Be king in your dreams. Vow that you will reach the position you long to attain with untarnished reputation, and make no other vow to distract your attention. No matter what business you may be in, your prime ambition should be to attain high water marks. The love of excellence is the star that leads the world onward.—Inspiration.

Community Building

Wrong to Think Small Town Not Up to Date

Many city people labor under the delusion that rural communities are not "up" on the latest styles, labor-saving appliances, novelties, etc., the Pathfinder Magazine remarks. The truth of the matter is that the rural housewife now reads all about the latest styles in the fashion magazines; with true feminine instinct she notes the dress of visitors and parties of autoists passing through the town. Extending the franchise to women has made them full-fledged citizens. The community store has to keep abreast of the times. It can no longer pass off old dress models on the knowing woman. The same thing applies to other merchandise. Nowadays the farmer is too wary to have old stuff passed off on him; he wants the newest and the best.

The radio is a big factor in knitting the rural community and the city in closer bonds of friendship and mutual understanding and helpfulness. It places the country resident on a par with the most favored citizen in regard to recreation and general culture. These and other factors are helping eradicate once and for all the far-fetched notion which once maligned the country man. In effect, the country is one ingredient, the city another; each is indispensable and together they make a perfect combination.

New American Homes Show Better Designs

It is indeed gratifying to note the tendency of architects and builders to get away from the uninteresting, box-like houses, giving us instead homes that at least have some semblance of architectural merit. While the public has not yet entirely signified its full appreciation of good architecture, the newer houses in both the cities and suburban communities give evidence of a leaning toward better design.

American small house architecture is steadily mounting to higher levels, which marks a distinct achievement, not only in the cultural life of the people but in the finest qualities of citizenship.

Good architecture, like good examples of any other art, is eternally good. It is in no way dependent upon changing fancies. The surface currents of public disapproval cannot long persist against the truth that is inherent in good architecture. There were periods when types of Colonial architecture, if not in public disfavor, were at least disregarded, but because they measured up to the best standard of the art they have always commanded the approval of the discerning and have never been more strongly intrenched in public favor than today.

Beauty Spot Appealed

Years ago a way-station agent of a railroad traversing the plains of the Canadian Northwest, sent back home for a few packages of flower seed and with such time as he could spare transformed the surroundings of his mean little one-room station. Sir Thomas Shaughnessy, president of the road, was making a tour of inspection and when he reached this little garden spot in the then uncultivated wastes, he asked to see the boy and learned from him the story of his garden. As a result, the next year all the agents of this road—which stretches from the Atlantic to the Pacific—received packages of seeds and instructions to plant flowers around every station. The custom then begun has ever since continued.

Plant More Trees

Most cities and even some small towns, especially new towns, are apt to be pathetically treeless, and towns do need trees more and more as their population increases, Jane Leslie Kift writes in the Detroit Free Press.

Have you ever thought about the walls of the factories of your town? They looked rather well in the Pennell war posters, but some hot June day as you walk down a street skirted on both sides by monotonous brick walls, don't they seem oppressive? Don't you think that if the same walls were blanketed with green they would be more restful and more beautiful?

Beauty Easily Attained

It is remarkable the comparatively short period necessary to convert bare grounds into splendid settings of foliage and blooms when good judgment is used in the selection of plants. Many houses built only a few years ago that lack the beauty the modern community demands can at little cost be given the atmosphere of privacy and the mark of individuality that can come only from the completion of the house setting.

Never Stint on Paint

Exposed wood quickly deteriorates. Prolonged neglect will mean a repair bill. Paint is by far cheaper than repairs.

Paint has a curious effect. Many an architectural eyesore has been entirely changed within the space of a few days and has become as asset instead of a liability to the community and its owner. On the other hand many an architectural masterpiece has been ruined beyond hope of repair by lack of paint used at the right time.

Fed Captive Offspring

Mrs. T. W. King of Lamont, Iowa, has some domesticated orioles which she captured in the nest when the birds were just about ready to fly. One morning Mrs. King noticed the father of the birds beating against the cage in an effort to get to his young. She then hung the cage on the porch and the father brought food for his family. He continued this until the birds learned to take care of themselves.

Would Make Great Haul for Burglars

The richest spot in the United States is less than three feet square in a vault in the United States Treasury department. Here are stored 19 packages of gold certificates with the total value of $608,000,000.

Although the packages have the height and width of the usual bank note and are only about 18 inches long, 3 of them have the total value of $20,000,000. Each package contains 2,000 $10,000 bills, valued at $40,000,000. The remaining six packages are worth $88,000,000.

This money is kept in the reserve vault of the treasurer's office, or the so-called "storage room," of the treasury until it is needed for circulation. These gold certificates are not put into circulation unless an equal amount of gold is put into the treasury in their place. The gold is kept until it is redeemed by the gold-covered bank notes. At present there is more than $1,250,000,000 outstanding in gold certificates.

Men of Prominence
Enormous Feeders

Sports writers who see Firpo eat are astonished at the quantity of meat consumed by the Wild Bull.

I doubt if he holds a better record in that respect than did some Philadelphians who were as eminent in other ways as Firpo in the ring.

Senator Penrose was a prodigious meat eater. I saw him at breakfast devour two eggs, a large broiled fish and a handsome beefsteak, says the Philadelphia Inquirer.

At dinner two ducks were for him not an unusual chase after oysters and fish.

T. De Witt Cuyler matched the senator as a hearty eater. At the Rittenhouse club it was quite the customary thing for him to follow half a dozen oysters with a large fish, an extra big porterhouse steak and top them off with a quail.

John G. Johnson did as well as that and I saw him begin a meal with a dozen big oysters.

Henry F. Walton, former speaker of the Pennsylvania assembly was another famous diner. His physician once ordered him to walk a mile instead of eating lunch.

New Words

According to compilers of a standard dictionary, the general use of the radio since its invention has added 5,000 new words and terms to the English language. Flapperdom has added several hundred more, and the poor compilers were just getting over the shock of having to define 7,000 words and terms which our participation in the unpleasantness in the late world mixup brought to the average vocabulary. Now what to do? We have been informed previously that women talk too much anyway—that "words is what they ain't got nothin' else but"—in the language of a popular writer of negro tales; yet it is proved by this company that less than 25 per cent of the new words discussed have been invented or coined by womenfolk, men having done the dastardly deed!—Kansas City Times.

NERVOUS & HALF-SICK WOMEN

Relieved by taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

These Three Letters Prove It

Lowell, Mass.—"I am sending you a few lines to let you know what good your medicine has done for me. I want you to let every one know that it has helped me in nervous troubles. I have four children and you know there is a lot to do where children are. They would come in from school and they would start telling me about their little troubles but I could not stand it. I had to send them away. I could not even walk on the street alone I was so nervous. I found one of your books and read it and then I saw in the paper about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I got it and had taken one bottle when I saw a change in myself. I was surprised. The children can talk all they want to now and it does not bother me. I am still taking the Vegetable Compound."—Mrs. JOSEPH LEMERE, 34 South Street, Lowell, Mass.

Felt Like A New Woman

Springfield, Missouri.—"For four or five months I was run-down, nervous, my back ached and I did not feel like doing a thing. Sometimes my legs ached and felt like they would break and I had a hurting in my sides. I had been reading in the newspapers the letters of other women who had taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and the advertising of it appealed to me so I bought some and saw results in almost no time. I had hardly been able to do my own work and after taking the Vegetable Compound I felt like a new woman. I recommend it to my friends who have troubles like I did, and hope they will find the same results."—Mrs. M. CARPENTER, 607 W. Chase Street, Springfield, Missouri.

40 Years Old, Feels Like 20

Hagerstown, Md.—"I was very bad off with backache, a bearing-down feeling in my body and a pain in my left side. I could not be on my feet at times and once I was so bad I walked bent over to one side for three weeks. My sister read of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and got me a bottle. I got so much relief that I took more until I was well. I am 40 years old and feel like 20. I am sure this medicine will help all women."—Mrs. MARY E. SANDY, 436 W. Franklin Street, Hagerstown, Md.

Over 100,000 women have so far replied to our question, "Have you received benefit from taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound?" 98 per cent of these replies are "Yes."

That means that 98 out of every 100 women who take this medicine for the ailments for which it is recommended are benefited by it.

All druggists are having increased sales of this medicine.

Prominent People

Roosevelt, a "Chip of the Old Block"

Theodore Roosevelt (portrait herewith), whose campaign for the governorship of New York against "Al" Smith has interested the whole country, is described by his intimates as "a chip of the old block." His career, however, is full of interest, without any reference to that of his father. "Roosevelt's tackling a hard fight," said his supporters at the time of his nomination, "but that's quite in keeping with the Roosevelt tradition. If he wins, he becomes at once a national factor in politics. Even if he loses, he deserves the thanks of his party and will have the approval of his own conscience."

Roosevelt was born at Oyster Bay in 1887; was graduated from Harvard in 1908 and was married in 1910. He was in business till 1919 when he was elected to the New York assembly. In 1921 he was made assistant secretary of the navy.

When the war began he went to Plattsburg. When he sailed for France he was a major; when he returned he was a lieutenant colonel. Much lay between. Late in June, 1918, he was cited for gallantry for keeping his men in the trenches of a difficult sector, standing with them against a rain of shells. He was gassed and for several weeks was incapacitated. He was hardly back with his battalion when he was wounded again, this time in a successful attack to the southwest of Soissons, in which Ploisy was captured. After the armistice Colonel Roosevelt was a leader in the formation of the American Legion.

Colonel Green and His Movie Machine

Experiments demonstrating the practicability of broadcasting motion pictures by wireless have been disclosed by Col. E. H. R. Green of South Dartmouth, Mass. President Samuel W. Stratton of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology attended a test at which a motion picture was transmitted 60 feet by wireless. He was so impressed that he detailed two experts from the institute staff to assist Colonel Green in the perfection of the invention. Marshall said Colonel Green had established the practicability of the device for sending short distances and was confident that in another year he would have a set suitable for general broadcasting of movies.

Thus another of the famous American fortunes is in process of dissipation by its heirs. The great heap of money piled up by the late Hetty Green during a lifetime devoted all but exclusively to the task of accumulating wealth has been attacked, almost on a steam shovel scale, by her son, Edward Howland Robinson Green, who during the past few years is reputed to have spent hundreds of thousands of dollars on what began as a hobby and has become a vocation—the development of the possibilities of radio.

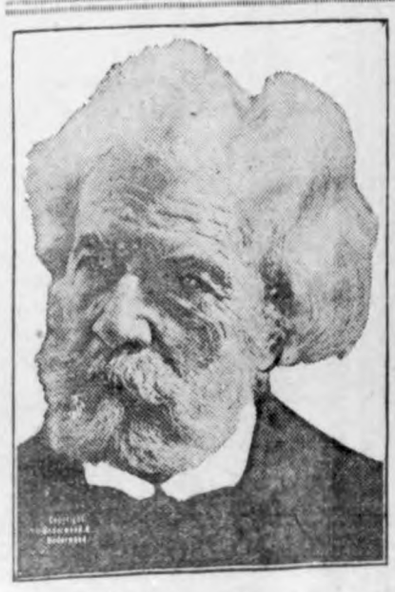
He has the largest private wireless station in the United States, and is now erecting still more buildings for extensive experiments.

Michelson's Experiments With Light

Prof. A. A. Michelson of the University of Chicago, one of the world's most eminent scientists, has announced results of experimentation with the velocity of light conducted by him last summer at Mt. Wilson observatory in California. The outcome, he said, was "very promising." The problem was to reduce uncertainty as to the number of miles light travels in one second of time. Doctor Michelson explained that thus far the average speed given by various methods of measurement was 186,300 miles a second, the uncertainty being a matter of 20 or 30 miles, and the goal a reduction of this uncertainty to one mile. He says the velocity of light is one of the most fundamental of the constants of nature, and this alone would justify the attempt to measure it with the highest possible precision.

Two weeks will be needed by Professors Michelson and Henry G. Gale to test the Einstein theory of relativity by means of their elaborate apparatus which is nearing completion at Clearing, Ill. The apparatus consists of a rectangle of water pipe 1,800 feet long by 1,200 feet wide; an arc light which will flash two beams of light around the pipe in opposite directions; sets of mirrors to relay the light beams around the pipe, and an air pump to create a vacuum in the pipe. If no difference in the time of the rival beams is perceived, it will be apparent that light is not affected by the earth's rotation; or, in other words, that the "ether" rotates with the earth.

Martians Much Happier Than Earthians



Camille Flammarion (portrait herewith), the famous French astronomer, has no doubt that Mars is inhabited. And he's written six books on Mars. He said, the other day: "On Mars, in August, can they know in advance for certain what the weather here will be tomorrow, or next week, or next month? Certainly not. The approach of Mars isn't responsible for our bad weather." Then he became serious and added:

"It's true no great oceans like ours exist in Mars. Theirs are small seas like the Mediterranean and many of them are spotted with dark green, no doubt because of vegetation and marshes, similar to those of the famous Sargasso, where descendants of Columbus lost themselves. As for continents, they are golden and their color changes like flames.

"Martians are much happier than we are and much more intelligent. "Yes, they are superior to us for they would never commit the folly of war. I cannot say when we will be able to communicate with Mars. Maybe they did try at the time of the dinosaur and got tired of it and maybe we shall succeed this year."

Expect to Harness Tides

The force of the ebb and flow of the Atlantic's tide may soon be harnessed to produce electricity, Dexter P. Cooper, brother of Hugh L. Cooper, the hydraulic engineer who designed the hydroelectric plants at Muscle Shoals, Keokuk, and Niagara Falls, Canada, is at present making preliminary surveys along the Maine seacoast with a view to finding generating station sites near Eastport. The average difference between high and low tide at Eastport is 18 feet 2 inches.

The Man Ahead

In almost every paper you are pretty sure to find
A lot of gush and nonsense about the man behind—
The man behind the buzz-saw, the man behind the gun.
The man behind the plowshare, and the man behind the sun;
The man behind the whistle, the man behind the cars,
The man behind the kodak, and the man behind the bars.

The man behind the whiskers, the man behind the fist—
Oh, you read about them often, for they're always on the list.
But there's another fellow of whom nothing has been said,
It's the fellow who is even or a little way ahead;
The man who pays up promptly and whose check is always signed
He's vastly more important than the man who is behind.

For every kind of business, and the whole commercial clan
Is indebted for existance to this honest fellow man.
He keeps us all a-going and his town is never dead,
So we all take our hats off to the man who is ahead.

ELECTRICITY FOR FARM

Frank D. Paine and F. J. Zink in Charge of Garner Project.

Prof. Frank D. Paine, of the electrical engineering department, Iowa State College, and Frank J. Zink, of Ames have been appointed to take charge of Iowa's rural community developement, Garner having been the community chosen for the experiment.

Garner will be a field labrotary used to determine the practical application of electricity to agriculture The terrtory exends 10 miles north of Garner and a mile and one-half south, including all the farmers on a transmission line owned by the farmers themselves. Power is obtainer at wholesale prices from a local power company.

In this experimental field labratory it will be determined to what extent it is advisable and profitable to use electrical power on the farm. The farmers themselves could not afford to try experiments which might prove unprofitable, hence the Iowa State College engineering station will bear the expense, while trying out some new appliances of power on individual farms.

Co-operating with the committee from the college, of which Prof. J. B. Davidson, head of the agricultural deparment, is chairman, is a committee of farmers in the community to look after their interests. Ed. Quintus of Garner is chairman of the Garner Local committee.

FALL PIG IS PROFIT MAKER

Must Be Correctly Handled, Says John M. Evvard, Who is Preparing for Hoo-o-oey Day

The fall pig is a very profitbale pig if he is handled rightly otherwise; he is likely to be a loosing propositiong, says Mr. John M. Evvard, chief in meat production. Iowa State College experiment station, who is now collecting data to be given swine feeders on Swine Feeders Hoo-o-oey Day!, November 21.

It is very easy to make a mistake in fall pig production and one little mistake may change prospective pro fits into sure losses. For a number of years experimental fall pigs at the Iowa station have reached the weights of 225 to 300 pounds by March and April, at which time they enjoy the highest markets of the year. Such pigs have made 100 pounds of gain at the cost of 425 of feed, and some of the better groups have made the riffle on 375 piunds. Many a fall pig however takes 500 to 600 pounds of feed for 100 pounds of gain, and when this is the case there usually is a heavy percentage of loss.

To make these good gains with a minimum of feed it is essential that they should weigh at least 40 pounds by the time the cold weather of December strikes. They will not make this weight if they are given just corn on grass. Hence it is necessary to feed liberally of balancing materials. An economical plan is to self-feed tankage in one feeder, a good mineral mixture in another, and give the pigs all the new ear corn they will take three times daily. A good mineral mixture may be made up of salt 20 parts, limestone 40 parts, a good bonemeal or spent boneblack 40 parts, and potassium iodide one-fiftieth part all by weight If milk is allowed, the pigs will usually gain faster and they will let up on tankage. The fall pig should have from one-half to one-third pound of tankage daily, to balance the corn the lesser amount being fed in the latter part of the period as they approach market weights. Skimmilk allowance, if tankage is not available, should run from 7 to about 10 pounds a day.

Some serious mistakes which will ruin fall pig profits are, to house them uncomfortably, to let them lie in wet beds, to make the range too large, to have their feeding quarters out in the open where is is too uncomfortable for the pigs to eat their fill, to allow the freezing weather to interfere with their water supply, to let lice get a start, to permit mange to get a foothold, to let the round worms go unmolested, not to feed enough of the right kind of feed, to house too many in limited quarter, to make bunches fed together too large so that they will pile up and to use the wrong type of pigs, the chuffy sort that does not gain.

VENTILATION DEMONSTRATION

Mr. A. W. Clyde of the Extension Service will be in Hancock county Tuesday and Wednesday, November 11th and 12th, to conduct two ventilation demonstrations. Mr. Clyde will install a system in a hog house at each demonstration. He will take up a throrough discussion as to the methods of ventilation in different buildings. The forenoon will be given over to actually putting in the ventilation system and have them ready to show to the people who come to the meetings in the afternoon. These systems will be simple enough so that anyone can build them after having seen the demonstration.

The work will be done on Tuesday November 11th, at the Earl Ruka farm west of Goodell, and on Wednesday, November 12th, at the A. E. Boman farm in Ellington township. The meetings will be held at 2:00 p. m. each day.

PEOPLE MAY VOTE ON BOND ISSUE FOR ROADS

Will Make it Possible to Improve Primary Roads in Six Years

Des Moines, Ia., Nov. 5:— Col. Glen C. Haynes, Executive Secretary of the Iowa Good Roads Association. today outlined the procedure required by law for the issuance of $85,000,000 in serial bands, as proposed by his organization for the improvement of the state's primary road system.

The 41st General Assembly, at its session this winter, will be asked to authorize a vote by the people of the state on the bond proposiion. The Legislature itself has no power to vote a bond issue.

If the Legislature acts favorably, the bond issue will be submitted to the people for approval at the general election in November, 1926, as required by law. If indorsed by a majority of the electorate at that time, the bonds then will be issued. but only as funds are needed for road improvement work.

"Since the Legislature in no way obligates itself, we are confident that our Representatives and Senators will vote to submit he bond issue proposal o the people of the state for their decision," Col Haynes said.

"Given two years to study and analyze our road's problems and its effects upon the welfare and prosperity of the state, we are equally confident that the people will approve the bond issue at the general elecion in November 1926',' he added.

With an issue of bonds, it will be possible to pave, gravel and improve the state's primary roads in six years, Col. Haynes pointed out, whereas it will take fourteen years to complete this work under the "pay-as-you-go" program. This saving of eight years in time will insure a saving of $200.000,000 to thepeople of the state, since it is estimated that unnecessary wear and tear in operating motor vehicles over the present unimproved roads costs each owner of an automobile from $40 to $100 every year, anda s there are almost 600.000 motor vehicles in Iowa, it is easy to fiiure out the total cost per year.

Under the plan of the Iowa Good Roads Association, our primary and secondary roads can be improved withut adding a cent to personal or real property taxation.

A fund of approximately $11,500 000 a year for improvement of primary roads would be secured from automobile license fees, yielding $8,000,000 a year: federal aid, yield ing $2.000,000 a year; and one-third of a proposed gasoline tax of two cents a gallon, yielding $3.000 000 a year, would be used for the improvement of secondary, or county roads.

With income of 11,500,000 annually for the primary road fund, it would be possible to retire the 85,-000,000 bond issue in fifteen years, wthout adding to general taxation. Co. Haynes pointed out.

If the bond issue is approved by the people and bonds are retired in equal annual installments. it will require approximately $7,750,000 to pay the principal and interest each year; and $3,000,000 for maintenance of the primary road system. With these amounts deducted, there would still be an estimated annual excess of receipts over expenditures in the primary road fund of more than $700,000.

"When the people of Iowa have all the facts in hand, we believe they will agree with us that it is economically wise to anticipate our income for road improvement and issue bonds. so that we may secure a modern state-wide and farm to market system of improved highways in six years. instead of waiting fourteen years to complete this work," Col. Haynes declared.

A few years ago manual training schools were an innovation even in the most progressive cities. "Today," says Good Hardware, "they are to be found even in the smaller schools in the outlying districts. For several years schools of this type have been developing in the youth of our land a knowledge of small cabinetwork and the use of tools."

Thousands of women have kidney and bladder trouble and never suspect it.

Women's complaints often prove to be nothing else but kidney trouble, or the result of kidney or bladder disease.

If the kidneys are not in a healthy condition they may cause the other organs to become diseased.

Pain in the back, headache, loss of ambition, nervousness are oftentimes symptoms of kidney trouble.

Don't delay starting treatment. Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, a physician's prescription, obtained at any drug store, may be just the remedy needed to overcome such conditions.

Get a medium or large size bottle immediately from any drug store.

However, if you wish first to test this great preparation, send ten cents to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., for a sample bottle. When writing, be sure and mention this paper.—Advertisement.

MEN SHANGHAIED BY RUM SKIPPER

Coast Guard Cutter Rescues Starving Crew, Confiscates Cargo of Brandy.

New York.—Four starving sailors, who said they had been shanghaied into the Rum row service, compelled a reluctant skipper to surrender to the coast guard cutter Gresham the natty two-master Dorothy M. Smart of Newfoundland and her cargo of brandy.

Michael Gillan of Halifax was the skipper. His crew was Louis Coccini, mate, and Albert Edouard Burgomaster, cook, both of New York, and Henry A. Gillis of Perth Amboy, N. J., and Carl Jaeger of Boston, seamen.

Scouting between the rum fleet and shore, the Gresham's searchlights during the night picked out the glimmering toplights of a craft that seemed abandoned.

A British ensign hung upside down from a lanyard—the sign of distress. Under it were strung corroborative signs—shirts and blankets, shredded and frayed.

The Gresham hailed the little two-master and four despairing sailors answered. They announced that they were prisoners aboard; that they had been without food and water for several days; that their skipper refused to put them ashore. They pleaded to Capt. Ben Brockaway of the Gresham to heave them a line, tow them inside the three-mile limit, take possession of the Dorothy M. Smart, and feed and water her crew.

Captain Brockaway consented and the cutter and its prize arrived at the battery where it was boarded by agents of the Department of Justice, who seized the twenty barrels of brandy in the vessel's hold, and began an investigation of the shanghai story.

"We shipped out of New York 23 days ago," was Mate Coccini's tale. "We were told we were signed up for the brick carrier Enterprise, sailing between New York and Cape May. They took us out at night in a speedboat, and when we woke up next morning we were in the Dorothy M. Smart, surrounded by casks of rum and in the midst of the rum fleet."

Orders to hoist sail for a voyage to Halifax the sailors countered with a demand that they be set ashore at once, they said. The skipper refused, and so they drifted about for 22 days. The anchor was lost and a week ago the food and water ran out, and distress signals were run up.

Tientsin, China.—Foreign troops are guarding Tientsin from an influx of wounded Chinese soldiers, formerly member of Wu Pei Fu's central government armies. Two shiploads of the men arrived and moored their craft on the river bank adjoining the old Russian concession.

A Japanese destroyer was sent down the river to intercept them. British troops patroled the Russian waterfront, while the American troops took charge of the opposite bank of the river in the former German concession to prevent any attempted crossing.

Wu Pei Fu, who is preparing for military action to regain his position as military dictator of the central government at Peking, issued a formal order directing the Bank of China to pay all salt revenues to him personally, instead of to foreign banks, in accordance with the terms of the reorganization loan agreement.

PERMANENT WORLD PEACE, CHIEF AIM

With three Americans holding the highest honors, the Interallied War Veterans' association is ready this year to launch a big program to make itself felt in all international movements seeking permanent world peace.

Thomas W. Miller, former alien property custodian, is president; Roy Hoffman of Oklahoma, is American vice president, and Mrs. Lowell F. Hobart is first women's organizer of the association auxiliary. Including the newly armed auxiliary, the Fidac, as it is called, embraces a membership of 15,000,000 ex-service men and women of the world, and what they do or say this year will have reactions in all the capitals of the civilized world.

The first achievement of record is the announcement by the League of Nations that a section has been reserved for ex-service men. While not permitted to vote in the league's councils this section will be consulted in veteran questions and on matters of world peace. What it actually means is that next June when the disarmament conference is held at Geneva, Switzerland, the World war veterans will be represented and their influence felt.

Arrangements for a periodical publication, creation of a propaganda bureau and insistence that the international president visit all the member countries at least once during his regime were other questions settled at the recent fifth annual congress held in London.

The member countries include France, Great Britain, Belgium, Italy, Poland, Czechoslovakia, Yugo-Slavia, United States, Rumania.

The one ideal of the Fidac is the bringing about of permanent world peace.

Its members having felt war, Colonel Miller, the president, said it has no intention of allowing questions affecting international amity to be discussed without the representation of the veterans. President Miller plans to make extensive speaking tours in member nations and, in a word, concretely express the policies laid down at the last congress. He plans to sail for Europe in December to remain for the remainder of his administration.

Has Seventeen Members —Population Only Ten

There's an American Legion post at Bull Head, S. D., "Barney Brought" post, with a genealogy longer than a giraffe's neck. And speaking of necks, the forebears of members of the post have been cavorting around this neck o' the woods, lo, these past five centuries and more. They're all full-blooded Sioux Indians, all 17 of them. Twelve of the 17 braves fought overseas in the World war, where they proved that the term "brave," as applied to men of their blood, is no misnomer, for several of them were cited for gallantry in action.

The fourth dimension, perpetual motion, the music of the spheres had not been solved at this writing, but members of Barney Brought post had solved an equally puzzling phenomenon in that they have pushed the membership of the post to 17, although the total population of Bull Head is ten persons. The mystic necromancy of their forefathers is not responsible for the seemingly impossible in this case, but rather the hard-riding expeditions far into the brush country which have yielded the members above par in membership.

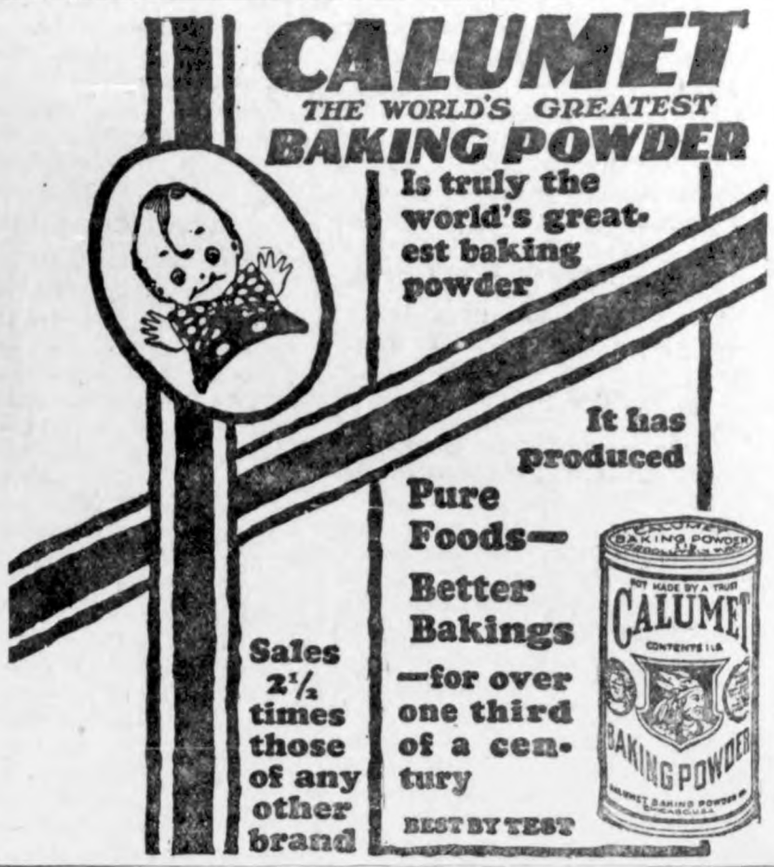
Thomas C. Necklace, a member of the post, was recently elected department historian, and when he isn't busy with the official duties of his office whiles away the leisure hours with Virgil, Shakespeare and Darwin; he is a Carlisle graduate.

Slow in Filing Claims for Government Bonus

According to information furnished American Legion officials by Maj. Gen. Robert G. Davis, adjutant general of the army and in charge of the machinery of handling the federal bonus claims, only 1,300,000 applications out of a possible 4,500,000 had been received up to October 1, 1924. Of the applications received 850,000 had been examined and about 400,000 passed and certificates for the amounts due forwarded to the Veterans' bureau, which will make payments or otherwise compensate as the law provides. General Davis declared in regard to the apathetic attitude displayed by veterans in filing their applications: "It is imperative from the standpoint of economy in administration that those veterans who intend to avail themselves eventually of the benefits conferred by the Adjusted Compensation act should make their application now."

Service Men May Obtain "Northwest Angle" Land

According to advices sent from the United States land office to the state department of the American Legion of Minnesota, the "Northwest Angle," that section of Minnesota that juts up north from the international boundary in the Lake of the Woods region, is to be settled soon. The land office has asked the Legion to call attention to preferential rights of service men in filing on the land. Service men with the colors 19 months can prove up with seven months' residence, whereas those with no military record must live on the land three years. The "Northwest Angle" consists largely of timber land, some of which is said to have considerable value. Filings are made at the United States land office, Crookston, Minn.



Three Cents' Worth

At the Faculty club at Indiana university a few nights ago the older professors were discussing how they saved the pennies when they were young professors. The story that took the prize was told by the head of a department. He said he ordered three cents' worth of meat from the butcher for his cat. The meat was delivered at his house, but before it came the cat had caught a mouse, so the professor called the butcher and asked whether he would come and get the meat and take it back—refunding, of course, the amount paid for it.

It was reported that the butcher took the meat back.—Indianapolis News.

LATEST ENSEMBLE COSTUME; TRIM AND SERVICEABLE

ACCORDING to eye-witnesses of the mode in all fashion centers the ensemble costume is the most important new feature in modes for fall and winter. It entered the company of formal suits and costumes in Paris and New York almost simultaneously and in no time became the dominant style note among them. It is developed as a one-piece frock with long coat to match or as skirt and overblouse, with long coat, and the coats with these suits are expected to do extra and separate service.

Fur fabrics prove themselves especially well adapted to dignified ensemble suits, with caracul and broadtail, in black and dark brown, the favorites. They provide the coat, which is generally collared with genuine fur, and make bands for adorning the one-piece dress, which is usually of crepe de chine, georgette or corded silk. Coats of these fur fabrics are very rich and just as durable and are interlined to make them warm. They may be worn with anything.

Suede de laine, fawn skin, suede velours and other new wool materials give variety to the ensemble suit and while black and dark brown are very handsome in them, other colors look just as well. They are shown in oxford and mole gray, green and bronze tones.

But, of course, in these frivolous days the ensemble suit could not stand her slenderness. Note that the up-to-date young lady wearing it arranges her long strand of pearls a la mode, first around her throat and then knotted at the front.

When the younger set is all dressed up it finds itself in frocks and coats that reflect the fashions of grownups, but styles are modified and delightfully adapted to little wearers. For them there is greater freedom in the use of high colors. It appears that the more diminutive the garment, the more vivid the cloth that makes it or the touches of color that brighten it.

New Version of Ensemble Costume.

The charm of coats and frocks for the younger generation is sufficient to make one envious, but "trim and serviceable" are the words that spell success in their everyday, workaday clothes. There is a wide range of popular woolen frocks that are pretty and interesting, as well as "trim and serviceable," and the same is true of coats. For frocks, crepe, flannel, serge, twills, tweeds and velveteen are among the important fabrics that furnish plenty of variety. The favored colors are brown, blue, henna, tan and green. Pipings in high colors and bright buttons share popularity with applique and embroidery for trimmings.

In coats many sports materials are used; also new suede-finished fabrics, bolivia, chinchilla and flamingo cloth. A typical coat of the last mentioned fabric is shown in the picture, in tan, with three decorative buttons serving to fasten it. Many little girls' coats have fur collars and trimmings similar to those on grownup models, and many of them are double-breasted. Rabbit fur, dyed to match, is much used in the basket-weave coats in fur colors, and sometimes embroidery in several colors gives them a lively touch.

Mines Given Odd Names

Speaking of queer mine names, writes a correspondent of Coal Age, I recall those of two little mines that were operated a few years ago when I was district mine inspector, which I believe will compete favorably with the "Struggling Monkey" mine, mentioned in Coal Age; or the "Toadvine," or "Who'd 'a Thought," and are entitled to a place in the front ranks of the list of queer mine names. The first is a little mine operated by the Dayton Coal and Iron company on its branch line two miles north of Dayton. It was called the "Tickly Gizzard" mine. Another little mine, located in Scott county and operated by the Paint Rock Coal company, went under the name of the "Possum Jaw" mine.

Sulphur Stone

Sandstone is of little value as a building material, as it will not stand pressure in excess of some 8,000 pounds per square inch. Recent experiments by the United States board of standards indicate a cheap method of making sandstone as strong as granite. The stone is cut, then soaked in melted sulphur for several hours. The sulphur permeates the structure and, when cold, blocks will stand a pressure of 30,000 pounds compression. Tests for weathering qualities are still in progress, but initial results are reported to be extremely favorable.—Exchange.

CRIBBING SOFT CORN

Ventilation is One of Biggest Problems in Storing

Much soft corn can be cribbed if special precautions are taken to sort out the poorest ears, to husk the corn clean, to provide the crib with special ventilators and to salt the corn.

A type of ventilator that is recommended by the extension service Iowa State College, may be constructed in an "A" shape, 18 to 30 inches wide at the base and about five to six feet high, using two by fours for frame work and one by fours for sides. These ventilators can be made in sections and should be placed end to end along the middle of the entire length of the crib. The ends should be left open to allow free circulation of air and to permit use of artificial heat by means of a blower arrangement, if such treatment is necessary.

The cost of drying corn artificially will vary with the amount of moisture in the grain aa the start and the weather, but may be estimated to range from to to five or six cents per bushel. Salting will retard heating and molding while the corn is drying and should be applied at the rate of 30 pounds salt for each 40 bushel load of soft corn.

IOWA IS A GOOD PLACE TO MARRY A FARM

If you want to "marry a farm" Iowa offers splendid opportunities. In five of the North Central states, including Iowa an average of 8.4 per cent of the farm owners have acquired their lands by matrimony, according to an agricultural foundation, based on a survey made by the United States department ofArgiculture.

Minnesota is one of the other four states in the "Farm by Marriage." group that should prove good hunting grounds for the land-eyed suittor. In these four states 8.4 per cent of the land holders married a farm. Over six per cent of the plain smen of Texas acquired their lands by marriage, while in Kentucky and Tennessee, of the 845 farmers interviewed, 5.9 had taken a farm with a wife.

For the United States as a whole 79 per cent of the farm acreage was acquired by the owners by purchase 15.3 per cent by inheritance, 3.3 per cent by marriage, and 2.4 per cent in other ways, principally by homesteading. These percentages vary according to the location and type of farming.

As might be expected in an old state like Massachuetts, a high percentage of the farms were acquired by inheritances. Among the 710 transfers examined in that state 22.8 per cent represented inheritance. In Texas among the 169 owners interviewed, the majority of farmers buy their land, only 5.7 per cent acquiring their farms by inheritance. In the five north central states 64.5 per cent of the farmers purchased their land.

Western Nebraska still has many farms occupied by the original homesteaders. Approximately 19 per cent of the farmer owners in one section of western Nebraska where these figures were gathered, stated that they were the original homesteaders.

On the 845 farms examined in Kentucky and Tennessee involving a total of 71,,495 acres, 81.2 per cent of the farmers had purchased outright, 12.3 per cent has acquired possession by inheritance, less than one per cent by gift and none by homesteading.

The 2,051 farms surveyed in Wisconsin showed 80.6 per cent acquired by purchase, 9 per cent by inheritance, 3.4 per cent by gift, 1.4 per cent by marriage and 5.5 per cent in other ways mainly by homesteading.

IOWA IS BEST STATE, DOCTOR FRANK CRANE SAYS

If Congress were to offer me my choice of any state in the Union as a reward for my worth and modesty' I would say unhesitatingly, "Give me Iowa!"

Because Iowa is the most American state in the nation.

There are few millionaires, few paupers. No scum. no dregs, to speak of. They are just plain United States folks.

Iowa buys more first class reading matter than any state except New York|

Every ten miles or so in Iowa there is a chautauqua in the summer time And where you find a chautauqua you find the people of the western world at their best.

If any foreigner wants to see what a real genuine. dyed in the wool United Stateser is, let him attend a chautauqua.

Iowa is the New New England. New England is not New England any more. It is swamped, dlluted and washed out by immigrants.

There is about as much of the old Mayflower stock left in Massachuetts as there is old colonial furniture in Nantucket.

Boston is Irish, Worcester is Swedish and Lowell is a little of everything.

Iowa is where New Englanders that had snap have gone to.

"That the farms of Iowa are worth more than the farms of Maine New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachuetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland West Virginia South Carolina, Florida, Albama, Arizona Utah, Nevada, New Mexico and Wyoming combined.

"The increase in the value of Iowa Farm land in the last ten years is greater than the increase in value of all the farm land in Montana, Idaho Wyoming, Colorado, New Mexico Arizona Utah, Nevada, Arkansas Louisiana, and Oregon.

"The Iowa corn crop is greater in value than the wheat crop of Canada or Argentina.

"The annual corn crop of Iowa is worth more than the annual yield of either iron ore, anthracite, or of the products of all the gold, silver or copper mines of the United States.

WEEK OF SUNDAYS

Most people know that the original Sabbah day of the Fifth Commandment corresponds to our Saturday, the seventh day of the week. The early Christians, however, made the following day the sacred day of the week, calling it the Lord's day because it was on the morning after the Jewish Sabbath that Christ rose from the dead.

It is a curious fact that there is quite an important "Sunday" so to speak, for every day in the week. In addition to the two mentioned already Monday, is the Greek Sabbath Tuesday the Persian, Wednesday the Assyrian, Thursday the Egyptian and Friday the Turkish.

One way to help people is to refrain from giving them advice.

CLEAN GROUND FOR SWINE

Shelby County Farmer Finds it Pays Big Dividends

Healthy pigs are much more likely to be produced on clean ground than in an old swine feed lot, where in reside the germs, filth and parasites of many preceding generations of pigs. At least Otta Schouboe, of Harlan, Iowa, believes after trying out the plan last spring. Hog raises of Shelby county gathered on Mr Schouboe's farm for a field day, October 21 to witness the results.

Last spring Mr. Schouboe took 11 Chester White sows one-half mile from the old feed ground, to 40 acres of clean alfalfa pasture. He also moved out several small hog houses. From these 11 sows he raised 83 pigs that weighed on an average of 240 pounds, all of them healthy and free from worms. In addition to alfalfa he fed corn and one-fourth pound of tankage daily.

On the old ground Mr. Schouboe left 16 sows and gave them the same attention. He had only 65 pigs averaging 120 pounds to show his neighbors. These pigs were diseased and had to be wormed. That was enough for him. Next year he is fencing off 11 acres to raise all of his pigs on this clean fresh land.

PLYMOUTH HOME OF COOLIDGE TO BE A MEMORIAL

Exhibit Sponsored by President's Home-Town Club Depicts Simple Life of His Family.

WILL BE OPEN TO VISITING PUBLIC

Eloquent Testimonial of Toil of Forefathers Born and Raised in Green Mountains.

By FORREST CRISSEY

Plymouth, Vt.—The old wood-colored Coolidge house on the edge of this village is to become a permanent and public exhibit of Green mountain home life as lived by generations of sturdy Vermonters since the Revolutionary war.

Primarily this is a part of the activities of the unique Home Town Coolidge club, although the articles of incorporation today made public are in the name of the Plymouth Home, Incorporated.

"This step has been taken," declares John G. Sargent, former attorney general of Vermont, who has handled this matter for his Plymouth and Ludlow neighbors, "because it happens that in the attic and chambers of this old house a collection of the implements of family existence used by earlier generations of Green mountain men and women more complete than is to be found anywhere else in Vermont has lately been discovered.

"I cannot deny that, at bottom, this step is an expression of the affection in which his own people hold President Coolidge, his father and all his forebears. But I do deny that it involves anything like an attempt to set up a Coolidge memorial or any assumption that the house and its fine old treasures derive their historic value from the fact that they have been in the Coolidge family for four or five generations.

Open to Public.

"This old home is to be opened to the visiting public not as a Coolidge exhibit but as an exhibit of a typical Green mountain home, with all its simple furnishings and equipment intact and in the places which they occupied a hundred years ago.

"No man who is not a native of Plymouth and has not had years of intimate acquaintance with the Coolidge family can understand how impossible it would have been to obtain the old house and its treasures for public use upon the presumption that the Coolidge ownership affords the basis of the historic value and interest of this exhibit. The Coolidges are temperamentally debarred from entertaining any such presumption for an instant; it would be abhorrent to them and any assumption of this sort would have put a quick and summary end to all negotiations."

Quite another consideration undoubtedly had its influence in making it possible for the Home-Town Coolidge club to obtain the ancient house and its store of priceless treasures dating back to Colonial days. This is the affection of President Coolidge for the place of his birth. His most intimate friend lately told me:

"I have never known any man who had as deep and profound an attachment for the place of his birth, for the locality in which he spent his childhood and youth, as Calvin Coolidge has for Plymouth. And that attachment is not alone for the place but for its people. It extends outside of his immediate family and embraces the population of Plymouth as a whole. Probably there are many men and women with whom this attachment is equally strong—but I have never known such. Certainly this is one of the strongest feelings that the President has: he is devoted to Plymouth and its people.

"He feels, very profoundly, that his old neighbors and friends understand him—and that means much to a man of his pronounced modesty and reticence.

"Anything which is calculated to make their lives more interesting, comfortable and pleasant has a peculiar appeal to him. Anything, too, which tends to bring a wider appreciation of the beauties and charms of Plymouth and a broader appreciation and understanding of its people enlists his instant attention and interest.

Lesson in Industry.

"Put it this way: The Green mountains, their people and their history are dear to him and the thought that the traveling public might be able to see in Plymouth a typical Green mountain home, as it existed a century ago, with its visual lessons of industry and economic self-reliance, is naturally gratifying to him—wholly irrespective of the fact that the home in question happened to be that of his own forebears. That Plymouth should have the attraction, in the eyes of the world of tourists, of a representative Green mountain home of the early part of the last century is bound to be a substantial pleasure to the President.

"He is always eager to hear anything relating to Plymouth or the Green mountains and he is jealous of the reputation of his native state in every respect. There is no quick or surer way to 'get a rise' from President Coolidge than to assume that Vermont soil is unproductive or its roads poor. He knows that its average yield per acre of corn, hay and potatoes place it well at the top in the entire list of states and he has a keen pride in the splendid system of highly improved roads which overspread Vermont."

The house which is soon to pass into the hands of the corporation created by the Home-Town Coolidge club was begun by Capt. John Coolidge, whose military title was secured in service in the Revolutionary war and who died in 1822. For its day and situation it was a large house and its building was a serious undertaking, particularly when the actual work of construction was almost entirely done by himself and his son, Calvin—the great-grandfather of the President, whose grandfather and father were born under its roof.

Those who visit this home restored to its original order and appearance, cannot fail to draw from its furnishings and equipment a better understanding of Calvin Coolidge, President of the United States, than could be obtained from any other source. Almost every article in the collection of Coolidge heirlooms is eloquent of the toil which every member of the family contributed to the making and maintenance of the home. Collectively they tell the story of four generations of a family which depended almost exclusively upon its own labor for the necessities of life—food, clothing and shelter.

Everything Home Made.

Even most of the tools used in the labors of the kitchen, the dairy, the sugar bush and the fields were themselves "home made." The loom upon which the family cloth was woven, the "horse" upon which the shingles of the house were shaved, the "jointer" upon which boards were planed and the staves of sap buckets, tubs and barrels were "edged," the ancient "cradle" with which the grain was harvested—all these and many other implements were made in the home. Even the shapely ladder-back chairs and other articles of furniture were homemade and Coolidge-made.

"Even in my day," declares Col. John Coolidge, "about the only article of common use which we did not make ourselves were our boots—and those were made in the home by an itinerant shoemaker who paid us an annual visit and set up his shop in a corner of the kitchen. And the hides from which he made our boots and shoes were taken from our own cattle. Plymouth had a tannery at an early date, so my great grandfather and grandfather were saved the unpleasant task of doing their own tanning—but I have little doubt that they would have done it if it had been an advantage in family economy to do so. Those visits of the wandering 'cobbler' were great occasions—social events, in fact.

"We raised our own sheep and grew our own flax—and from these came all the cloth, of every kind, used in the family."

The Home-Town Coolidge club is a unique institution. It closes the campaign with more than 14,000 members. Every state and territory of the United States is represented in its membership—a considerable number of members living in Alaska and Porto Rico.

It has, through its membership fees, collected about $15,000. These funds have been largely expended in printing and mailing carefully prepared campaign literature to help in the election of President Coolidge. Among the officials of this organization are some of the ablest men and political leaders of Vermont.

While the Home Town Coolidge club has done novel and notable work as a Republican campaign organization, both in the enrollment of visitors at Plymouth and in sending its caravan across the country as a testimonial to the affection in which Calvin Coolidge is held by his own "home folks," its action in taking the required legal and financial steps to make "The Plymouth Home" a permanent public attraction to this quaint Green mountain village is a distinct achievement for which thousands of tourists will be grateful in years to come.

The home itself and the treasures which it contains tell in the most vivid and graphic manner the conditions which have shaped the character and the destiny of Calvin Coolidge. They depict the industry, the frugality and the self-reliance which surrounded him in his boyhood and was his by inheritance from a line of hard-working, self-reliant and self-respecting ancestors.

This Green mountain home will help every visitor to understand the simiplicity, the earnestness, the honesty, the courage and the directness of the President's character—all those qualities which are suggested by the term "rugged virtues." Even the physical externals of this home breathe an atmosphere of stalwart honesty and rugged virtue, of useful living and straight thinking, of unflagging industry and intense practicality.

There will be only one "Story book" in this representative Green mountain home. When Col. John Coolidge was visited by his nephew, the young guest inquired:

"Uncle John; got a good story book about the house?"

"Yes," was the terse answer of the President's father, who straightway handed his young guest the family Bible.

HUMAN LIFE IS CHEAP

Since the beginning of history human life has been held more cheaply than any other thing in the world. It is so held today.

A large percentage of the human race has always met death through the criminality ignorance or careless ness of fellow men.

Could the minds of men be directed to the preservation of human life, what a difference it would make! No more wars no more murders, no more preventable deaths through automobile accidents, no more lives lost in fires started through carelessness—how changed would be the front pages of our daily newspaprs!

To mention only three cause of violent death, the best authorities estimate that in the United Statts each year 10,000 are murdered, 15,000 are killed in auomibile accidents and 15,000 are burned to death.

The total number of persons killed in accidents now reaches more than 75,000 a year.

While giving attention to a multitude of other reforms and isms, would it not be well to devote more serious thot and action towards erducing this appalling and unnecessary waste of human life?

FOREIGN RELIEF POLICY TO STAND

President in Address at Washington Says "Aid Europe to Aid Herself."

Washington.—"The hope and aim of America is to help Europe to help itself," President Coolidge declared in an address devoted to international relations at a Golden Rule dinner of the Near East Relief association.

Speaking before an audience which included many members of the diplomatic corps, Mr. Coolidge outlined at some length the attitude of the Washington government in foreign affairs, which he declared followed the Golden Rule.

"Europe does not want our benevolence," the President said. "It does want our help, and we are ready to give it. America wants the peace of good will and of the Golden Rule, not the peace of force imposed by those who have power. It wants peace as the normal, the right, the assured estate in a world from which a wiser generation shall have forever outlawed aggressive war."

Recalling that this country had expended millions in charitable relief, Mr. Coolidge called attention that it also had extended to other governments loans and credits "which they are beginning to repay." There is a "moral obligation" to make such repayments, he added.

The President took occasion also to restate that while this government had given its "general approbation" to numerous loans made by its private citizens in aiding the refinancing of European countries, the loans were made "without the assumption of any obligation whatever by our government."

American relief during the famine periods in Russia had prevented, he declared, the spread of bolshevism over a large proportion of Europe. But for this relief, he added, civilization, "which has been set back a generation in Russia, would have had the same setback over a half score of other countries. Peace would have been impossible."

"We disapprove of the Russian government," he declared, "but America has held humanity higher than international laws."

"We might have taken the attitude," he continued, "that we had completed our obligation to Europe the day the armistice was signed. But the object of America in the war was greater than military victory. It was the maintenance of human institutions, reestablishment of orderly government, and preservation of civilization itself in Europe.

"America is profoundly concerned in behalf of whatever promises to make the world a better neighborhood and its peoples better neighbors. We have no better wish than to be good and helpful neighbors with all."

Frank Chance's Estate Estimated at $300,000

Los Angeles, Cal.—The estate of the late Frank Chance amounted to $300,000, according to Karl Pancake, brother-in-law of the dead baseball leader.

Chance's will, leaving $40,000 in various stocks to Mrs. Edith Chance as administratrix, was admitted to probate. Pancake explained that the St. Maxon apartment building in Los Angeles, a $15,000 mortgage on a business block in Glendora, Cal.; cash lots in California, and some Chicago real estate, were worth considerably more than $200,900, and all went to Mrs. Chance. This property and other holdings had been made over to Mrs. Chance prior to Frank's death.

Coming from the room at the naval hospital where the secretary is suffering from complications resulting from an operation performed for the removal of his appendix and gall bladder, Dr. Joel T. Boone, one of the White House physicians in attendance, in making this announcement added that he believed there were "certain reasons for encouragement."

MEXICAN CONSULATES CLOSED IN BRITAIN

Severs All Commercial Relations to England.

Mexico City.—The most transcendental step in Mexicon diplomacy was taken when the foreign affairs department ordered the closing of the Mexican consulates in London, Liverpool, and Glasgow, as well as all the honorary consular offices throughout Great Britain. This step means the complete suppression of commercial relations with Great Britain.

"The decision to recall the Mexican consuls in Great Britain," said Foreign Minister Saenz, "does not imply a desire on the part of Mexico to show hostility toward Great Britain, but obeys sentiment and decorum, we believing it is unworthy of us to maintain consular representatives under a government which does not concede Mexico the honor of maintaining official relations, thus implying that it does not consider Mexico has the moral and legal capacity inherent to sovereign countries."

According to Senor Saenz, British consuls in Mexico will continue to have the same guarantees as heretofore, should Great Britain not recall them.

JEALOUS SPOUSE SHOOTS EMERY

Ex-Legion Chief Wounded by Husband of His Stenographer.

Grand Rapids, Mich.—With the words: "You broke up my home," on his lips, Chedell Simpson, forty-four years old, fired a bullet into the left shoulder of Col. John G. Emery, veteran of Cantigny, the Argonne and St. Mihiel and former national commander of the American legion. The shooting was in Emery's real estate office, where Simpson's twenty-six-year-old wife is employed as a stenographer.

Colonel Emery is at a local hospital recuperating from his wound and Simpson, against whom Mrs. Simpson recently filed suit for divorce, is in a cell charged with assault with intent to kill.

Colonel Emery, who is forty-three years old and married, could give no reason why Simpson singled him out as the cause of his domestic troubles.

"Mrs. Simpson had told me she had filed suit for divorce," Colonel Emery said. "This morning she came to me and said her husband had come to the office again in a very intoxicated condition and that she was afraid of him.

"I walked into the outer office where Simpson stood and asked him what he wanted. When I refused to permit him to enter my private office, where Mrs. Simpson had remained, he pulled a gun, leveled it at me and shouted: 'You're a dirty dog, and everybody knows it. You're trying to break up my home!'"

Simpson, according to Emery's story, fired two shots, the first hitting Emery in the left arm and plowing through the flesh to the shoulder, where it stopped. The second shot went wild. Other persons in the office grabbed Simpson then as he aimed at Emery's heart.

Cruelty and nonsupport are charged against Simpson by his wife in her divorce bill.

Colonel Emery served as legion commander less than a year, assuming office shortly after Colonel Galbraith was killed in an automobile accident. He has been active for several years in local welfare and civic affairs and upon terminating his services as legion commander he ran for the Republican United States senatorial nomination, but was defeated.

Civil War in China Ends With Capture of Peking

Mukden, Manchuria.—Ending of the war with the Chinese central government was officially announced in a communique issued at the headquarters of Chang Tso Lin here.

Cutting of the Chihli line, preventing moving of supplies, left no alternative for the trapped troops but surrender, the communique asserted. Wu Pei-Fu, it was said, followed the only available course, escaping by ocean with 10,000 troops—all the available ships would accommodate—and setting his course for Tsingtao, Shantung province.

Publication was made of a circular from Gen. Feng Yu-hsiang, in which he announced that he was co-operating with Fengtien (Mukden) in the restoration to China of order and peace.

Fall, was in the possession of Frank J. Hogan, Doheny's counsel.

When they were called to the stand, both E. L. Doheny, Sr., and Jr., refused to testify on the grounds that they might give evidence that would be used against them in the trial pending, following their indictment in Washington.

It is remarkable how many cases have been reported similar to this one. Many mothers are left in a weakened and run-down condition after child-birth, and for such mothers the care of the baby is well-nigh impossible. Not only is it hard for the mother, but the child itself will indirectly suffer.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is an excellent tonic for the mother both before and after child-birth. It is prepared from medicinal roots and herbs, and does not contain any harmful drugs. It can be taken in safety by nursing mothers.

The girl, however, had not much time for solitary reflections. Though the first on deck, she did not long remain so. Very soon the other passengers began to straggle up. First came Lord George, then Harry and Akin, Miss Denslow, and last of all, Mrs. Archman, whom the comparative quiet of the bay had partly restored to health. All gathered in a group and chattered excitedly, without getting anywhere, until Captain Bunker came up and gave direction to the conversation.

"My orders directed me to come to this bay," he said, in reply to numerous questions as to what he was going to do, "to the northeast corner of that island yonder. As you can see, we are not yet at the northeast corner, but are about the middle of the east side. I anchored here last night partly because the red line on your map came down to the sea about here, and partly because I did not want to move about these waters in the dark any more than I had to. I don't see any landing place, but I'll send a boat in to see whether it is possible to land. Then I will run north about a mile to the corner of the island and see what I can find there. Meanwhile, perhaps we had all better go to breakfast."

All went, still chattering excitedly. When they came up again, a boat was approaching the ship. Bess screamed out at sight of it, and then cried out again in disappointment as she recognized Collins on board and realized that it was one of the El Rio's boats that had been reconnoitering the shore.

Collins, however, brought news. "There's a sort of cleft in the rocks," he reported. "You don't see it from here, but it goes in deep and ends with a fair landing place. "There's no sign of a path up the rocks, but the ascent seems to be fairly easy."

The news caused fresh excitement. The discovery of the entrance seemed to be proof of the accuracy of the chart, and both Bess and Mrs. Archman were agog to go ashore at once. Captain Bunker, however, demurred. "Possibly this cleft will lead you where you want to go," he said. "But my instructions say nothing about landing. They merely tell me to go to the northeast corner. Presumably Mr. Archman will be watching for us and will communicate. Certainly he won't be watching for anybody on this path, because he doesn't know that you have recovered the map. It seems to me best to obey instructions and run to the place Mr. Archman specified, staying there long enough to give him a chance to see us and to communicate. If he doesn't, we can come back."

Mrs. Archman listened with evident disapproval. Her anxiety for her husband and for Nellie had grown enormously since she had heard of the robbery of the safe and the attempt to signal.

"We ought to land right away," she protested. "Right away. It's perfectly dreadful to wait. Those people who are following will get ahead of us if we don't. Where are they, anyway? Where have they gone? They'll get ahead of us and m-murder Henry."

Bess tried to calm the excited lady. "Now, mother—" she began.

But Mrs. Archman would not stop. "I know more about them than any of you," she burst out. "I don't know much, but I know that Henry has been afraid of them for years and years. He wouldn't tell me anything. He said it wasn't his secret.

"But when he brought Nellie to us—"

She broke off as she noticed the distinct sensation that her words produced. "I mean," she cried. "I mean when Nellie was born and—and—oh! Oh, I don't know what I mean. But I'm afraid! I'm afraid!"

"Never mind, Mrs. Archman." Miss Denslow came to Bess' rescue. "It's all right. We've thrown whoever was following us completely off the track. Captain Bunker must obey orders and go to the place designated. You can't tell what might happen if he didn't. Later he can come back." She led the half-hysterical woman to a seat.

A moment later the boat was hoisted in and the El Rio started on her short run to the northeast corner of the island. As she went, those on board scanned the mountain closely, with field glasses and with naked eyes, trying to discover the path indicated by the red line of the chart. But this proved impossible, even with the starting point afforded by the cleft that Collins had discovered. The mountainside was covered with trees and brush that hid even the inequalities of the surface. All that could be ascertained was that the path, if accurately delineated by the red line, went straight upward to the top of the gentler slopes and then curled southward about the base of the peak to a position screened from view by the peak itself.

The aspect of the northeast corner of the island proved not to differ materially from that of the eastern side. The shores rose as abruptly and seemed as unbroken, and signs of human habitation were equally lacking. Further, though the El Rio lay off the shores all morning, no trace of life appeared on the cliffs. Boats sent to reconnoiter reported several good landing places, but found nothing to show that any of them had been used.

Meanwhile, the impatience of the passengers, especially that of Mrs. Archman, steadily mounted. The crew seemed to catch the infection of the excitement. The whole ship was feverish, as if all on board felt they were on the verge of some thrilling event. Captain Bunker yielded at last to the apparently unanimous feeling and ran back to the first anchorage.

Once there the impatience of the passengers could no longer be controlled. A boat was dropped overboard, a gangway was let down, and they all prepared to disembark.

Captain Bunker regarded the movement with very apparent dissatisfaction. Vainly he endeavored to dissuade Mrs. Archman, at least, from going ashore.

"Madam," he said, "you don't know what you are going up against. You're weak and you can't possibly climb those rocks, and you're apt to get drenched, too. There are always squalls and showers wandering about these islands. Let the young ones go if they must, but you stay here."

"Stay here! Stay here! When my husband may be dying! I won't do it!"

"Dying nothing!" Captain Bunker's irritation got the best of him. "He's safe and sound, if he's here at all. There's no sense in your killing yourself." He talked on, but Mrs. Archman turned a deaf ear, and at last he was obliged to give up.

The landing party, as finally made up, included Mrs. Archman, Miss Denslow, Bess, Lord George, Harry and Collins. As they climbed into the boat, the steward, Price, appeared with two huge baskets of provisions, which he placed under the thwart.

Harry stared at the baskets amazedly. "Great Scott, Price," he exclaimed, "what's that?"

"That, sir? That's supper, sir. I thought maybe you'd be late in getting back and would be glad of a bite, sir."

"A bite! Is that what you call a bite? There's a week's provisions here. However, let it stay, now it's here. Climbing is hungry work."

A moment later the boat was shoved off and rowed swiftly shoreward.

As it drew close to the shore, a long, deep slit cut slantingly into the cliff became apparent. From the El Rio it was invisible, its entrance blending into the rocks on either side. From a boat, closer in, it was still invisible except from a narrow zone directly opposite the opening. Fifty feet to right or to left, its headlands melted so smoothly into the background that even the closest scrutiny had difficulty making out the line of juncture.

Inside its mouth, even at the outer verge, the water was almost lakelike in its stillness, and a little farther in it became glassy. It was beautifully transparent, showing myriads of fish darting through it like black shadows weaving in and out of a carpet of waving feathery sea growths.

At its base, a hundred yards inward, lay a strip of sandy beach, across which trickled a tiny stream to whose incessant action the cleft was clearly due. Behind the beach the gorge rose steeply, though not precipitously, plainly grading into the ridged surface of the mountain within no very great distance.

The five adventurers disembarked and stood looking about them, taking in the surroundings. When they turned back to the boat the lunch baskets had been landed and Collins was instructing the coxswain to go back to the ship and to come ashore again at six o'clock.

When the boat had gone, Harry bent to pick up one of the lunch baskets. An expression of surprise came over his face. "Great Caesar's ghost!" he exclaimed. "What on earth has Price put in this thing?" He turned back the cloth that covered the contents and peered in. "Will you look at this?" he demanded. "Cans! Cans! Cans! Why, the fellow's put in a ton of corn beef. And half a ton of hardtack. Holy Moses! What does he think we are? A North pole relief expedition?"

Collins gazed at the contents of the baskets blankly. Then he turned quickly and shouted down the cleft after the boat, which had just disappeared around the curve. Again he shouted, but the boat did not come back. When he again faced his surprised companions, his face was lined with anxiety or anger. Nevertheless he forced a laugh.

"I wanted to get a man to help carry the basket," he explained. "But I guess they were out of earshot. We can leave the things here or we can divide them up and carry them. I guess we'd better leave them. There really wasn't much use in bringing them."

Lord George and Bess, who had started up the ravine, turned back to see what was the matter. At Collins' words, Lord George spoke up. "Why not put them in the cave, old chap?" he demanded.

"What cave?"

"Don't you know? It's a dainty little cave, it is really. Miss Archman found it a bit up the gully. It's just the place where one would store things, you know."

"Cave goes!" Collins bent to the baskets. "Lend a hand, Mr. Archman," he directed, as he straightened up.

With some difficulty, the two carried the baskets for the hundred feet or so up the gorge and deposited them well back in the cave, which proved to be a mere hollow in the cliff, overhanging a projecting ledge of rock. "If it rains, the hardtack won't get drenched here," observed Collins, as he put down his load.

The way up the ravine was steep but climbable, even for Mrs. Archman, who, assisted by Collins, followed Bess and Lord George, who led the way. Harry and Miss Denslow came last.

About ten minutes' climbing brought them to a break in the right-hand wall of the cleft, through which something that might have been considered to be a path led off to the north. No one paid much attention to it, however, as the red line on the map went straight upward, past it.

Not far beyond this the six reached the top of the ravine and came out on the slope that as seen from the El Rio ran up to the abruptly rising face of the peak. The trees, however, were too dense to permit a view of the bay and the ship, and they went on, following as well as they could the bowldery course of the creek, which seemed to coincide pretty well with the position indicated by the red line on the map. Denser and denser grew the trees, and more and more imperceptible the track, till poor Mrs. Archman dropped down despairingly. "This can't be the path," she wailed. "You've gotten off it somewhere. And I can't climb another foot. I can't!"

The others looked at her and then at each other. She had merely voiced the belief that had been growing in all their minds. "I guess we'd better turn back after we've rested a while," suggested Harry.

But Miss Denslow objected. "It seems to me that the woods are a little thinner off yonder," she said, pointing ahead and to the right. "We might get a view from there."

"Let's find out." Harry was off, breaking a way through the undergrowth, and after a moment's hesitation Collins followed him. An instant later Harry's voice was heard, calling excitedly: "Come up here, you people, for the love of Mike!" he shouted.

Bess and Lord George raced off, and Mrs. Archman followed more slowly, aided by Miss Denslow. The two seemed to have taken a great fancy to each other.

Harry was standing on a lump of rock that shouldered through the leafy cover of the mountain till it stood almost as high as the tops of the trees that surrounded it. Behind it rose the peak of the mountain, but before it stretched a wonderful panorama of the bay, ringed islands and far-stretching sunlit sea. The long shadows of the land shot eastward over the waters. Afar, trails of smoke or gleams of white showed where steamers and sailing ships crossed the seas.

Below, close to the island, the El Rio swayed smoothly on the waves that rolled in from the outer sea. On her decks tiny, almost imperceptible figures came and went. The whole scene was exquisite, a miniature set in sparkling diamonds. The six watched it almost breathlessly.

Abruptly Collins cried out. He had his field glasses at his eyes and was scanning the bay and the El Rio. "Look!" he cried, in a voice that thrilled the others. "Look! Behind that island just west of the El Rio! What is that? Lord George, you've got glasses and you're a naval man. What is that?"

In the middle of the bay, a quarter of a mile, perhaps, west of the El Rio, stretched a low wooded island. Beyond it, close to the shore, lay something long and narrow and deadly looking. Invisible from the El Rio or from the lower shore, it was in plain view from the mountain. Collins was pointing to it with shaking fingers.

Lord George's glasses were already at his eyes. When he lowered them his face was pale. "It's a destroyer," he said. "A torpedo-boat destroyer. That's the fellow who followed us in last night. He's hiding behind the island and watching us."

The state board of control is asking for an appropriation of approximately $9,242,000 for the coming two years to be used in operating the sixteen state institutions under its jurisdiction. Administration expenses are listed at $966,000 while the per capita allowance asked for the care of inmates of the institutions is $8,275,000. The request was made before the state budget board conducting hearings on the estimated amount of appropriations that will be asked of the next legislature for all state departments for the coming biennium. The requested appropriation is approximately the same as for the current biennium. In the various institutions there are 11,036 inmates.

Iowa as a body, is striving to bring back those good times that made our state the richest state in the union. We know that these good times can not be enjoyed to the fullest, unless every line of activity is prosperous. We are so dependent upon each other, and our interests so dovetailed that one line of activity can not suffer without its effect being felt by nearly every other line in the state, either directly or indirectly. Everyone is concerned about the welfare of the farmer. We, in Iowa, are to a man in any effort that is being made to raise the standards of our rural communities. Well we know that bumper crops, sold at good prices, not only affect the farmer but affect the business man, our industries and our labor, and therefore, indirectly, each of us is in the farming business.

The Oak Hill Country clubhouse will be dedicated soon in Red Oak, it has been announced. The new building for the Oak Hill club has been erected on the Harding highway, two miles east of town. The cost was $18,000.

Why America Must Have More Paved Highways

Almost every section of the United States is confronted by a traffic problem.

Month by month this problem is becoming more and more serious.

Hundreds of cars pass a given point every hour on many of our state and county roads. Downtown city streets are jammed with traffic.

Think, too, how narrow many of our roads are, and how comparatively few paved highways there are in proportion to the steadily increasing number of cars.

If the motor vehicle is to continue giving the economic service of which it is capable, we must have more Concrete highways and widen those near large centers of population.

Every citizen should discuss highway needs of his community with his local authorities.

Your highway officials will do their part if given your support.

Why postpone meeting this pressing need?

An early start means early relief.

ALL GUN PERMITS EXPIRED ON OCTOBER 28TH

All permits issued by sheriff's or cheifs of police to carry concealed weapons expired on October 28th. when a law governing the issuance of gun licenses went into effect.

The new law is unlike the old statute in several respects. Automatic expiration of the old law at the end of the month has been called to the attention of tht Sheriff in a notice from Des Moines.

Included in the order are all public officials, deiectives and others are granted permit to carry concealed weapons.

Under the old law permits were issued by the sheriff or cheif of police those being issued by the formal ly beng registered at the office of the county recorder.

Now the permits will be issued by the sheriff only and he will keep the record of such permits. New permits will beg ranted to peace officers and duly authorized agents of the law, but it is unlikely that the practice of allowing volunteer officers to arm themselves will be continued.

Under the new law the sheriff will also issue permits to merchants to sell fire arms and a record of sales will be kept. Heretofore licenses for the sale of guns were obtained from the office of the county recorder.

The sheriff will be furnished by the state with new forms and new books of record to keep a detailed record of all permits issued.

COFFEE MEANS LESS MILK

Children will Not Drink Enough Healthful Food if Given Stimulant

Coffee and tea are doubly injurious to children. In the first place, medical authorities are generally agreed that growing children get along better without these two stumulants. Secondly when children are allowed to drink tea and coffee they cut down on their milk consumption drink less than they need for normal developement.

A recent survey of the American Child Health association in 86 cities indicates that the child who from one to two cups of coffeee drinks less than one-fourth of a pint per day. Each child needs at least a pint of milk per day, according to Miss Florence E. Busse, of the foods and nutrition department. Iowa State College.

OBITUARY OF MRS. EDWARD TERRY

On Saturday noon, November 8, 1924, death claimed Grandma Terry in the home of her only living son at Joplin, Mo. Her summons was a call to come to the higher realms ofter many months of illness and suffering.

Mrs. Mary A. Gates Terry was born on June 9, 1845 in the state of Ohio While she was still very young her parents moved to West Virginia. There she spent most of her life, for it was only six years ago that she and her husbond moved to Kentucky to be near their daughter who lived there. As will be remembered, this daughter died on May 29 of this year. The parents thereupon came to Iowa on June 6th to make their home with the only surviving daughter Mrs. Will Johnson, residing southeast of Klemme.

While here, sometime during the lst summer she suffered a paralytic stroke which rendered her helpless. Her life was dispaired of for a time and no one expected her to live as long as she did. Much to the surprise of all she rallied and showed marked sign of improvement—so much that her and her husband left September 15 for Joplin, Mo. to spend the winter with their mother. Beside these he is death claimed her as stated above.

She was united in marriage with Mr. Edward Terry in 1867. Six children were born to this union. Only two remin to mourn the loss of their mother. Beside tehse she is survived by her griefstricken husband who feels the loss of his life compnion vry keenly.

In the data gathered we find this: "She ws converted when child nd joind the Baptist church in 1902 and remoined a faithful member and worker through life."

No more beutiful tribute can be added by us than the above, and no richer heritage could she leave to her husband and children than such a tstimony.

For the writer it was an inspiration and a genuine pleasure to converse with her and to offer prayer of her bedside while she lay stricken during the past summer.

"Well done thou good and faithful servant: Thou hast been faithful over a few things. I will moke thee ruler over many things: enter thou into the joy of thy Lord!"

Funeral Servcies were held in the Methodist Church on Wednesday afternoon by the paster. Interment was made in the Klemme cemetery.

Card Of Thanks

We wish to thank the neighbors for all they done for us during her sickness and sad hour, and also for floral offering, and Royal Neighbors for the Beautiful Flowers.

Mr. Terry and Children.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH

A. W. Gauger, Pastor

A very fine spirit manifested it self in the attendance and interest shown last Sunday. Why not make every Sunday a "Go to Church Sunday." Such it should be to all and especially to those who hold a church member ship it means making good the pledge you gave when you were admitted into church fellowship. Only on that condition were you received into membership. Are you making good?

Next Sunday is termed "Good Literature Day" by our Publishing Houses. It means that we should become interested in good literature and the slogan is that every home paper along with the severol secushould have at least one religious lar papers," and the one one paper should be one of our offiical organs.

We will speak on "The Blessing of the Blindspot" at our morning strvice. We are told thot every normal eye has a blindspot. We will make our interpretation from this as our Great Master knew so well to interpret life thus.

Beginning with Sundy evening we will give series of sermons on the Lords Prayer. Do not miss any. You will wnt the entire chin of them.

Ladies' Aid Society meets at the Parish house on Thursday of this week.

The Frost

The cold stars look in the glassy brook
Out of a glassy sky—
Fragile and white in the windless night
Does the phantom moon drift by,
Past cedar and fir where sweet scents stir,
Past river and rock and hill,
Past that still brink where the shy deer drink
In the listening midnight chill—
But I sit alone in the house of Night
Weaving a fabric strange and bright.

Tomorrow the world will be vapor curled
And the hills enscarfed with gold—
The maple's spire will be wreathed with fire,
And sumac flaming bold—
Soft drifting down from meadows brown,
And woods where ripe nuts fall
Strange whispers creep of rest and sleep
'Neath Winter's icy pall.
Of silver lace and spider's thread,
I have woven a shroud for Summer, dead.

The winged seeds of the withering weeds
Unto their sleep are laid,
The birds are gone from field and lawn
And the woodland's thinning shade.
Of a shining skein of rainbow sheen
A fabric bright I weave,
And the days go by with never a sigh
For the flowers they must leave,
For I have clad them in flame and gems,
And crowned their hair with diadems.

HANCOCK COUNTY DAIRY COW POPULATION IS INCREASING

Report Shows 8.5 Gain in Dairy Cow Population in Iowa

Hancock county's dairy cow population is increasing according to figures anounced by the Fluee Valley Institute. The statement covers an area embracing approximately one eighth of the state in this section, and is believed to hold true for the county proper.

A 8.5 per cent gain in the number of dairy cows two years old and over is noted for the district over the preceding year, while the increase for the state as a whole was 7.4 per cent as compared with 1923. The entire United States shows an increase amounaing to 6 per cent, gove ernment figures show.

The number of heifers 1 to 2 years old as compared to the total number of cows in this district seem to be above average indicating the intention of more young stock in to milk in the near future.

In citing these figures the Institute calls the attention to the fact that the United States needs 320000 more cows every year if production is to keep step with the normal growth of demand for dairy product There are 1,412,000 more mouths to be fed in the United States with every passing year and with the increased consumption of dairy products per capita, this addtd number to the nation's herd will barely suffice to meet the increased demand.

GETTING MARKET "BREAKS"

Seasonable Variation in Price Gives Farmer Many Profitable Opportunities.

While farm prices vary from year to year, there are certain seasnable tendencies each year, which give the farmer a chance to get his product on the market either a little later or a little earlier than the other fellow who does no study marketconditions, and thus profit thereby.

A few typical commodities will serve to illustrate the point, accord ing to J. C. Galloway, farm manage ment demonstrator, Iowa State College. Butter and dairy products ordinarily high in the fall and winter and low in late spring and summer. Beef ordinarily is higher in the late spring and summer and low in the winter and fall.

Taking advantage of just these two tendencies J. O. Bisset, of Lamille, Iow, has combined dairying and his production of beef cattle. His cows are fall freshened, thus providing dairy products when they are higher in price. Altho feed is somewhat higher in the fall he has found that butterfat brings from 1 to 18 cents per pound more during this season. During the summer when his dairy production is at low ebb, Mr. Bissett feeds and markets his beef cattle.

This system of Mr. Bissett's has another advantage in distributing his labor thruout the year. Since beef cattle require a minimum of at tention in the summer when feeding on pasture. Mr. Bissett hs plenty of time to devote to his crops, which are then needing attention. Dairying requires more time and since the winter months are light in other work. he is in this manner able to run his farm with a minimum of out side labor, while obtaining a maximum price for his products.

Fond parents who estimate education by the cost of it are already getting assurances that their sons in college are making progress.

The fellow with sunshine in his soul has often been absorbing moonshine.

Nearly everybody is opposed to child labor and quite a good many are opposed to man labor.

MOTORISTS WOULD SAVE NEARLY FIFTY MILLION BY IMPROVING HIGHWAYS

Costs 12.6 Cents to Operote Automobile Over Ordinary Roads

Newton, Ia., Nov. 12— "Improvement of Iowa' highways will save motorists of the state from $25,000-000 to $50,000,000 annually in the operation of their vehicles.' H. M. Allfere, President of the Iowa Good Roads Association declared today.

Mr. Allfree based his statement on figures recently made public after an investigation covering more than five years by engineering experts of Iowa State College, in co-op eration with the State Highway Com mission and similiar commissions in other states.

These figures, covering every item of expense in the operation of a motor vehicle. including repairs and depreciaton, show:—

That it costs 12.6 cets per mile to operate an automobile from 25 to 35 miles per hour over ordinary dirt roads.

That is costs 11.8 cents per ton mile to operate a car under the same conditions over an ordinary gravel road.

That is costs 10 cents per ton mile to drive a car on an ordinary paved road.

This means a saving of 2.6 cents per ton mile in favor of the paved road over a gravel road.

It is estimated that 80 per cent of the total ton trafic of Iowa is over the state's primary road system, which embraces the main market roads connecting all the county seat towns and cities, and main market centers; there being a total of 6,500 miles of highway in the primary system. It is also estimated that the average automobile is driven 4,000 miles per year.

Accepting the figures of the engineering experts, it would cost the owner of a car $400.00 to drive his machine 4,000 miles over paved roads. If he traveled the same distance on gravel roads, his cost would be $472.00, and if he travel 4,000 miles on ordinary dirt roads it would cost him $504.00

The Iowa Good Roads Association proposes that approximately half of the state's primary road system be paved, and that the balance be surfaced with gravel and clay.

If, after such improvements were made, the average car, in covering 4,000 miles annually, should be driv en 1,600 miles on paving, 16,00 miles on gravel, and 800 miles or dirt roads (which experts say would be an average season's driving) the cost of operation for the year would be $449.60. Deduct this from $504 the estimated cost of a season's motoring over ordinary dirt roads, there would be an actual saving of $54.00 to the average automobile owner in Iowa who is doing his driv ing over dirt roads of a saving of $22.40 to the driver covering 4,000 miles a year on ordinary gravel roads.

In as much as there are approximately 600,000 motor vehicles in Iowa at this time, it can be seen that this yearly saving in operaion expense would reach an enormous total.

Figures cited cover only the savin operation of motor pehicles. They do not take into consideration the damage to clothes from yb and dirt and the enormous loss to the farmer and business man who cannot use the road at certain seasons because of mud, nor the many conveniences and benefits families residing in the country would derive from improved highways.

BOARD TO STUDY FARMERS' NEEDS

Coolidge Names Eight to Make Recommendations to Congress.

Washington. — President Coolidge's first major act since his election was announced at the White House when he named an agricultural inquiry commission of eight members whose job will be to devise means of preventing any future recurrence of the recent farm depression.

Mr. Coolidge regards the return of agriculture to profitable conditions as one of the cornerstones upon which the present wave of prosperity rests. Likewise, he believes that the further increased prosperity already in sight for this country must be largely dependent upon the assurance that such conditions will continue. Therefore he is making the welfare of the American farmer his first concern in framing his program as Chief Executive for the next four years.

The President let it be known that he expects these eight representative agriculturists to get to work immediately and to have their recommendations completed in time for legislative enactment during the short session of congress, which convenes the first Monday in December.

The members of the committee are:

Hon. Robert D. Carey, Careyhurst, Wyo., former governor of Wyoming.

O. E. Bradfute, president of the American Farm Bureau federation, Chicago.

Charles S. Barrett, chairman of the National Board of Farm Organizations, Union City, Ga.

Louis J. Taber, master of the National Grange, Columbus, Ohio.

Ralph P. Merritt, president of the Sun-Maid Raisin Growers, Fresno, Cal.

R. W. Thatcher, director of the New York experiment stations, Geneva, N. Y.

W. C. Coffey, dean of the college of agriculture and director of experimentation of the University of Minnesota, University farm, St. Paul, Minn.

Fred H. Bixby, president of the American National Live Stock association, Long Beach, Cal.

Nation-Wide Buying of Stocks Sets New Mark

New York.—Railroad stocks involved in trading on the New York Stock exchange gained more than $100,000,000 in quoted value on Friday in one of the most remarkable buying demonstrations in recent years.

Forty-five carrier stocks soared to new high prices for the year, some of them to the highest prices in history, on net gains that ranged from small fractions to 4½ points.

Sales of all stocks exceeded 2,300,000 shares, the first "two-million share" day since April 17, 1922.

While the recent high monthly earnings statements and record-breaking car-loading statistics have been factors in the buying of railroad shares, most market observers agreed that the almost unprecedented demand for those stocks at this time was due to the growing belief that the apparent loss of the balance of power by the radical element in congress precluded the probability of any adverse railroad legislation in the next few years.

Industrial shares swung upward under the leadership of United States Steel common, which touched 112, its highest price since 1919.

W. CHURCHILL IN BRITISH CABINET

Named by Baldwin Chancellor of Exchequer.

London. — Stanley Baldwin, new prime minister, sprang a surprise on the country when it was announced that he had appointed Winston Churchill, noted as a free trader, as chancellor of the exchequer.

In bestowing this high office, which generally is considered next to the prime ministership in importance, to a recent convert from Liberalism, he left a lifelong Conservative, Sir Robert Horne, out in the cold. Sir Robert, who had been chancellor in the coalition government, was offered the post of minister of labor by Baldwin, but he spurned this indignantly as he confidently had expected to return to his former office.

It is known that Churchill is in favor of securing payment by the allies of their debts to Britain, a view shared by Austen Chamberlain, the new foreign secretary. Action in this direction may be looked for at an early date.

Washington, D. C.—John W. Davis congratulated President Coolidge on his election.

Madison, Wis.—Senator Robert M. LaFollette, in his first public statement commenting upon the election, said:

"The loss of this one battle in the age-long struggle is but an incident. So far as I am personally concerned I am enlisted for life in the struggle.

"The Progressives will not be dismayed by this result. We have just begun to fight. There can be no compromise on the fundamental issues for which we stand."

Washington, D. C.—Two vacancies in the Supreme court are imminent, according to a report in official circles. It is understood that Associate Justices McKenna and Holmes have told friends that they would retire some time after the election.

Chief Justice Rugg of the Massachusetts Supreme court, to whom President Coolidge offered the post of attorney general, is regarded as the most probable successor to Justice Holmes. It was also said that one of the judges on the New York Court of appeals would be considered for the other place.

COOLIDGE SETS THANKSGIVING

President Urges Nation to Show Gratitude for Days of Peace on Nov. 27.

Washington.—President Coolidge issued a proclamation formally proclaiming Thursday, November 27, as Thanksgiving day.

The proclamation said:

"We approach that season of the year when it has been the custom for the American people to give thanks for the good fortune which the bounty of Providence through the generosity of nature, has visited on them. It is altogether a good custom. It has the sanction of antiquity and the approbation of our religious convictions. In acknowledging the receipt of Divine favor, in contemplating the blessings which have been bestowed on us, we shall reveal the spiritual strength of the nation.

"The year has been marked by a continuation of peace whereby our country has entered into a relationship of better understanding with all other nations of the earth. Ways have been revealed to us by which we could perform very great service through the giving of friendly counsel, through the extension of financial assistance, and through the exercise of a spirit of neighborly kindliness to less favored peoples. We should give thanks for the power which has been given into our keeping, with which we have been able to render these services to the rest of mankind.

"At home we have continually had an improving state of the public health. The production of our industries has been large and our harvests have been bountiful. We have been remarkably free from disorder and remarkably successful in all those pursuits which flourish during a state of domestic peace. An abundant prosperity has overspread the land.

"We shall do well to accept all these favors and bounties with a becoming humility, and dedicate them to the service of the righteous cause of the Giver of all good and perfect gifts. As the nation has prospered, let all the people show that they are worthy to prosper by rededicating America to the service of God and man.

"Therefore I, Calvin Coolidge, President of the United States of America, hereby proclaim and fix Thursday, November 27, as a day for national thanksgiving. I recommend that the people gather in their places of worship and at family altars and offer up their thanks for the goodness which has been shown to them in such a multitude of ways."

REPUBLICANS WILL RULE IN CONGRESS

Working Majority Prevails in Both Branches.

Landslide Assures Administraiton of Support on All Vital Legislation.

The seemingly never ending stream of "returns" from every nook and corner of the country has subsided and the greatest presidential election the country has ever known now is history. That President Calvin Coolidge was accorded the support for which his party battled throughout the campaign cannot be denied. The re-elected President has been given the support that will mean so much to his administration, through the selection of members of the senate and house who are of his own party.

Several important items mark the election of President Coolidge as most remarkable in such events. Among them may be enumerated the generous support that was given in the election to the senate and house of members of the President's party—a substantial majority in both branches; what might have proved a thorn in the side of the President and his fellow-workers—the LaFollette faction—has been dispelled; the election was not thrown into congress as had been feared; approval of President Coolidge's course by approximately 18,000,000 votes.

Deeply grateful for "the faith and confidence" expressed by the people at the polls, President Coolidge in a statement of appreciation dedicated himself anew to "the service of all my country and all of my countrymen." He wrote:

"It does not seem possible to me to make an adequate expression concerning the presidency of the United States. No other honor equals this, no other responsibility approaches this.

"When it is conferred by an overwhelming choice of the people and vote of the electoral college, these are made all the greater.

"I can only express my simple thanks to all those who have contributed to this result and plainly acknowledge that it has been brought to pass through the work of a Divine Providence, of which I am but one instrument.

"Such powers as I have I dedicate to the service of all my countrymen. In the performance of the duties of my office I could not ask for anything more than the sympathetic consideration which my follow Americans have always bestowed upon me.

"I have no appeal except to the common sense of all the people. I have made no pledge except to serve them. I have no object except to promote their welfare."

The lineup of the next congress presents a situation that will further stress the support President Coolidge will have during the next four years. With Senator LaFollette so badly weakened that he will be of no danger to the interests of the party in control; with the defeat of Senator Mangus Johnson of Minnesota, representing the Farmer-Labor party. In fact, the senate situation is better from a Republican standpoint than any of the administration leaders had hoped for.

Causes of the Landslide.

Causes for a landslide in a presidential election always are discussed, after the smoke of the battle has cleared. The platforms adopted at the national conventions of the three parties are well known. The fact that LaFollette carried only his own state—Wisconsin, and that Davis could control only the so-called Solid South, and not all of that, showed the strength of President Coolidge. It is contended that the principal causes, aside from the preference of the majority of the voters for the present administration may be ascribed to the disatisfaction of the labor element and the discontent of the farmers.

It is obvious that the voters of the country did not follow either Davis or LaFollette in their attempt to score the alleged corrupt acts of members of the last Republican administration against Coolidge personally.

Worried About "Silent" Vote.

There appeared throughout the campaign to be an apathetic condition among voters; the "silent" vote was worried about. Yet a record vote was cast. President Harding's plurality of 7,000,000 in 1920 over James M. Cox was thought to be almost an impossible figure, yet Harding had no third-party opposition, with the exception of Eugene V. Debs' 1,000,000 total vote. LaFollette polled four times the Socialist vote of that year, his 4,000,000 total approximates the Roosevelt Bull Moose third party strength in 1912.

Pennsylvania appears to be the banner state for Coolidge with a plurality of about 1,000,000, and the President carried New York state by 900,000; Illinois by 900,000; California, regarded as likely to go to LaFollette, by 400,000; Indiana, claimed by the Democrats, by 300,000, and by a like figure he triumphed in Iowa.

President Is Congratulated.

John W. Davis, the defeated presidential candidate on the Democratic ticket, telegraphed President Coolidge as follows:

"Permit me to congratulate you on your sweeping victory and to express the hope that your administration may by its success inure to the welfare of the country."

President Coolidge sent this reply:

"Please accept my thanks for your message and my appreciation of the patriotic sentiments you express."

Senator Robert M. LaFollette, in his first public statement, commenting upon the election, said:

"The loss of this one battle in the age-long struggle is but an incident. So far as I am personally concerned I am enlisted for life in the struggle.

"The progressives will not be dismayed by this result. We have just begun to fight. There can be no compromise on the fundamental issues for which we stand."

Two Women Governors.

For the first time in the history of the country, at this election two women were elected as governors—Mrs. Nellie T. Ross, on the Democratic ticket, as governor of Wyoming. She is the widow of the late Governor Ross. Under the laws she will assume office as soon as she qualifies.

Mrs. Miriam Ferguson, also on the Democratic ticket, was elected governor of Texas. Her husband was formerly governor of the state.

There will be one woman in congress, Mrs. Mary T. Norton, a Democrat, from the Twelfth New Jersey district.

Several women were victorious candidates for election to state legislatures and other state offices, displaying a most important fact, that women are in politics to stay.

General Dawes Guest of Newspaper Writers

Chicago.—Gen. Charles G. Dawes was the guest of the newspaper correspondents assigned to him during the campaign at dinner Monday night. He traveled over 17,000 miles, visiting 17 states and making more than 100 speeches. He received returns at his home in Evanston, in company with a group of Minute Men of the Constitution who were with him throughout the campaign.

Republican Delegations From Two More States

Late returns showed Democratic defeats which give Michigan and Pennsylvania solid Republican delegations. John B. Sosnowski was elected over Representative Clancy (Dem., Mich.). In Pennsylvania six Democrats were defeated. The complete unofficial count showed A. H. Walters (Rep.), who had seemed to be defeated, finally pulled through.

SCORES PACIFICISM

A KEEN denunciation of pacifism was the subject of Rear Admiral William S. Sims' message to the American Legion national convention held in St. Paul recently, and said in part: "We deceive ourselves if we think that peace is assured for the immediate future. We must get the public to realize that if we attempt to muddle through another war as we have past contests the necessary loss of life will be terrific. You men of the Legion have experienced the horrors of modern war. You know too well the many sacrifices of valuable lives on land and sea that were the direct results of our unpreparedness for the great war. You know that owing to a lack of efficient organization we spent thousands of millions for artillery and airplanes built too late to be of service, that due to lack of training we were in the war a year before we fired a shot on the western front. You may not know that our fighting forces have been subjected to the same conditions and been obliged to make the same sacrifices in all our wars. What Theodore Roosevelt called the 'hurrah of histories' of your school days have not told our people the truth about our invariable unpreparedness and its disastrous results."

WAR AND PEACE TO BE BIG QUESTIONS

Problems of international war and permanent world peace will come in for much attention at the hands of the American Legion during 1925, as a result of the mandates laid down by the national convention held at St. Paul.

This does not mean, it was pointed out at national headquarters, that the Legion will diminish its activity in other lines which have engaged its attention constantly since its creation. National Commander James A. Drain has announced that the chief questions which will occupy the Legion during the coming year will be rehabilitation of the disabled veterans of the war, care of the orphans of those men who paid the supreme sacrifice in battle or who have died since the end of the conflict, and the manifold activities of the Americanism commission.

Questions of war and peace have merely been advanced by the action of the convention to the rank of leading activities of the Legion. Commander Drain was directed by the convention to appoint a world peace committee of ten members. This committee is to consult with other organizations, study their plans for peace, consider carefully the world situation as it is and then report to the convention at Omaha in 1925 the most practical plan for the Legion to work for peace among the nations.

By mandate of the convention, one of the major activities of the organization for 1925 will be work towards the passage of the universal service act which would give the government power to call men, money and materials into its service, in case of war, on equal terms. With the favorable reception which the policy has met and with its endorsement by the great political parties, it is expected that the bill now pending in congress will be passed in the very near future.

The Legion will also endeavor to get congress to take immediate measures to bring the navy up to an equality with the British in the 5-5-3 ratio of the Washington naval disarmament conference, and also to place the battle fleet on an equal footing with the British in gun range and power.

Further improvements in the United States veterans' bureau are demanded. The planning service and the central office board of appeals are strongly criticized. Dismissal of inefficient personnel is asked.

Offices of the national children's welfare committee are to be established at national headquarters. A joint committee of twenty-seven members is to be appointed by the Legion, the Forty and Eight and the Legion auxiliary to direct this work.

Creation of a trust fund to be formed from donations and contributions from members of the Legion or other persons, and to be used for the national rehabilitation work of the Legion, was ordered by the convention. This problem will receive much attention in 1925, as will also the raising of an endowment fund for the children's welfare work.

Numerous Mascots Left by Convention Delegates

An aftermath of the American Legion convention, held recently at St. Paul, which howled dismally to proclaim its loneliness, came to light after the Legionnaires had departed for their homes. Between parades during the convention the various state delegations parked their mascots with Dr. Elmer Berg, veterinarian, in his stables at the fair grounds. After the tumult was a thing of the past, Doctor Berg discovered he was the unwilling possessor of a fair-sized menagerie left behind by the delegates. Reveille roll call was answered by the following: Two coyotes from South Dakota, one bear from Montana, four horses from Omaha, one badger from Wisconsin, one lion cub from Nevada and a nondescript assortment of dogs, addresses not known.

SLIGHT MISTAKE

Deacon Miller was going to Chicago on business and while there was to purchase a new sign which was to be hung up in front of the church advertising a new religious movement. He copied the motto and dimensions of the sign. but went to Chicago and left the paper in his coat at home. When he discovered that he had left the paper at home, he wired his wife; "Send motto and dimensions." An hour later a message came over the wire and the young lady clerk who had just come from lunch and knew nothing of the previous wire, fainted. When they looked at the messge she hd just taken they read: "Unto us a child is born, 6 feft log nd 2 feet wide."

SLING ANOTHER ONE, BIG BOY

The ant was standing by the body of a dead horse. Overhead the sun was beating down pitilessly from a clear sky. The ant looked at the carcass wonderingly nd shook his head.

Suddenly a bootlegger rushed past and set a bottle of corn whiskey near the ant. The ant sniffed the fumes, wiggled his antenne, and hummed a little ditty entitled: "How Dry I am." Then a drank a drop of whiskey. He licked hischops His eyes blurred, his head swam, his antics became spiffy He shivered his antennae. Then he took another drink.

Seizing th carcass of the dead horse by the head, the ant shouted, "Come on, big boy, we're going home."

NO TIME FOR PLAY

The storm had swept some of the deck fittings overbord and things looked so dubious the captain decided to send up a distress signal. Just as the first rocket shot up into the inky blackness of the night a fussy little man spoke up : "Captain, I don't want to cast a dampr on any man's high spirits, but this seems like a helluva time to be setting off fireworks."

"Abie, what are the five senses?

Questions Answered About Everything from Flying to Fence Posts

How does one mix concrete to make a sidewalk. How best to varnish one's chairs. What is the proper shape for a parachute? What causes dust explosions? It may be any one of these questions, but whatever it is the engineering department, Iowa State College, is likely to have the necessary information in its files. Written material telling the best method of doing common tasks about the farm and home will be loaned to those wrting for it

Aeronautics, aluminum, automobiles, blasting, brick, bridges, cellars, cement, cesspools, cisterns, drainage, electricity, engines foundations, fuels, ice houses, radio, silos water tanks, wells, whitewash and wood preservation are some of the hundreds of subjects about which one may obtain technical information from the engineering extension service.

All material loaned out is to be returned at the end of three weeks. subject to certain rules. The service is free the only cost being the postage for returning the material.

Especially is this service helpful at this time of the year, when with the advent of bad winter weather, many farmers and industrial and technical workers may be forced to confine their work to some little odd job about the place, that has been needing attention for some time.

STEERS NEED LOT ROOM

With the large amount of soft corn on hand together with the fact that feeder cattle will be fairly easy to obtain, many farmers probably will feed cattle this winter. A word of informatioin concerning the necessary equipment and labor may help at this time.

Too much lot room may make steers restless, while too little will make "poor doers". Cattle do better when at least 90 to 100 square feet of lot and shelter space is allowed for each mature steer, according to C. W. McDonald, animal husbandry extension specialist. About one-fourth of this space should be shelter.

From two and one-half to three linear feet of bunk space is also required for each mature steer. Yearlings take about two-thirds as much yard and bunk space as older steers, and calves can be carried to 1,000 pounds in weight in about half the space required for two-year-olds because they become accustomed to their quarters and to each other while they are small Horned cattle require at least a half more bunk space and rack space than dehorned cattle.

Water supplp should be sufficient and constant and some provision for preventing the water from freezing should be made. A day or two of short water supply will cut gains and throw steers off feed as quickly and almost as surely as some radical change in rations.

DAIRY COW NEEDS GRAIN

Stalk Field is not Enough — Cow Works as Hard as Horse

For the dairy herd on the average farm, fall marks a change from a ration consisting principally of grass, to one in which grain plays a more important part, along with silage, corn stover or hay.

As regards winter production of cows, much depends upon the success with which the dairyman maintains the milk flow during the transition period between summer and winter feeding systems, says John Shaw, of the Iowa State College dairy husbandry department. Hence, feeding at this period should be closely watched.

At this season of the year, fall freshened cow will handle considerable amounts of hay, and such supplementary feeds will show in increased production, even where the cows have access to pasture or stalk fields. A feed of silage following the evening milking will be a great help in maintainng milk flow.

Stalk fields should not be relied upon as a source of grain feed, and grain feeding, at the rate of seven pounds for each pound of butterfat should not be deffered until there is a decrease in flow, but should begin at once, if it is not already being done. The dairy cow in average production is working as hard as the horse under field conditions and should be fed accordingly.

Look towards the light, and the shadows will all fall behind.

MILK IS ECONOMICAL

Most People Cannot Afford to Be Without it Says Food Expert

Milk is commonly considered an expensive food and its use is therefore restricted. The fact is that, everything considered, milk is such an economical food that most persons cannot afford to be without it, according to Miss Grace Magee, home economics specialists at Iowa State College.

Milk not only has a high fuel value but contains adequate building material for the growth and repair of bodily tissues and is high in mineral and vitamin content. For these reasons and also because of its complete utilization by the body its value cannot be replaced without a scientific knowledge of food and a much greater expenditure of money

"But what in thunder does it mean? Why should a destroyer follow us? What nationality is she?"

Lord George shook his head doubtfully. "She looks Danish built," he said. "We don't build that model in England."

"But—but—"

"We'll find out soon enough. Don't worry!" returned the Englishman grimly. His affected mode of speech had almost disappeared. He reached out and tore a long branch from a nearby tree. "Got anything that will do for a flag?" he asked.

No one answered. The others had listened in silence, uncomprehending, and apparently not knowing what to do or say. Even Lord George's transformation did not move them to speech. His lordship did not wait for an answer. He snapped a handkerchief from his pocket and deftly bound it to the branch, which he had stripped of twigs and leaves. Then slipping well forward, he began to wave it to and fro.

With bated breath the others watched. All understood that he was trying to signal. The question was whether he could attract the attention of those on the El Rio.

He did. Obviously they were keeping good watch. Scarcely had he begun to wave when an answering gleam of white began to move on the El Rio's deck.

"Good!" Lord George's tone showed intense satisfaction. He began to wave his flag to right and left, spelling out the message he wished to send. "A destroyer is lying behind—" he began. Then he dropped the flag and caught up his glasses. "Good Lord!" he cried.

He did not need the glasses. Even with the naked eye, all had seen the flash and puff on the deck of the El Rio and had seen the holder of the flag drop it and topple from the bridge to the deck. All saw the flashes and puffs that followed and saw the dozen dark figures that raced along the El Rio's deck. And all heard the faint, far-off reports that rose from the vessel to the mountainside.

"What is it What is it?" In uncontrollable excitement Bess cried out. "What are they attacking us for?"

Collins spun around. "The destroyer isn't attacking us," he rasped. "It's a mutiny. Our men have mutinied. They've been preparing for it. That's why they marooned us today. That's why that scoundrel Price gave us all those canned goods."

CHAPTER XI

Springing a Trap

Captain Bunker strode up and down on the bridge of the El Rio till the boat with the adventurers disappeared into the cleft on the line of cliffs. As it passed out of sight he heaved a sigh of relief.

Captain Bunker was a freighter captain and he did not take kindly to passengers. He would not have taken kindly to them even under the most favorable conditions; and he certainly did not do so under the conditions of this voyage, which were anything but favorable.

Here he was on an errand that he had been specifically warned was one of considerable danger. He believed that he had been followed by at least one vessel, and though he seemed to have temporarily thrown his pursuer off the track, he was by no means certain that he had done so permanently. Moreover, he knew that he had at least one traitor on board his ship—and he could not find him. Under such circumstances passengers were more than an annoyance—they were a plague, and Captain Bunker welcomed their departure. He promised himself that before they got back he would catch the traitor if he were among the crew, or would get information that would point to him unmistakably if he were among the passengers. As to which group he belonged, Captain Bunker was by no means satisfied.

He watched till he saw the boat, minus Collins and the passengers, pop her bow out of the cleft and start back to the ship. Then he turned to the second mate.

"I'm going below, Mr. Franks," he said. "I want to examine my safe more carefully, and then I want to interview every man on board. If I want any particular man at any time I'll let you know. Otherwise, send them in one after another."

"Very good, sir."

Captain Bunker turned to descend from the bridge, but stopped as Akin came toward him, evidently desirous of speaking.

The usual intimacies of a voyage had not altered the secretary's reserve. Rather they had increased it. He had spent practically all his time shut up in his stateroom, ticktacking away on his typewriter. He emerged at meals, which he ate almost in silence, and then vanished again. Seldom or never did he come on deck. He remained, in short, to all appearance the same smooth-running piece of office machinery that he had been in New York—so unobtrusive that no one really noticed him at all.

This morning, however, such evident intention spoke in his manner that Captain Bunker noticed it. "Anything you want to say, Mr. Akin?" he questioned.

The secretary nodded. "Yes, captain," he said. "I take it you are still disturbed by the burning of the flare last night. I have been thinking that perhaps I may be able to help—"

"Come to my cabin, Mr. Akin," the captain interrupted. "We can talk better there."

A moment later, seated at the cabin table, the captain nodded. "Now, Mr. Akin," he invited.

Akin had evidently mapped out what he was to say, for he spoke at once. "I learned for the first time last night—or perhaps I should say this morning," he began, "that you suspected that someone was following us. I now understand, at least partly, the meaning of some questions you asked me yesterday. They were not very—er—clear?"

"No!" Captain Bunker spoke a little sharply. "Mr. Archman told me that you knew nothing of his plans as regards this voyage, and that he preferred that I should not discuss them with you or with anyone. Consequently—"

"Mr. Archman was right, of course. He left New York at almost a moment's notice on what seems to have been strictly private business. He told me nothing of it, and I, of course, wish to know nothing. For this reason I have kept more than usually aloof from those on board and have avoided listening to the various surmises that have been passed so freely. However, I have not been able to make myself wholly deaf; and I have gathered that you believe that we have a spy on board who is trying to signal our route to some following vessel. Am I right?"

"You are!"

"I thought so. Well, captain, in that case, I think I can throw some light on the matter. Yesterday afternoon I happened to be looking out of my port, hole when I saw a bottle tossed out of the port just aft. I caught a glimpse of it—just enough to let me see that it had a small flag sticking from its neck. Then it flew to pieces and disappeared. I thought this was very peculiar and waited and watched until I had seen three similar bottles appear and promptly undergo the same fate. I did not hear any report, but when I went on deck I saw Lord George was sitting at the stern shooting at things with a rifle, and I suppose he broke them."

"I know he broke them," remarked Captain Bunker. "What I don't know and want to find out is, who threw them into the water."

"Oh! You knew of the bottles?" Akin's tones expressed surprise. "I am sorry. I thought I might be able to help you." The secretary rose.

But Captain Bunker checked him. "Sit down, Mr. Akin," he commanded. "You have helped me already. There are only two staterooms aft of yours. If the bottles came from aft of you, they must have come from the stateroom of Miss Denslow or from that of Mrs. Archman."

"Or from this cabin, Captain Bunker." The secretary's tones were peculiar.

Bunker looked at him keenly. "This cabin was kept locked all afternoon," he said, "except while I was in it."

"Then the bottles must have come from Miss Denslow's room—for of course they could not have come from Mrs. Archman's."

Captain Bunker hesitated. "It would seem so," he said. "But Miss Archman seems very sure of Miss Denslow."

"Miss Archman is a girl and is apt to be enthusiastic," commented Akin dryly. "She met Miss Denslow only a few days before we sailed. Mrs. Archman engaged her on recommendation of Miss Van Kull. No doubt she is a lady and an able governess, as Miss Van Kull certified, but she may be a spy, too. However, I do not insist that it was she who threw the bottles overboard. I merely mention the matter for your information. I think it was someone else."

"Who?"

"Price! The steward! Did you know that he had a passkey to the door of this cabin?"

"No!"

"He has. I saw him use it yesterday afternoon—about three o'clock, I should say."

"Humph!" Captain Bunker nodded slowly. Akin's accusation of Price did not seem to surprise him. Moreover, he seemed to be pondering deeply. "It's quite possible," he said. "I didn't know it, but after all the lock is simple and pass-keys are easy to get. No doubt the spy, whoever he was, brought many keys on board with him. I don't mind telling you, Mr. Akin, that somebody did enter this cabin yesterday afternoon, and opened the safe yonder"—Captain Bunker pointed—"and read the sealed instructions that Mr. Archman left with me. Whoever did it probably prepared the bottles and threw them overboard in an effort to inform his employers of our destination."

Akin did not speak, but his little eyes narrowed, and he drew a long breath.

"I thought it might be Price," went on Captain Bunker, "but he seemed to prove an alibi, and I said little, hoping he would betray himself if not alarmed. But now I'll interview him and—that's all, Mr. Akin. I'll see Price and call you, if necessary. If I catch the fellow"—Captain Bunker's jaws hardened ominously—"if I catch him—by the Lord Harry, Mr. Akin, if I catch him, no matter who he is, I'll make him sweat for it."

Akin went out, and Captain Bunker reached over and touched the bell for Price.

Instantly, almost as if the sound had been a signal, a rush of feet sounded on deck overhead, and a chorus of voices rose in excitement. For a moment the captain hesitated, half rising; then, as the noise seemed subsiding, he dropped back in his chair and touched his bell once more.

Almost instantly he heard the crack of a revolver, a cry and a fall.

Bunker sprang across the cabin to his dresser and jerked open the drawer, disclosing a long, blue-barreled revolver. He snatched it up and rushed to the door and through the wardroom to the deck.

But he was too late. As he emerged from the outer door, a dozen men flung themselves upon him. With a yell, he hurled the weapon into the face of the nearest man. Price's face rose before him, and he struck out with his fists and saw the steward go reeling back. Before he could strike again the men were on him and he went down in a whirling mass of legs and arms and straining bodies, from which came the soft, crushing sound of drumming fists. For a moment he struggled desperately; then someone got home upon his head with something far harder than flesh and bone, and his senses fled.

When he came to himself he was back in his cabin, sitting in his own chair. He felt weak and dizzy and half blinded by something that was trickling into his eyes. When he tried to put up his hands to wipe it away he found that his wrists were tightly bound together and that he was lashed to the chair.

A moment later he heard the cabin door open and someone come in. "Wait a minute, captain," said a voice, which he at once knew to be Price's. "Wait a minute and I'll wipe that blood out of your eyes."

A dripping sponge mopped his eyes and forehead, then plopped into a basin, and a towel was pressed to his face.

The next second Price came from behind him and sat down on the other side of the table. He had taken off his steward's apron and had strapped his waist with a belt, in which hung a pistol that Captain Bunker recognized as his own.

"There, captain, that's better," he said smilingly. "I was getting worried about you. You've been dead to the world for an hour. Sorry I had to knock you in the head. Gee! You made a pretty fight of it."

All She Wanted

She was apparently a Frenchwoman who spoke Russian or vice versa, and when she visited the home office she produced her passport over and over again in the course of her conversation with several porters and messengers.

Eventually they found a man who in 1919 had been transferred from the French to the north Russian front. After a long conversation intelligence came to this man. Stopping the woman's conversation with one hand, he beckoned to his colleagues with the other.

"Lady wants a house or a small flat," he said.

Gifts Revealing the Donor's Work

For the Boudoir

That merry pair, Nanette and Rintintin, still hang around milady's boudoir, as a pretty ornament. Here they are, with heads of cotton cloth, painted faces, hair and bodies of white zephyr (wound with black for the feet). Nanette's skirt is of blue zephyr, the tunic white. Rintintin's coat is crocheted of blue and so are their hats and the cord and tassel that suspends them. They are about eight inches tall.

New Breakfast Caps

Don't forget that breakfast caps are among the lovely things that women expect at Christmas. Of the two shown here, the one at the top is of lace and ribbon, with frills of pink, plaited chiffon over the ears. The other is of net and lace with a frill of lace over the nape of the neck, a facing of ribbon at the front and knot and ends of it at the sides.

Will Please Hostesses

Every hostess will be delighted with a gift of place-cards, made for her alone. All that is required to make them is white cardboard and water colors—in the hands of someone clever at painting. Four cards shown here suggest subjects. A colorful butterfly adorns one of them, on another an amusing Chinaman brings his gay lantern, and two droll Dutch figures grin from the others.

Souvenirs for Guests

Here is a pretty favor for guests at a Christmas dinner. It is a cluster of tulips made of crepe paper and tied with ribbon to match in color. The stems are fastened to a disk of cardboard and the petals edged with gilt paint.

Lightning Not Zigzag

Down to the middle of the Nineteenth century people did not even know what lightning looks like! For ages artists had been drawing and painting it in zigzag streaks, with sharp angles. In 1856 James Nasmyth, the famous Scottish engineer, expressed doubts about the existence of such lightning, says Nature Magazine of Washington. Shortly afterward lightning began to be photographed, and it was thus found never to be angular, but always more or less sinuous, like a river with numerous branches.

Thousands Have Kidney Trouble and Never Suspect It

Applicants for Insurance Should Use Swamp-Root

Judging from reports from druggists who are constantly in direct touch with the public, there is one preparation that has been very successful in overcoming these conditions. The mild and healing influence of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root is soon realized. It stands the highest for its remarkable record of success.

An examining physician for one of the prominent Life Insurance Companies, in an interview of the subject, made the astonishing statement that one reason why so many applicants for insurance are rejected is because kidney trouble is so common to the American people, and the large majority of those whose applications are declined do not even suspect that they have the disease. Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root is on sale at all drug stores in bottles of two sizes, medium and large.

However, if you wish first to test this great preparation, send ten cents to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., for a sample bottle. When writing, be sure and mention this paper.—Advertisement

WINSOME CLOTHES FOR GIRLS; SMALL BUT BRILLIANT HATS

"DIFFICULT," and even "awkward," have been applied to the age of the young miss who has passed eleven and is still on her way to seventeen, and sometimes "difficult," at least, is merited. But those who make it a business to create clothes for the young have turned out such winsome things for this between-times period that charm replaces awkwardness and difficulties disappear.

To begin at the beginning, they start out with carefully selected patterns in popular materials. This season they are giving much attention to plain and striped flannels, twills, velveteen, velvet and many dependable woolens. After fabric they consider color, which must contribute a cheerful note to the little maid's winter garb. Plaids in many color combinations, red and gold (or silver) embroidery on dark, plain backgrounds, and other colorful embroideries, sparingly used, tone up the day frocks. The elements of neatness and, above all, simplicity are never forgotten when children's clothes are considered. Collars and cuffs which may be kept fresh are everywhere present.

Simple one-piece straight dresses in brilliant plaids usually fasten to one side and are bound at the edges with black braid. Narrow black leather belts are worn with them. Plaid skirts with plain bodices worn with and are worn with linen collars and cuffs as a finish.

"When she will she will, and when she won't she won't—and she has signified her intention of wearing small, or at most small to medium-small, hats, with her winter furs. Therefore designers of headwear are busy with these small but important affairs, making brilliant gems of millinery, as full of life and sparkle as jewels. Their task is to take the popular, becoming shapes and vary them endlessly, by means of materials and trimmings, so that "age cannot wither nor custom stale" their infinite variety.

It seems a little absurd to speak of age in reference to anything so brief as the career of a dress hat for midwinter. But, as things are, it does its bit for two or three months, before spring turns all heads away from winter. A group of new models, just launched, is shown here. The shapes are almost identical, but each hat has an individuality that gives it distinction. At the top a brilliant satin cile in black makes a background for a shaped band of leopard skin brocade, ending at the sides in metallic ribbon bands that terminate in hanging loops. This is certainly a very original conception and most becoming to certain types of faces.

The bit of splendor at the left is made of velvet, with an aimless pattern of gold braid making a tracery over it. Colored jewels are scattered about in the pattern and, just to show that there is no end to its affluence, a long ostrich fancy falls like a scarf from one side. One can imagine this hat in the rich fuchsia shade, or any other of the season's favorites.

A pretty little hat at the right is made of velvet, embroidered with silk and metallic threads—and thereby hangs a tale. In this instance several tails of brown fur are posed at each side, where two or three of them snuggle against the puff of hair that peeps from under the turban.

A very regal looking affair occupies the center of the group, made of satin, with sectional crown and rich embroidery of colored silk, which probably reveals the glint of metal threads. A close-fitting turban finishes the group, with embroidered crown and facing of metal tissue, which makes a background for ornaments of embroidery and fur.

The all-fur hat is, so far, conspicuous by its absence, but bands, fringes, ornaments and tiny pelts are plentiful in trimmings, which include furs dyed in pastel colors.

Some Winter Millinery.

velveteen jackets make a fine combination for girls in their teens and plain, round linen collars contribute the neck treatment. On younger girls flaring skirts of velveteen, buttoned to long blouses of colored linen (banished with collar in the same material) are found to be becoming. Plain straight overblouses, in many patterns and cheerful colors, like the one pictured, vary the wardrobe of Miss Earlyteens

Back Don't Bother Me Now

Lincoln, Nebraska. — "My back would bother me so and when I had to do any heavy lifting it made me sick to my stomach with the pains in my back. I have my housework to do and four babies to take care of so when I heard of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I took it and I feel better. My back don't bother me and I can eat more and work. Felt Better At Once Volga City, Iowa.—"I will tell you what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound did for me. I was all run down and could hardly be on my feet. I was so cold I could not keep warm. I had numb feelings and then heat flashes would pass over my body. I had severe pains in my sides and was very nervous. I saw your advertisement in the newspapers so I thought I would try your medicine. My husband got me a bottle of the Vegetable Compound and I began to feel better as soon as I started taking it. I have taken it off and on for three years now. I keep house and do all my work for my husband and two little boys and make my garden. I feel fine and I tell others what the medicine has done for me. I think it is the best medicine in the world for women."—Mrs. THOMAS GRINDLE, Volga City, Iowa.

Can Do Any Kind of Work

Fouke, Arkansas.—"I had the 'Flu' and after that I had a pain in my side and was not able to do my work I was so weak. I found an advertisement in a paper and it told what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound would do, and I took it. Now I can do any kind of work I want to. I think every family ought to keep it in the house all the time and I intend to do so."—Mrs. DORA PHILYAW, R.R. No. 2, Fouke, Arkansas.

Over 100,000 women have so far replied to our question, "Have you received benefit from taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound?"

98 per cent of these replies are "Yes."

This shows that 98 out of every 100 women who take this medicine for the ailments for which it is recommended are benefited by it.

This goes to prove that a medicine specialized for certain definite ailments—not a cure-all—can and does do good work. For sale by druggists everywhere.

Laxatives do not overcome constipation

LAXATIVES and cathartics provide temporary relief only. Their continued use leads to permanent injury. In time, says an eminent physician, an almost incalculable amount of harm is done by the use of pills, salts, mineral waters, castor oil and the like.

Physicians advise lubrication for Internal Cleanliness

Medical science has found at last in lubrication a means of overcoming constipation. The gentle lubricant, Nujol, penetrates and softens the hard food waste and thus hastens its passage through and out of the body. Thus, Nujol brings internal cleanliness.

Nujol is used in leading hospitals and is prescribed by physicians throughout the world. Nujol is not a medicine or laxative and cannot gripe. Like pure water, it is harmless.

S. J. B. BROUWER PASSES AWAY AT THE HOME OF HER DAUGHTER, SATURADY ..

s a Patient Sufferer for Nearly Four Years

In the early morning of November ftteenth the soul of Mrs. J. B. rouwer bade farewall to the frail y and took its flight to the eter l home. Almost four years ago was stricken with paralysis and s left almost perfectly helpless r since. To the day it is just ee years ago that her husband s summoned by death, as was also funeral service held just three rs later to the day.

She died in the home of her daugh Mrs. H. L. Suckow in Klemme here she was taken soon after the th of her husband, and cared for r nearly three years.

Mrs. Catherine Brouwer nee Bruns s born in Boehmervold, Eastfres- Germany. There she grew to turity and was married to Mr. M. Brouwer on May 31, 1861. n children were born to them of ich three preceeded the parents death.

In 1868 they came to the United tes and for five years lived in rdin County, Iowa, after which y located in Hancock county, here they lived since, excepting ht years spent in Nebraska.

After living on different farms in vicinity of Garner they moved in Garner about twenty-three years o, where this venerable couple en- ed life to the fullest extent and re most companionable to each er during these declining years. w homes are more happy than r was. This applies also to their rch life and the enjoying of their igious priveleges.

The deceased joined the Method- Episcopal church in 1878 and re- ined a member of the same until ing translated to the Church Triu- phant. Hers was a joyful spirit. e spread sunshine wherever she ppend and thus made and retain- many friends who hilghly respect- her.

The last years of her life were rd years for her as for her daugh- who cared for her . This is ore especially true of the last ar when she was entirely helpless. How she longed to take her flight her heavenly home to be with r Master and meet her loved ones. She is survived by five sons and o daughters. Several of these were ot able to attend the funeral be- use of vas disances.

Funeral services were held in the thodist church in Garner conduct by Rev. Gauger assisted by Rev. n Metre.

SOME POULTRY POINTERS

rplus Cockerals and Non-Producing Hens Should Be Sold

During the summer months man- famers allow their chickens to ift for themselves most of the e, but with the coming of winter is necessary that poultry be fed onsequently it is doubly important at his feed should not be wasted. he poultry extension department, wa State College, issues he follow- g set of rules;

Cull close on old hens. Keep the st and sell the rest.

Well matured pullets make the st producers.

Sell crokerals unfit for breeding rposs.

Be sure hens are free from lice d mites.

Don't overcrowd the fowls.

Outline a breeding system for the ming year.

Be sure to get full value when ying breeding stock.

Reconstruct the hen house during the fall. Damp hen houses are pro- it eaters.

The extension specialists are al- s ready to assist, and to inform purchasers where they can get pure red stock.

LIVESTOCK NEEDS AIR

Ventilation System Increases Milk Production of Dairy Herd.

Air is one of the most important factors influencing the health of farm animals and it is therefore essential that adequate means of ven tilation should be provided for build ing in which animals are kept during the winter.

There are two things which a ventilation system must do according to Dr. C. D. Rice of the veterinary pathology department, Iowa State College. aThese are to supply abundance of fresh air and remove foul air without interf ring with the animals thru the creation of drafts of excessive cold.

The average cow acually breathes 1,180 gallons of air per hour but in order to keep the air fairly fresh. new air must be supplied at the rate of about 590 gallons per minute. The hog breathes 345 gallons per minute. and should have a supply of 172 gallons per minute. while the hen breathes about 9 gallons per minute and should have about 4½ half gallons per minute.

The economical advantage of a proper ventilating system are evident from the results of one experiment in which milk production in a herd of 80 cows was increased by 100 gallons per cow on similar rations, merely through the installation of a ventilation system. Farmers seeking information on the construction of systems get help from county agents, veterinarians, agricultural engineers or they may address the Veterinary Medical Division, Iowa State College, Ames.

IS IT CHEAPER TO RENT THAN TO BUY A FARM

Whether it is cheaper to rent than to buy a farm in this state is aproblem confronting the farmer today

Interesting data bearing on this much discussed question has just been available by the Sears-Roebuck Agricultural Foudation. A government survey covering 283 farms in Hancock county on which cash rents were paid showed than in 1920 the average cash rent was $5.-13 per acre and that the average valuation per acre was $204. This means a gross return to the owner of 2.5 per cent. In the case of other farms in this county which were rent to kinsfolk, the cash rent was $4.98 per acre, which amounted to a gross return to the owner of 2.3 per cent on the rated value ofh is land, which was 214 per acre.

While these figures may not apply with equal force to individual farms in the county, elaborate tests in most counties have shown them to be correct. Furthermore, while it is true that these figures are based on 1920 reports and land values in most states have fallen materially since that time it is believed that cash rents and land values given above may therefore be taken as applying to the present year. State and local taxes in most states, are somewhat higher than in 1920 consequently the net rent income isl w er.

What effect existing conditions will have on farm tenancy in the coming decade there is no forecasting, the foundation states, but i the long run the rate of net reutrns must determine the selling price of land.

A Proclamation

To the People of Iowa:

"Praise God all Creatures here Below"

Our country uniformly observes one day in each year as a special occasion of thanksgiving and prayer; thanksgiving for the abundant blessings bestowed upon us by the Divine Father in the past,and prayer for their unfailing continuance in the future.

We are partcularly fortunate that we live in an era of advanced enlightenment, under the best government ever organized by man, with a flag which symbolizes peace and justice and righteousness wherever it enriches the atmosphere of Heaven. The obscurest citizen in the land is secure in the unabridged right oflife, liberty and the pursuit of happiness, guaranteed to him by the constitution and laws of th United States. We are not distraced by foreign war, nor disturbed by domestic discord. The relations of capital and labor are friendlier than ever before in the history of industry, and a measurable prosperity prevails in every section of the Union. We have more to be grateful for than any similar population in the world: a free Republic, with free homes and free schools and thought and free speech and free labor, a free pulpit and a free press: a free Republic whose enduring example, like the path of the just, is as a shining light which shineth more and more unto the perfect day.

Therefore, complying with a custom which is immemorial and conforming to the proclamation of the President, I, as Governor of Iowa, do hereby designate Thursday, Nvember 27th, 1924, as and I earnestly enjoin upon the people of the State that on that day their ordinary activities be suspended while hey assemble in their usual tabernacles of worship, there to render n fervent piety their devout acknowledgement to Almighty God for the generous bounties he has vouchsafed our Nation from the beginning, and there to present in simple faith their humble entreaty that His benignant guardianship over it may be exercised to the end. I venture to recommend that on this sacred festival the American colors be liberally displayed as evidencing our profound attachment to the democratic institutions whch we are permitted, through His gracious favor, to maintain and enjoy.

In Witness Whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused to be affixed the Great Seal of the State of Iowa.

The Great Seal of the State of Iowa.

Done at Des oMines, this 6th day of November A. D. 1924.

TIME TO CLEAN HENHOUSES

Filth May Be Disastrous to Flock During Severe Winter Weather

Filth is one of the commonest causes of disease in poultry and as winter approaches, poultry sanitation becomes an important consideration. Hens are necessarily confined to the poultry house much of the time during severe weather and special precautions must be taken to avoid disease, according to Dr. Chas. Murray, Iowa State College,

Straw or other litter should be renewed as often it becomes damp, broken or dusty. Dropping boards should be frequently cleaned and to kill vermin it is good practice to coat the perches once or twice a year with a good mixture of equal parts of crank case oil and some commercial disinfectant.

Before the chickens are housed for winter. all nests and removable parts should be loosened from the walls and a litter and filth removed from the house, after which the interior, including the floor. should be scrubbed with hot lye water, using one pound of lye to 40 gallons of water. Following this clean-up. the interior may be whitewashed, which will further help in ridding the house of germs and vermin as well as making it lighter.

WINTER DAIRY RATIONS

Homegrown Feeds Help Solve Problem for Iowa Farmers

The luxuriant pastures of late spring and early fall afford the ideal ration for the dairy cow. Such a ration provides not only sufficient food elements, but combines with these the necessary bulk palatability succulence and variety.

Iowa Farmers are fortunate that they are able very closely to imitate this ideal ration in their wnter feeding operations but using homegrown feeds, declares John M. Shaw, dairy husbandry specialist. Iowa State College. Now that the prices paid for butterfat are inclined to be some lower, the problem of profitable production becomes still more of a problem of making a good ration from home-grown feeds.

Any ration composed principally of home-grown feeds is likely to be sufficient bulky. Succulence and palatability are well taken care of by such feeds as silage and legume hay. The feeds already mentioned, plus corn. oats and a slight amount of somep rotein feed, which may be either home-grown soybeans or purchased oilmeal, will provide plenty of variety.

BOTH KLEMME TEAMS DEFEATED BY LARGE SCORE LAST FRIDAY AT HAYFIELD

Girls Team Shows Some Improvement over Previous Week

Last Friday evening the local cage teams journeyed to Hayfield, to play the Hayfield teams, they had expected an easy victory for both teams, but were unpleasantly surprised when the Hayfield teams proceeded to give both teams a good trouncing, piling up a heavy score.

The boys' team lacked the pep, and team play displayed in former games. They seemed dead on their feet and were unable to hold the Hayfield boys. The Hayfield team was composed chiefly of Freshman, with very little basket ball experience, but they played the game well. presenting a strong five-man defense, which our boys could not cope with. Their basket shooting was also somewhat better than that of Klemme.

Hayfield rang up the first basket and held their lead throughout the game. The final score was 33 to 15 in favor of the Hayfield boys.

The girls game was nearly like the boys'. Hayfield girls drew first blood and finished the game in fine style with a score of 25 to 18.

The Klemme girls showed a marked improvement over their playing in the Rowan game a week ago Their play was much improved over any previous time this season. Lenora Larson played her first game and was high scorer. Neota Ridder was not up to her usual form.

Following is the lineup of both Klemme teams:

Boys' Team.

L. F. Lemke
R. F. Gimer
C. Patet.
L. G. Gibbs.
R. G. Wellemeyer.

Koerner and Turgasen were unable to be in suits, due to injuries.

WATCH SEED CORN NOW

Moth May Eat Kernels—Corbon Bisulfide Will Kill Pest.

Stored seed corn should be carefully watched for the next few weeks to see that it is not damaged by grain moths, especially the Angoumois grain moth, which is especially troublesome this year. This small buff moth lays its eggs on or near the corn. The eggs hatch into minute larvae which bore their way into the kernels where they eat inside of the kernels before emerging as adults. Kernels infected by thtse moths will be totally worthless unless the larvae are killed before they destroy the germ.

Fumigation with carbon bisulfide will rid corn of these pests, according to Dr. Carl J. Drake, state entomologist, Iowa State College, who has had several inquires regarding the moths this fall.

The seed to be fumigated should be placed in an airtight room, bin or other receptacle, the volume of which is known and the bisulfide placed on top of the seed or in a shallow pans at the rate of five to eight pints for every 1,000 cubic feet of space. Fumigation should not be undertaken when the temperature is less than 70 to 75 degrees Fahrenheit. Carbon bisulfide should not be used near a flame of any kind and if used in a room wired for electricity, the current should be turned off to prevent explosion from sparks.

YES IT IS!

You sing a itle song or two,
And have a little chat.
You make a little candy fudge,
And then you take your hatt,
You hold her hand and say good night
As sweety as you can.
Ain't that an awful evening
For a great big healthy man?

Prominent People

J. L. McConaughy New Head of Wesleyan

Dr. James Lukens McConaughy, president of Knox college, at Galesburg, Ill., has been selected at a meeting of trustees in New York as the eleventh president of Wesleyan university at Middletown, Conn., the second layman to be head of the institution. He is thirty-seven years old—and celebrated his birthday by assuming his new responsibilities.

A native of New York city, Doctor McConaughy is a Yale graduate of '09. He took advanced work at Bowdoin and at Dartmouth and obtained his doctorate at Columbia in 1913. He succeeds, as head of Wesleyan, the late Doctor William Arnold Shanklin, who resigned in September of last year and was president emeritus until his recent death.

Immediately after his graduation from Yale, Doctor McConaughy joined the faculties of English and education at Bowdoin, resigning in 1915 to become professor of education at Dartmouth. He became president of Knox college in 1915, serving, at the same time, as professor of education. He published a book on the school drama in 1913.

Dr. David G. Downey, president of the Wesleyan trustees, in announcing the board's choice, said of the new university's head:

"He is, first of all, a man of outstanding and forthright Christian character. He believes that Christian character is the cornerstone of successful life. Sympathetic with the practical idealism of New England, he is pre-eminently qualified to keep Wesleyan in the front rank of the small New England colleges."

Walker Takes Charge of Panama Canal

Col. M. L. Walker, Corps of Engineers, U. S. A. (portrait herewith), has been appointed by President Coolidge governor of the Panama Canal Zone to succeed Col. Jay J. Morrow, who has been connected with the Panama canal since 1915 and resigns to go into the enigneering business in New York. Colonel Walker has been engineer of maintenance of the canal since June, 1921. He has had a long and distinguished service in the Corps of Engineers, United States army, since his graduation from the Military academy in 1893. Col. Harry Burgess, Corps of Engineers, will take the place of Colonel Walker.

In the appointment of Colonel Walker the government continues the practice of placing the administration of the canal in the hands of army engineers trained for the post in long duty as engineers of maintenance under the governor. General Goethals, builder of the canal and its first governor, was succeeded by the man he had trained, Gen. Chester Harding, and the retiring incumbent was long under Governor Harding. He now passes the office onto the engineer who has been closely identified with him in the work, Colonel Walker.

The Panama canal is also a tremendous business concern involving, besides the canal proper, a railroad, repair shops, dry docks, piers, coal, oil and general supply to shipping, and numerous other operations, with the addition of the civil government of the Canal Zone.

Julius Rosenwald to Take Things Easy

Julius Rosenwald (portrait herewith) has decided to take life a little easier. The noted Chicago philanthropist has resigned as president of the big mail order house of which he has been the driving force for 25 years. He will, however, remain in close touch with its affairs, as chairman of the board of directors.

An interesting feature of the change is the fact that Mr. Rosenwald is succeeded by Charles M. Kittle, senior vice president of the Illinois Central railroad. Mr. Kittle's rise to the presidency of a great commercial house reads like a romance. It is another illustration of courage and ambition winning a prominent place in the business world. At fifteen years he was a water boy on a railroad, and at seventeen he was telegraph operator. Then in the following order he became cashier, chief clerk, superintendent of claims, assistant to the vice president and, finally, vice president of the Illinois Central railroad. During the war he was general manager of the I. C. lines and three other roads. In 1921 he married Miss Jane Dabney, 221 East Walton place. Mr. Kittle is forty-four years old.

Julius Rosenwald was born in 1862 at Springfield, Ill., and began his business career with a wholesale clothing concern in New York. His benefactions total several millions.

Persistence, Thy Name Is Sir Thomas

Persistence, thy name is Sir Thomas Lipton! He's after the America's cup again—for the fifth time. He's going to build Shamrock V and hopes the race will be sailed in 1926. And the genial old Irish yachtsman is 'way over seventy—why, he paid his first visit to America in an immigrant ship more than fifty-five years ago! Sir Thomas this time came over on the Leviathan—which is some difference. The veteran yachtsman, with a complexion like a schoolgirl and as chipper as a cricket, was given a noisy and demonstrative welcome to New York.

"I am ready to make a challenge," said Sir Thomas. "A committee of international yacht experts are now meeting in London to determine the size, requirements, etc., of the boats that will participate, and when they are through and I receive their findings I will decide on the type of boat, and early next year I will make the formal announcement of my intention of sending a yacht to America to enter the race for the America's cup. I expect the race will be sailed in 1926. I am still in the racing game. I did a lot of racing and sailing last summer in the waters off the coast of England and France. I will be ready and I have a feeling that I will lift the cup."

Nice Things for Christmas Gifts

Rich Chenille Bag

A gift that is sure to be cherished is shown in the rich shopping bag pictured. It is crocheted of brown chenille with gay flowers introduced on one side. The band and handles at the top are of brown suede leather, and the bag is lined with brown silk. Silk cords slip through slashes in the suede band, to close the bag, and the handle ends are concealed under little triangles of leather.

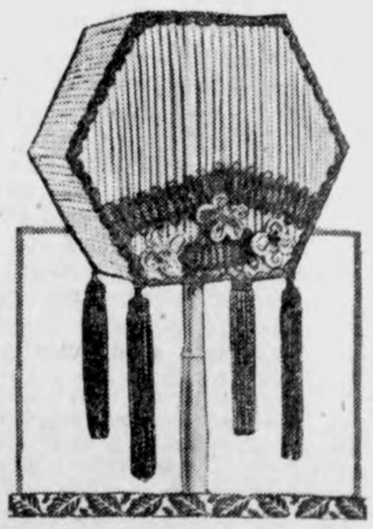
Painted Tally Cards

Among the delightful gifts that even an amateur artist can make are tally and score cards. Every hostess who receives them will be twice pleased, for no gifts are so cherished as those made by the donor. A graceful decorative design is shown in the illustration, simply as a suggestion—for there is no end to the ways in which the characters on playing cards are introduced in decorations.

Dainty Gift Lingerie

This dainty lingerie set is going to make some lucky lady happy at Christmas time—if a hint to the wise is enough. A step-in and chemise are made of fine, light-colored voile and decorated with disks of voile, the size of a silver dollar, in three pretty colors. They are set on with hemstitching in colored threads.

Christmas Lampshades



Happy is the home-maker who receives pretty lamp or candle shades at Christmas time—nothing helps more to deck out the house and make it cheerful. Here is a new shade made of thin silk, or fine crepe paper, in two colors, rose and light blue. A wire frame is first covered with the rose color, put in plain, and over this the light blue is plaited. Gold lace, silk or paper roses and four tassels finish off this novelty in shades.

WINTER'S COAT STYLES; PIQUANT FORMAL FROCKS

CLOTH and fur appear to be made for one another in this winter's handsome coats. They may go their separate ways, for there are all-cloth coats and all-fur coats—but they are in the small minority as compared with the fur-trimmed coats or coats in which cloth and fur are about equally represented.

The demand for the combination of cloth and fur has focused the attention of designers on new ways of using furs and also on emphasizing furs that have not been popularly used heretofore so that the last word in coat style is a word about fur.

Two Stunning Winter Coats.

The two coats pictured are both made of velvety fabrics somewhat akin to soft fur in appearance. At the left a taupe coat of veloria cloth reveals the advantage of its texture and color for combination with Hudson seal. It is an advocate of the straight-front, opening at one side, and sponsors the barrel sleeve. A rich braid supplements the fur emplacements.

Marmot fur makes a luxurious garment of the graceful but simply cut coat at the right, with shawl collar extended into a full-length front panel. There is more fur than cloth in the flaring sleeves. Brown furs are found to harmonize perfectly with many colors for coats. This model can be recommended in brown suede velours with brown fur or in dark green, taupe in any of the velvety fabrics used this season.

Some of the latest arrivals in coats show the use of two colors in the fabric and fur bandings and collar as a finish. Others stress new ways of using furs, which are made into plaid effects combining light and dark furs in bandings. Leopard cat is a bold fur whose beautiful color and black markings combine with beautifully warm brown, black or certain dull shades of green.

Now that winter is coming in, the feminine world is busy making preparations for the pleasant and the gay hours that come with it. Afternoons and evenings full of entertainment—and good works—make being housed up more than tolerable. Femininity is further placated by the new afternoon and evening frocks that replace those of the good old summertime. There is no getting away from the fact that winter clothes are very becoming.

A bevy of new afternoon frocks has arrived, much given to tunics, godets, flares and ripples. The mode is in a gay mood and likes frocks that spell affluence. There is nothing prim about them and it is comforting to consider that fabrics that are not at all expensive have a rich and luxurious look. Metal brocades and laces, crepe satins, delicate chiffons, look fairly regal, but are not out of reach of the modest purse. All that glitters is not gold—but what is the difference if the glitter serves its purpose? Certainly we are deeply indebted to the manufacturers of lovely fabrics.

Taking satins to begin with, designers have made many piquant frocks that depart from the straight-line silhouette without any loss of graceful slenderness. They are more becoming to most figures than the unbroken line of the chemise dress. One of the new arrivals, with a flaring tunic, shows a new development of this popular divertisement of the afternoon frock. It is made of a supple satin and preserves the straight back and front lines that the mode approves. The body of the frock is pointed at the front, giving it a long line which is emphasized by a clever emplacement of embroidery. There is a touch of embroidery on the sleeves, also.

THIS PRESCRIPTION FOR KIDNEYS
No Drugs—Just Roots and Herbs
6 Ounce Bottle, 75 cents

Years ago Dr. Carey said, "When backache comes get after your kidneys—and don't waste any time."

"Right at the start, go to your druggist and ask for Dr. Carey's Marshroot Prescription No. 777; take it as directed until backache ceases and your eyes are clear and bright."

For more than 40 years Dr. Carey specialized in diseases of the kidneys and bladder, and when in the height of his remarkable busy life he decided to dispense his most effective kidney and bladder prescription through the better druggists, he helped thousands who could not afford to go to him for treatment.

Daniel G. Carey, M. D.

Thousands of observant people have kidney ailments and never realize it until too late. High colored urine, getting up in the night, and puffy eyes tell the story.

If you even suspect—start today with Dr. Carey's Marshroot Prescription No. 777. It will drive the poison from your kidneys and your druggist knows all about it.

Druggists dispense lots of it. It comes both in liquid and tablet form. It will help you as it has a host of others. If it should not, if you aren't glad in a week's time that you bought it, money gladly returned—and only 75c. If your local druggist hasn't it he can get it from the Carey Medical Laboratory at Elmira, N. Y.

Road Building Far Behind the Automobile

Millions now recognize the automobile as a necessity. It is no longer a luxury for the few. Sixty per cent of its use is for business.

Because of this the modern paved highway has become an economic necessity.

Yet although the mileage of Concrete Roads and Streets has been steadily increasing, our highway system today lags far behind the automobile. The great majority of our highways are as out of date as the single-track, narrow gauge railway of fifty years ago.

Such a condition not only seriously handicaps the progress of the automobile as a comfortable, profitable means of transportation, but also holds back commercial, industrial and agricultural advancement in practically every section of the country. It is costing taxpayers millions of dollars annually.

Highway building should be continued and enlarged upon.

Your highway authorities are ready to carry on their share of this great public work. But they must have your support. Tell them you are ready to invest in more and wider Concrete Highways now.

The veins in Bunker's forehead swelled. "You infernal scoundrel," he gritted. "I'll—"

"Now, captain!" The ex-steward's voice was wheedling. Evidently he desired, for purposes of his own, to cajole the captain. But his tones rang false. "Don't get excited. You gave me an awful wallop in the eye, but I'm not excited. It's all over. Franks has been wounded and disarmed, and that shrimp Akin has been locked up in his stateroom. Everybody else on board is with us and against you. So, you see, there's no use in making trouble. Keep cool and let's talk things over."

Captain Bunker did not answer. But his eyes burned hot.

Price read them and nodded. "Easy, cap'n, easy!" he counseled. "Easy! Of course you're angry. I'd be angry, too, if I was in your place. Let's take all that for granted and talk sensibly." The man's voice was all that could be desired. But his eyes betrayed his falseness.

"I'll see you hanged for this!" panted the captain.

"Maybe. But not yet a while. I repeat, captain, that you're practically alone on the ship. You notice we're in motion."

Undoubtedly the ship was under way. Bunker had recognized that fact from the first.

"You see," went on the steward, "we're in control. The chief engineer is locked up and the second engineer is with us. You haven't a friend on board."

"It's mutiny, is it?" Captain Bunker's voice had become cold and deadly. The rage that had gripped him seemed to be passing.

"Oh, no, captain. Nothing so crude as mutiny," answered Price reproachfully. "This is piracy—Twentieth-century piracy, polite, courteous and thoughtful. It was all planned out before we left New York, and so far it has worked out beautifully."

"Beautifully? What do you expect to gain?"

"A good many million dollars, captain. We're off to get them now. Your friends ashore precipitated our action a little by trying to signal you. But it was only a question of a few minutes longer, at most. We're bound for the landing place on this island—the right one, you understand. We'll be there in ten minutes, and before we get there I want you to surrender my map."

"Your map?"

"Yes! You've got it, of course. It isn't really important"—in spite of himself the ex-steward's voice quavered—"but I'd like to have it. My whole scheme has worked out so prettily that I hate to slip up even on a minor detail. I'm proud of the thing, you see. It's my first job at sea. I'm a landsman, you know. Banks are my specialty."

"Ah!" Captain Bunker glanced at his safe. "That explains how you got into it so easily."

Price seemed perplexed. "I don't know what you mean!" he said. "But it doesn't matter. What I want is my map!"

"What map?"

"My map of the island—that one you stole from me." Price's voice hardened. "Give it up and I'll land you with the other guys. I sent plenty of grub ashore with them this morning—enough to last a month; and you're sure to be taken off long before it's all gone. Refuse and—well, I'm apt to turn unpleasant." Price did not raise his voice, but he tapped the revolver in his belt.

Captain Bunker recognized the tone and realized what it meant. Nevertheless he shrugged his shoulders. "Price," he said, quietly enough, "you're an infernal scoundrel. No doubt you're a clever one, and know your way about on land. But you're up against a new game now. The sea will beat you. No amateur can buck it. If you go on, you'll be hanged, as sure as you're alive. Return to your duty and—"

"My map, please. Quick! We're stopping."

The propeller had ceased to revolve and the sullen plunge from forward told that the anchor had been dropped. Captain Bunker listened; then he shrugged his shoulders. "I haven't any map of yours," he said. "I haven't any map of the island at all except that on the ship's chart. I haven't seen any except the one that Mrs. Archman took ashore with her—"

"I don't want that one. I want my own; you understand, my own." Price's tones were vicious.

"I haven't got it, and I wouldn't give it to you if I had. You wouldn't keep faith with me. You couldn't keep faith. It would be suicide for you to keep faith. Your pals know this, if you don't. I'll hold no truck with you. And, by G—d! I'll see you hanged for this. There now, go ahead and shoot me if you like, and be done with it. But I'll advise you to load your gun first. If that's my pistol, and I guess it is, it's out of order—or you wouldn't be here."

Price grinned. "Oh, no; it's not out of order. It was the cartridges that were wrong. I took yours out yesterday and put in some others that didn't have any powder in them. But I've real ones in the thing now. Don't make me prove it."

The door opened and a man popped in. "There's a girl just come aboard, cap'n," he cried excitedly. "She says she's the owner's daughter and wants to see Captain Bunker."

Price's eyes widened. "The devil she does! How'd she come here?" he demanded.

"In a rowboat. By herself."

"Did you see where she left the land?" Price's tones were anxious.

"Sure! Just where you said we'd find—"

"Good!" Price slapped his knee jubilantly. "Don't it beat h—l?" he questioned. "The Lord sure does help those that help themselves. She'll be Miss Nellie, of course. Show her in, Jim! Show her in. She's a fine girl, captain."

Bunker tried to struggle to his feet. "You infernal hound!" he roared. "If you hurt a hair of that girl's head—"

"Who's going to hurt her? Keep your shirt on, captain. Keep your shirt on. Didn't I tell you we were nice, ladylike pirates? I'm not going to hurt the lady or let anybody else hurt her—unless she makes me. But I don't think she'll make me. We'll see, anyhow. Show her in, Jim! Show her in. You ought to be glad she turned up, captain. I'm pretty sure she saved your life—for the moment. However—"

He broke off as Nellie Archman opened the door and stood hesitating on the threshold.

CHAPTER XII

Cross and Double Cross

For a full minute Nellie stood in the doorway of the cabin, staring with round eyes at the scene before her—at Captain Bunker's bound form and bloodstreaked face and at the form of the ex-steward as he stood leering by. Then she started forward. "Captain Bunker!" she gasped. "Oh! Oh! What has happened? What does it mean? The sailors acted so strangely and—and now—"

Bunker's face grew grimmer than ever. "It means that this hound here"—he glared at Price—"has led a mutiny and that the scoundrels are in control of the ship. Come in! I'm sorry to see you here, but I think you're safer than you are on deck."

"But—but—you're hurt! You're bleeding!" Nellie ran forward. "Why! You're bound! Oh, how cruel, how wicked!" She swung around on Price. "Cut these ropes at once," she ordered. "At once—do you hear!"

Price shook his head. "I'm sorry, miss," he said; "but I can't. We had a devil of a time before we could tie the captain up and we don't want to have to do it over again. He ain't much hurt, you know."

Nellie stamped her foot. "Then I'll untie him myself," she flashed, and bent to the fastenings.

"Hold on!" A note of sternness crept into Price's voice. "Let those knots alone, lady," he ordered. "If you let the captain loose I'll shoot him. Understand? I was going to do it anyway when you came on board. Just you sit down." The man gestured toward one of the vacant chairs at the table. "I don't want to hurt you or any of your friends; but I'm going through with this thing now, no matter what it costs. Sit down and let's talk things over."

But Nellie shook her head. "No!" she said. "I won't sit down. I'm going to dress Captain Bunker's head. You can talk while I'm working."

"Oh! All right. Just as you like. I did what I could for him, but it wasn't much. I'll be only too glad to have you go ahead. Captain Bunker isn't much hurt, really. His head's too hard."

Price laughed smoothly and easily. His voice had again become obsequious. "I've been trying to persuade the captain here to see sense," he went on, "but he won't do it. Perhaps you will. Anyhow, I'll try. I always try persuasion before I try—er—stronger measures. I want to know all about things ashore here. First, I want to know how many men your father has."

Nellie raised her eyes from the captain's head. "I'll tell you nothing," she said flatly.

"Oh, yes, you will! You'll tell sooner or later, and you'd better tell sooner." For an instant cold ferocity spoke in the man's tone; then he slipped back into his old smooth manner. But a child could have told that it was mocking.

"Maybe you think this is just a sudden flash-in-the-pan mutiny," he said. "It ain't. As I've just been telling the captain, it ain't, rightly speaking, a mutiny at all. It's piracy, planned weeks ago. You remember the night that Morbach was killed?"

"Morbach?" Nellie sought in her memory. "No! Yes! You don't mean that—"

"Yes, I do. I'm the man who carried him into the Grant cottage. No! I didn't kill him. Quite the contrary. He ran me down and came near killing me. He was crazy to see your father and he talked about millions of dollars and all that, you know. Well! That interested me. I was just getting away from New York with my share of the loot of the Steenth National bank and I was ready for a fresh layout. So, to cut the story short, I went out to my buggy and put on another hat and coat and came back and said I was Mr. Akin. Gee! I insulted myself some when I did it. Before I'd be a shrimp like Akin!—However, I got the packet and cleared out. The doctor and the Grant girl were pretty excited, and I got away with the stunt. They'd seen me only a few minutes, and the dim light helped. That was a mighty interesting packet. It held a map, a description of a route, and a good big package of I guess you know what, and a statement that there was about forty million dollars more where it came from. That interested me still more. See! I wanted that forty million dollars. The map was of an island, but it didn't say where the island was. But I guessed your mother knew. So I sent her a copy of the map, with—er—some changes, and watched. Sure nuff she piked straight down to the docks and interviewed our friend the captain here and took passage for the whole family and an extra lot of assorted freaks—"

"My mother? Is she here?" Nellie's eyes grew big.

"Well! Here or hereabouts. No! She ain't aboard, but she ain't far off. She and her friends all came down here with the ship. And I and my friends came along, too. This morning your mother's friends all went ashore, following the map I sent 'em. I sent a lot of grub along, so's they wouldn't suffer while they was waitin' for a ship. Then just as I thought I had everything lovely, I found out somebody'd swiped my map—my own map, y' understand. Course losing it don't do me any real harm, because I reckon I could draw it over again just from memory, but I hate to be stung that way. Besides, it's just possible that I might need it. So I starts to ask the cap'n what he knows about it, when all of a sudden somebody with your crowd begins to wigwag from the mountain top; and the mate starts to answer him; and so—not knowing what he's saying—I tells the boys to take possession and I comes in here and—er—takes possession, too. The captain says he don't know nothing about any map of mine—"

"I don't!" Captain Bunker cut in sharply.

"Well, who in thunder does, then? Those people that went ashore didn't have it, or they'd have gone to the right place instead of the wrong one. If you ain't got it, who has?" Very evidently Price was trying to make his auditors think that he set very little store by the map. But he was not succeeding.

Captain Bunker shrugged his shoulders. "If I'd had it you'd have been in irons now, and my passengers would be safe on board. And while I'm talking, I'll just warn Miss Archman that you're a treacherous hound, and not to be believed on oath. I don't know what your game is, but you're not fooling me one ounce. You haven't told more than half the truth. You haven't told of robbing my safe and opening my sealed orders or of throwing bottles over the side with messages for your consort, or of burning that flare on the taffrail last night."

Price was listening curiously. "Not me," he said finally, entirely disregarding the captain's excoriation. "Not me. I didn't know your papers has been swiped, and I never heard about any bottles. As for the flare—well, 'twa'n't me or mine that burned it. That's straight. But I'll give you a tip. If I was guessin', I'd charge all those things up to one or two of those passengers of yours. A steward gets lots of chances to hear things, and I've been hearing of 'em. Maybe me and my friends have double-crossed you, but unless I miss my guess, the alleged Britisher and that governess have been getting ready to triple-cross you. However, that's all over now. The map never was of much importance, and I don't give a whoop for it now, except to make a clean job. I've got Miss Archman instead, and she's better than a dozen maps."

"I!" Nellie had finished with the sponge and was binding up the captain's head.

"Sure! I've explained things so's you'd understand—that all I want is the money, that I don't want to hurt you, see? Nobody's going to hurt you, if you act proper, and I know you're a-going to."

Cause of Echo

An echo is the repetition of a sound due to its reflection from some distant surface, such as from a building, cliff, cloud or body of water. It must be remembered that sound is transmitted by means of waves through the air. Sound travels very slowly in comparison with light or radio waves. In ordinary air sound waves travel at the rate of about 1,000 feet a second. Now suppose a person is standing 1,000 feet from a reflecting surface such as a hill or cliff. It will take the sound waves set in motion by his voice one second to reach the cliff and it will require the same length of time for the reflecting sound waves to return to the human ear. Therefore two seconds will elapse between the time he shouts and the time he hears the echo of his voice. Repeated echoes are due either to independent deflections of sound from bodies at different distances or to successive reflections.

Billions of Buttons

There are 20,000,000,000 buttons manufactured in this country annually, and the industry has grown to such proportions that it equals, in dollars invested, and value of products, the cutlery industry or the manufacture of oilcloths and linoleum. America has almost a monopoly on the manufacture of vegetable ivory buttons, which are made in enormous quantities from the togua nut. This nut grows plentifully in the northern part of South America and in Panama, and provides the greater part of the buttons used in men's clothing. If all the buttons made in a year in the United States were distributed equally among the population each man, woman and child would receive 182, with a few thousand left over for good measure.

Get rid of constipation by internal cleanliness

HEADACHES, biliousness, sleepless nights, heaviness, are Nature's warning that intestinal poisons are flooding your system. If this is allowed to continue, you may become a victim of serious organic disease.

Laxatives and cathartics do not overcome constipation, says a noted authority, but by their continued use tend only to aggravate the condition and often lead to permanent injury.

Why Physicians Favour Lubrication

Medical science has found at last in lubrication a means of overcoming constipation. The gentle lubricant, Nujol, penetrates and softens the hard food waste and thus hastens its passage through and out of the body. Thus, Nujol brings internal cleanliness.

Nujol is used in leading hospitals and is prescribed by physicians throughout the world. Nujol is not a medicine or laxative and cannot gripe. Like pure water, it is harmless.

Take Nujol regularly and adopt this habit of internal cleanliness. For sale by all druggists.

PROFIT MAKING DAIRY COWS

Offspring of Scrub Sires Generally Do not Pay—$65 to Raise Calf

Raising dairy calves of good breeding is a profitable undertaking on many farms, if proper care and feeding are practiced. It is not generally profitble to keep calves from scrub sires since the cost of rasing a calf is about $65, which is more than animals of scrub breeding are worth.

The calf should have milk from its mother for the first week in order that it may get the benefit of the colostrum milk which is essential in starting out the digestive processes. Up until the younster is three or four weeks old it should receive fresh milk twice or three times daily. Then a gradual chang may be made to skimmilk. The calf may be weaned at four months of age if it has been taught to eat other feeds, accordig to John Shaw, dairy husbandry specialist, Iowa State College, altho milk may be fed profitably hntil thec alf is six months old. All uensils should be kept clean.

Hand-fed calves should be trained early to eat grain. This may be done by supplying small amounts after feeding, so that by the time the feeding of skimmilk begins the calf will be eating one-fourth of a pound of grain mxture per dy. A satisfactory grain mixture consists of three parts each of corn oats and bran to one part of linseed oilmeal as much of this mixture being fed as the calf will clean up.

Silage for calves has been fed with varying degrees of success but at the Iowa experiment station fresh sweet silage gave greater gains at less cost than a ration i which no silege was included. Clover is the best hay, while timothy and oat straw gives fairly satisfactory results. Some feeders like alfalfa for calves, while others think that itc auses scouring Whatever hay is used, the bunks should be kept supplied.

Calves should have access to salt after they are about a month old and fresh water of a moderate temperature should be supplied at least twice daily.

Such a feeding system will put the calves in good shape for turning out on pasture early in thes pring. Self feeding for calves has not proved satisfactory.

Exercise doesn't always increase the size of a muscle. Look at the tongue.

HE'S AN EFFICIENCY CRANK

Marshall County Farmer Handles 150 Acre Farm by Himself

Carl Crouse, an Iowa State College graduate in 1918, is now farming "on his own" near Clemons, Marshall county. Iowa. Mr. Crouse is a crank on efficiency. He believes in getting the most out of his time, his horses and his land. Where the average farmer handles on an average of from 60 to 65 acres of crops per man, Mr. Crouse himself handles 105 acres under his own care. Himself, three work horses and one tractor comprise his labor equipment.

This is the way he does it. On the 105 acres he has a three-year rotation of corn, small grains and clover. Oats is usually the small grain crop. Instead of putting all of the clover plot into clover he puts in only about 25 acres and seeds the remainder to soy beans. Part of the soybeans he harvests for hay and the remainder he harvests for beans. These shelled soybeans he uses for protein for hogs, taking the place of tankage. He then uses a tooth harrow with three horsts, on the soy bean ground in the spring, covering the ground four times, and plants corn in this ground without further plowing. He breaks up the clover sod with tractor. For all early cultivation of corn he uses a tooth harrow and for all later cultivation a two row cultivator.

CELLAR WINTERING OF BEES

Insects Should Be Left Out-of-Doors as Long as Possible.

Beekeepers who practice cellar wintering will find it advantageous to allow the bees to remain out-of doors until weather frbids in order that they may have their last flight as late as possible, since late flights are cleansing ones.

The normal date at which bees may make their last cleansing flight is Thanksgiving, in the latitude of Ames. For the northern line of Iowa it is about two weeks earlier and for the southern line approximately two weeks later.

It is equally as important to get the bees into the cellar before the first severe storm as it is to give them the opporunity for a late flight, according to F. B. Paddock, state apairist. Iowa State College.

He suggests, therefore, that beekeepers ask the nearest weaher bureau station to warn them of the coming of a severe storm. The weather service is glad to help and practically every beekeeper in Iowa may be warned of a storm by telephone at a costs of not ot exceed 25 cents. Beekeepers who do not know which is the nearest station, may writt to Charles R. Reed, Des Moines, or F. B. Paddock, Iowa State College, Ames.

POOR FEED—SICK CHICKS

Good Pvodended Increses Profits Poultry Flock

Poultrymen often blame their failures on the breed of chickens, instead of attributing them to improper management and injudicious feeding, says Wm. H. Lapp extension poultry expert, Iowa State College. Poor feeding is often responsible for the prevalence of disease among chickens, since poorly fed fowls are not disease resistant.

A ration recommended for fall and winter is as follows: equal parts cracked corn, whole oats and cracked wheat fed as a scratch feed at the rate of four pounds in the morning and eight pounds at night for every 100 birds; a mash to be kept before the fowls at all times consisting of 100 pounds ground corn. 200 pounds ground oats, 100 pounds wheat or bran and 50 pounds of tankage. Skimmilk or any form of milk fed consistently to the flock increases profits and healthfulness.

SOME SPECIES OF HAWKS OF BENEFIT TO FARMER

Hawks, it seems, like crows, are not altogether as black as popular fancy has depicted them, according to the Biological Survey of the United State Department of Agriculture. That is to say, there are hawks and hawks. and of hese several species are actually beneficial to the farmer, because they destroy field mice rats, and other rodets, while the species which ocasionally prey on chickens or insectivorous birds does not warrant the wholesale slaughter of hawks regardless of species.

An instance is told of a hawk shot on emerging from a poultry yard with something clutched in its claws When the bird fell it was found with its tallons firmly embedded in a large Norway rat which evidently had been stealing thec hicknes the hawk was suspected of taking.

From time to time the Biological Survey receives that country-wide campaigns against hawks are being conducter in spite of the innocense of such species as the red shouldered hawk the Swainson hawk, and the rough-legged hawk.

From the evedince presented by scalps submitted by bounty hunters it is apparent that such hunters do not distinguish between beneficial and injurious species. The extermination of benefical speces means the ncrease of insect anr rodent pests on which these birds live. In theopinionofthebureau it is a good rule not to kill hawks, altho in a case where an individual hawk is unmistakably detected in them idst of its depredations an exception might be made, as with any other marauder.

2,000 HOMELESS IN $5,000,000 FIRE

Tenements Destroyed by Blaze Which Sweeps Part of Jersey City.

New York.—Dozens of tenements were destroyed, 2,000 persons were rendered homeless and damages estimated at more than $5,000,000 resulted from a fire that started in the potassium nitrate plant of the Richardson Chermical company in Jersey City. The blaze was finally brought under control after five hours of desperate fighting.

The entire Jersey City waterfront was rocked by a series of explosions in the chemical plant. Windows were blown out in an area of 20 blocks around the plants.

Fifteen firemen were taken to hospitals suffering from burns and smoke, while more than forty others, including several civilians, were treated for cuts, smoke inhalation and burns. At least a dozen were temporarily blinded by the saltpeter.

Thirty pieces of New York's fire apparatus, fireboats, several railroad tugboats aided the firemen in stopping the terrific blaze. When the waterfront was threatened by the spreading flames, dynamite was exploded.

A deluge of water prevented the explosion of six tons of explosive soap materials stored in a tunnel between the abandoned American Sugar Refinery building across the street from the chemical plant, which threatened a greater explosion.

U. S. Exports for October Total $527,000,000

Washington.—Export trade is booming in notable fashion, judging from figures for October made public by the Department of Commerce.

The value of exports reached $527,000,000, nearly double the total for July and the largest amount in any month since January, 1921. The total was considerably more than double the average in 1913, the last prewar year.

Imports in October increased to a total of $310,000,000. The excess of exports over imports for the month was $217,000,000.

This situation has been due in large measure to the extraordinary large volume of cotton and wheat shipments from this country and to the high prices paid by the foreign importer for these American commodities.

Los Angeles Murder Bares Big Jewel Plot

Washington.—Two dramatic developments came in the mysterious murder of Harry Katz, diamond broker, in Los Angeles.

Smuggled jewels of enormous value were said to have been seized among the possessions of Mrs. Mors and Katz, and further seizures are expected.

POST OFFICE BLAST KILLS 2, INJURES 12

Explosion Causes Panic at Grand Rapids, Mich.

Grand Rapids, Mich.—Two men are dead, another is expected to die, and twelve persons are seriously injured as the result of a mysterious explosion which wrecked the lower part of the federal building and post office here.

Two theories are entertained by the police and federal officials. One is the bomb theory, although little has been found thus far to substantiate it.

The other is that an accidental explosion of gas occurred. In support of this theory several federal officials and post office employees say an odor of gas had been noticed for several days.

It is believed that an underground pipe may have leaked until the accumulation of gas exploded.

Ernest Roth, a driver, and Herman Pettersch are dead.

Postmaster Robert G. Hill estimated that the property loss was at least $50,000, in addition to whatever valuables in the mails may have been destroyed.

The blast caused a panic in the heart of the business section of the city.

Hill Acquitted by Jury; Wants Beer Bill Passed

Baltimore, Md.—Representative John Philip Hill of Baltimore, who was acquitted of charges of violations of the prohibition law, by a jury in the United States court, declared after the verdict that the finding gave him an opportunity to go before congress and demand modification of the Volstead act, and the passage of his 2.75 per cent beer bill on the grounds that the Volstead act, in its present form, discriminates and is unfair.

The indictment against Colonel Hill accused him of the illegal manufacture and possession of wine and cider and maintaining a nuisance in his home. The latter charge was dismissed on the ground of insufficient evidence.

COOLIDGE WARNS OF FOOD SHORTAGE

Says Fortunes of All of Us Will Go Up or Down With Farmers.

Washington. — Maintenance of the American "superior level of human comfort and well-being will require that our agriculture be made and kept the most efficient in the world," President Coolidge said in an address before a meeting of the Association of Land Grant Colleges.

The President emphasized the point that "the fortunes of all of us will in the end go up or down," with the farmer's, and warned against permitting "our farming population to fall to the level of a mere agricultural peasantry."

"The real problem of our long future," Mr. Coolidge said, is "the problem of maintaining a prosperous self-reliant, confident agriculture in a country preponderantly commercial and industrial."

In this connection the President continued:

"It has been attested by all experience that agriculture tends to discouragement and decadence wherever the predominant interests of a country turn to manufacture and trade. We must prevent that in America.

"It is true there are some countries in which the balance of these elements has been so well maintained that agriculture has continued to flourish alongside prosperous industries and successful commerce. But these are found where the population is approximately static and the community comparatively self-contained.

"It is not our destiny to be a community of that kind. We must look forward to a long-continued increase of population."

The President pointed out that the present-day farmer is not only a producer, he is likewise a merchant," and then added:

"It does him no good to get quantity production; in fact, it may do him harm, unless he can likewise have a scientific marketing. I feel that too little thought has been given to this most important phase of agriculture.

"I want to see courses in co-operative marketing and farm economics alongside of soil chemistry and animal husbandry. The agricultural problem of today is not on the side of production, but on the side of distribution. I want to see a good farmer on a good farm raise a good crop and secure a good price."

Mr. Coolidge laid emphasis on the assertion that "we are not nearly a generation ahead of the time when our country will witness a reversal in its relation to world agriculture." Within "a very few years," he said, the United States will be "among the nations producing a deficit rather than a surplus of agriculture staples." The artificial stimulation of the World war, he asserted, came when the country was "fairly on the verge of that condition."

"Even today, if in making up our balance sheet we include our requirements of coffee, tea, sugar and wool, we already have a considerable agricultural deficit. It may not be generally known, but even now we consume more calories of food than we produce. The main reason is that we do not raise near enough sugar.

"Our only agricultural exports of consequence are cotton, meat products and wheat; and as to the two latter it must be plain that the scales will shortly turn against us. We shall be not only an agricultural importing nation, but in the lives of many who are now among us we are likely to be one of the greatest of agricultural buying nations."

PLAN TO PUT ALL ON EQUAL BASIS

A plan formulated by A. Fick of Boone, Iowa, to place the burden of war equally upon all shoulders is unique in some particulars. The plan, as suggested by Mr. Fick, follows:

"Now that Defense day is over and an inventory has been taken of the man power available in case of war, it behooves us to find out what wealth is available and also what steps can be taken to make war less probable in the future. I would suggest the following," declared Mr. Fick: "That in case of war, the government take over all industries and make every one work for the same pay as the soldier, which at the present time is one dollar per day and keep. In case of families, every one capable of working should work, and the government should take care of the children and the sick. I believe food should be dished out to private families the same as to the soldier, the government taking over everything, the grocery stores included, the clerks working for one dollar per day. The sick should be taken care of in government hospitals, the children should go to school to teachers paid one dollar per day, doctors should get but one dollar per day, the women should be cooks and nurses at one dollar per day. All able men should go to the front, except those needed to transact other business."

Mr. Fick further pointed out: "If the government took over all industries, and put everyone on an equal basis, during the war, there would be no soaring prices, there would be no millionaires made through the distress of others. There would be no one left at home to draw immense wages while the boys are sacrificing their lives at the front. Can anyone be a true patriot when he is willing that the other fellow risk his life for one dollar and keep, if he or she does not even want to work in safety for the same pay as the soldier? Such a patriot can salute the flag, cheer the armies as they go by to the front, as long as he is making a good living, but put him on the same payroll as the soldier and he will tell you you are talking against your country.

"Besides the above I think those who do the fighting should have the say whether or not there should be war, except in case of invasion, when every true American will jump to the defense of his country without waiting for the call to arms. In conclusion I want to reiterate that I believe there is no better organization than the American Legion to take up this question of equal burden in time of war."

The American Legion for some time past has been sponsoring a plan known as the "Universal Draft" which calls for the drafting of all industry as well as man power in time of war.

Twenty Thousand Raised to Build New Club House

Two hours to raise the $20,000 necessary to build their club house is the record of frenzied finance established by the Theodore Roosevelt post of the American Legion at Enumclaw, Wash., and this despite the fact that Enumclaw is no metropolis. Pressed for details of the accomplishment, William Burns, post commander, nonchalantly remarked: "Well, it was simple: To begin with, we have a good live membership, one of the livest Auxiliary units found anywhere, and a very live bunch of citizens behind us. We issued $20,000 worth of bonds (6 per cent, ten years) which were all grabbed up in less than two hours by Legion members and local citizens. That's all there was to it."

Legion Memorial Will Yield Profit to Post

According to plans prepared by Charles P. Nieder, chairman of the Legion board of architects assigned to draw up plans for the American Legion memorial building at Miami, Fla., the building will not only be one of the finest memorial buildings in the country, but will be self-supporting. The plans call for four stories, to contain 40 offices, which, it is calculated, will produce sufficient income from rentals not only to pay for the building but also to yield a considerable profit to the post. The building will contain one of the finest auditoriums in the city, a roof tea garden and other attractive features. It will cost approximately $250,000.

Post for Women Only

The foundation of a second post of the American Legion at Hollywood, Cal., to be composed entirely of women who were in service during the World war, is planned by a group of former army nurses, it was announced recently by Adjt. T. E. Ferguson of the present Legion post at Hollywood. It is estimated that there are between 50 and 75 eligible for membership in the proposed post.

Enjoy Fish Derby

A fish derby was the feature of the first annual picnic of the Ramsey county central committee of the American Legion, St. Paul, Minn. At the sound of a whistle the fishermen baited hooks, rushed for their boats and fished desperately. The first men to return with a fry measuring at least four inches from tail to snout was crowned the winner.

Fire Prevention "Don'ts" Worth Keeping in Mind

Precautions demanded by ordinary regard for safety were outlined in a list of "Don'ts" made public by Fire Chief Watson of Buffalo, N. Y., as a part of the educational campaign of Fire Prevention week. The "Don'ts" follow:

Don't use gasoline or other volatile liquids to remove spots from clothing.

Don't throw your lighted matches or smoking material where they can possibly cause fire.

Don't smoke in bed; perhaps those guilty of this practice are too green to burn, but the beds are not.

Don't let children play with matches or bonfires.

Don't fail to have your defective chimneys or flues mended.

Don't forget to have the soot removed from your smoke pipe; if not cleaned the pipe may overheat and start a fire when you operate the furnace.

Don't forget to protect walls, ceilings and partitions from the overheating of stoves, furnaces and pipes.

Don't put hot ashes into wooden boxes or barrels.

Don't fill oil lamps or stoves by open-flame light.

Don't let rubbish accumulate.

Install a fire extinguisher in your home. It may save the life of a member of your family.

Coal may be scarce this winter. If you use some substitute in order to heat your home, do not fail to have the apparatus properly installed and operated. Makeshift installations may result in the loss of your home.

Owner of Home Has Stake in Community

The question of owning a home is one which presents itself with ever-increasing force to every young husband and wife, and must be answered sooner or later one way or the other, says the Atlanta Constitution. Owning a home is not such a difficult matter as it appears to some. Like many other things in life, it consists chiefly in determination—making up your mind that you will have one.

No doubt there are many young people renting homes in every city who could easily have a home of their own. Homes of all kinds, located in attractive surroundings, can be bought on terms almost like rent; and there are many marked advantages in owning your home. In the first place, the sense of ownership gives you a stimulating interest in your surroundings. You become a part of the community—a sharer in its responsibilities, its aims and its ambitions—and a partaker in its rewards.

Owning one's home stimulates one's self-regard and supplies the driving motive for other undertakings.

One of the most important decisions that any young man can make, after he has found his job and his lifemate, is to own his home.

Restoring Old Houses

Restoration of old houses to modernize them without destroying their architectural beauty, and remodeling of old structures of the "twilight zone" of American architecture to make them harmonize with modern ideas is becoming a common practice in American cities and towns, the National Lumber Manufacturers' association says in a recent bulletin.

Houses built from 15 to 50 years ago are generally more sturdily constructed than those built within the last decade. Many of these old houses need but slight alterations to transform them into attractive modern homes good for as many years of service as one can expect from the average moderate-priced new house built today.

Excellent Shade Trees

Black walnuts are fine shade trees and grow quite rapidly. They produce nuts whose merit is recognized by all good cooks and their wood is the most expensive of native woods. The ginkgo biloba, or maiden hair tree, which has a leaf shaped like that of the maiden hair fern and which grows in a perfect cone, is much used for parkway plantings in eastern cities and does well. It is especially immune from insect and disease attacks.

Progress All Along Line

Better homes make better citizens, better citizens make better cities, and better cities mean a safer, stronger and happier nation than this republic could be if its great centers of population, industry, commerce and wealth were less sound at the core and less eager for solid and enduring progress. —Exchange.

Making Zoning Effective

The people of the United States are showing an increased interest in zoning to control the use, height and area of buildings in various districts of their communities, and in consequence zoning laws have been enacted or are being considered by nearly every state in the Union. The first step is to adopt a state zoning enabling act after which the authorities of the cities, towns, borough, villages or other municipalities may adopt zoning ordinances to fit local conditions.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Made Mrs. Dube Well and Strong

E. Hartford, Conn.—"After a severe sickness I was so weak that I could not do my housework, so my mother told me to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I am taking the Vegetable Compound right along while nursing. The baby seems to be in good health, and my friends say they see a big change for the better in me."—Mrs. EUGENE DUBE, 59 Woodbridge Street, East Hartford, Connecticut.

The Vegetable Compound is a splendid medicine to bring back health and strength. Many mothers have found this true, as did Mrs. Dube. Ask some of your neighbors and friends, for there are women everywhere who know by experience the value of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

New Way to Plant Trees

A method of tree planting which is claimed to save six years' growth has been developed by the German department of forestry. The roots of the baby trees are spread in the way nature intended, instead of up and down as is usually done. German foresters also say that packing the earth about young trees is wrong, as it robs the roots of breathing space.

Ample Space Especially Needed When Confind in Henhouses

Laying hens should have plenty of room while they are confined to the house during the winter. For best results each hen should be allowed four square feet of floor space. A house 20 x 20 feet will accomodate 100 hens. Dropping boards should bep rovided so as to leave all the floor space for scratching. Such an arrangement also reduced the chance for disease spread thru droppings.

Improper ventiltion is largely responsible for colds which often terminate in roup and diphtheria, according to Dr. Chas. Murray, professor of veterinary investigations, Iowa State College. Fowls need little heat if kept active and there is no danger of them getting too much fresh air if it does not reach them in drafts. Liberal sized openings should be provided in the house. These may be closed with muslin or burlap in very severe weather.

A satisfactory type of house for this climate is the semi-monitor which has an entire open front equiped with cloth curtains for closing in bad weather. This type also has an upper row of windows which furnishes light for the rear of the house and lets out bad air.

PUTTING PENNIES IN THE BOX

I'm Uncle Sam's most favored pet,
I'm hearty and I'm hale;
I've nothing else in this world to do
But glide around with the mail;
But one thing almost breaks my heart
And my nervous system shocks;
It's the everlasting pennies
That Im fishing from the box.

I carry stamps and envelopes,
And postal cards and such
And I would like to sell a few—
'T'would please me very much;
But a man can't sell unless you buy,
No matter how he talks;
So I keep on diving
After pennies in the box.

It's oll right in the springtime,
Or when summer breezes blow;
But it's a different proposition
When it's thirty-two below;
When all your fingers and your toes
Are frozen hard as rocks,
It's most anything but funny
Scratching pennies from the box.

And, now quite confidentialy,
I'l te you something more;
A rural carrier (way out west)
Forgot himself ond swore;
Says he:"I can stand the snow drifts
I can stand the frozen locks,
But blast the measly pennies
In the blasted measly box.

When "the roll is called up yonder,'
And we shall gather there.
They wouldn't let a mail man in
If they knew he'd learned to swear
If you want St.Peter to open the gate
When your rural carrier knocks,
Buy stamps and don't be guilty
Of putting pennies in the obx.

GRADE HOLSTEIN WINS

Four-Year Old Heifer Produces 20,889 Pounds of Milk in Year

"Granny," 4-year old grade Holstein heifer, owned by Virgil Cook, of Goodelll, Iowa, carried off highest milk production honors in the state, last year, according to records just compiled. 'Granny" was highest over all breeds. She produced 20,889 pounds of milk and 738.6 pounds of fat.

"Granny" had 335 production days out of the year, being allowed a 30-day dry period for a rest. The total value of her product was $336.85, and the feed cost $131.34, leaving a net profit of $227.51. Her feed thruout the year consisted of silage clover. green corn, soybean hay, corn and cob meal, cracked corn, oat bran and oilmeal, as the season dictated.

STATE OF IOWA
Executive Department

A PROCLAMATION

TO THE PEOPLE OF IOWA:

"I think that saving a little child
And bringing him to his own,
Is a derned sight better business
Than loafing around the throne."

Thus John Hay in a ballad written from the soul has epitomized our true philosophy toward all the little ones of the earth. The children of theUnited States, tenderly cherished in homes soundly educated in schools, morally instructed in churches, are in the enjoyment of every benefit and blessing conferred by a highly organized society. With their present comfort provided and their future welfare assured, they constitute the happiness and the hope of our beloved democracy. In the ripened fullness of this autumnal season, when every granary is bursting with the plenty bestowed by a bounteous Father, do we not in simple gratitude owe some substantial consideration to the sorely distressed of other lands? The tragedy of the great war rendered without home or school or church or family or food or clothing, a countless multitude of innocent and helpless boys and girls who have been rescued from starvation only by the generous outpouring of American philanthropy. It would be a harrowing task to recite the pitiable conditions of privation and poverty and want which exist in such awful reality in the terribly devasted territories of Europe and Asia. They cannot be even referred to in the general terms without lacerating with agony every benevolent heart which responds to the Christ passion.

Many centuries ago there was uttered the sublimest sentiment that was ever issued from human lips:

"Whatsover ye would that men should do to you, de we even to them."

What a paradise this world would be if all men literally obeyed that divine injunction! What a heaven would be introcisely what he would have that other do unto him! We have not yet attained to that millennial perfection, but only insofar as we have exemplified the inspired precept of the great Galilean have we advanced from barbarism to civilization. It is now proposed that one day he appointed upon which the exalted maxim pronounced by the Master may be universolly observed, and it is a solemn priviledge to employ whatever of influence may attach to the Executive Office in the promotion of that transcendant objct.

Therefore, in virtue of the authority vested in me as the Governor of Iowa, I hereby designate December 7, 1924, as on which sacrd day the duty may be presented to us to reognize our obligation of fraternal fellowship toward prostrate peoples of the earth, and to redeem that obligation in a high spirit of Christian helpfulness.

I especially appeal to every citizen of the commonwealth to vitalize the golden rule as a principle of international intercourse by reducing his Sunday dinner to the frugal menu provided the beggard outcasts in the Near East Orphanages, and by donating the amount thus economized from his usual elaborate repast to the relief of the perishing children of the Orient. I earnestly enjoin upon every man, woman and child in the State that on the date indicated they contribute most liberally of their abundance to the charitable requiremens of those abandoned little ones who are now in the abjectest adversity. If the gift shall involve some individual sacrifice, we may not doubt that it will be all the more pleasing to Him who said.

"Suffer little children to come unto Me, for of such is the Kingdom of Heaven."

I particularly invoke the united co-operation of the Pulpit as the great instrumentality of righteousness, and of the Press as the vast agency of enlightenment, in he arousal of the public intrest in this unselfish and humanitarian enterprise.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, I have hereunto set my hand and caused to be affixed the Great Seal of the State of Iowa.

Done at Des Moines, this 11th day of November, A. D., 1924.

POOR LIGHTS COST MUCH

Improper and Insufficient Lighting Cost Nation $130,000,000

One hundred thirty million of dollars is the annual loss to the country as a reseult of improper or insufficient lighting, according to the lighting experts.

To bring this situation to the attention of the people, lighing industries in he United States and Canada are putting on an educational campaign this fall. In line with the movement, William Kunerth physics department, Iowa State College, has listed several points to look out for:

1. Turn off lamps when not in use.
2. Use only most efficient lamps.
3. Use reflectors of correct size and type.
4. It is cheaper to pay for correct lighting now than to pay the oculist a little later. For every unjust demand youth make upon the eye, old age pays compound interest.
5. The power to learn and the power to earn demand alike upon the possession of good eyes.

MESERVEY TO VOTE ON SCHOOL SPLIT

Mrs. Tanner Sets Dec. 2 as Date of Election for Dissolution.

A special election is to be held in the Meservey school district Tuesday Dec. 2 for the purpose of determinin whether or not a dissolution of the consolidated school is to take place.

The ballots, which are now being printed specify that the dissolution shall break up the district into four smaller districts. The judges, appoined by Mrs. Pearl Tanner, county superintendent of schools, are Frank Hafferman, C. Bier and Theodore Wendel. The polling place is to be open from 1 o'clock until 6 o'clock in the afternoon.

The Meservey consolidated districts lies in four counties, Franklin Wright, Hancock and Cerro Gordo.

PROPOSED PLAN OF IOWA GOOD ASSOCIATION WOULD PULL IOWA OUT OF MUD IN 6 YRS

A Gasoline Tax Would Be the Only Extra Tax

Newton, Ia., Nov 26 — "In analyzing Iowa's road problem, the people should consider the cost of operation of their 600,000 motor vehicles, as well as the cost of the highways", H. B. Allfree, President of the Iowa Good Roads Association, said today.

In 1923, there was spent in Iowa $31,000,000 for cnostruction and maintenance of township, county, county and primary roads, Mr. Allfree declared. Durin this same period, the people of Iowa spent $200,000,000 in operating motor vehicles over these roads.

"Experts delcare this operotion bill can be reduced 25 percent by grading, graveling and paving," Mr. Allfree said. "But if we reduc eoperation cost only 10 percent, we will save motorists of the state $20,000,000 a year."

After years of study ,the State Highway commission has concluded that on about 3,520 miles of the primary road system, traffic is now too heavy for gravel roads and that amount of mileage should be hard surfaced, 405 miles of his system already having been paved.

By paving the additional 3115 miles, every county seat town in Iowa will be on a paved road that connects with the main, state-wide system, including all interstate highways and main arteries of traffic.

Traffic on the remaining 3,140 miles of the primary road system is such that ag ravel surface is sufficient at this time. These roads are inter-county roads, constituting feeders to the main raveled highways.

The graveling of this mileage of the primary road system will put at least one gravel road or paved highway eas and west and north and south across every county in thes tate, connecting with every city ad every town with a population of 1,000 or more.

"It would be just as uneconomical and foolish to build a paved road on a highway having a traffic of 100 vehicles, as to build a gravel road on a highway hovin 5,000 vehicles a day," Mr. Allfree said is emphasizing that thep rogram of the Association is solid and practical .

An issue of $85,000,000 seriel bonds would mae it possible to complete primary road system improments in six years after bonds were sold, he declared. This bond issue can be retired, both as to principal and interest in 15 years, from the present primary road fund, plus one third of a proposed gasoline tax of two cents a gallon, without and additional tax whatever, or without any increase in motor license fees.

Two-thirds of the revenue from the proposed gas tax, yielding about $3,000,000 a year, would be used for county road improvements making it possible to complete the grading of the remaining 8,000 miles of the secondary road system in a period of opproximately eight years.

AMES READY FOR TESTS AT GARNER

Hancock Now Know as "Iowa's Rural Community for Electrical Developement

Ames— Garner is to be the field labratory in conducting experimental work in the application of electricity to agriculture. Garner is now known as "Iowa's Rural Community for Electrical Developement," and the work will bec arried on under the auspices of the state committee on the relation of eleltriiity to agriculure, which in turn is working under a national committee. Similar projects have been started in many states.

In the Iowa project at Garner, three committees are working on the plan, a state committee, on from Iowa State colege, and a committee of Garner citizens. Garner was selected, because of its being a typical Iowa rural community. The 63 farmers included in the project are those served by three lines of the Iowa Falls Electric company's substation at Garner.

Paine to Be in Charge

Direction of the work will be in theh ands of Frank D. Paine of the electrical engineering department. Franklni J. Zink, a graduate agricultural engineer, will devote all his time to the project and Prof. J. B. Davidson, head of the agricultural engineering department. Iowa State College, who is a member of both the national and the state committees will serve as a consulting engineer and advisor.

Before the work is started a preliminary survey must be made of the agricultural and engineering phases of the community. Complete records of the land and what is produced, the homestead with the arrangement of the farm buildings, the farm home and its equipment, details of all work done, the way it is done and thec ost of operation, will be included in the agricultural survey. The engineering department survey includes a study of present electric service, method of financing, the kilowatt hours used by the farmer and what they are used for, the electricity cost to the farmer, the efficiency of the transmission and all fo the electrical devices now in use.

Tests are Planned.

After thep reliminary surveys have been made the experimen will try to bring out the following things: practicability and cost of driving farm machinery with electric motors applications of electric equipment to forms and in the labratories of the equipment better suited to farm needs and a study of the economics of farm production as reated to the application of electricity.

Experimental work will be carried on both in Garner on the individual farms and n the labratories of the Iowa State College. Devices and equpment will be tried out both in labratories and on the farm. A complete record of work done, improvements made and the cost will be kept. In orded to make a success of the project electrical equipment manufacturers will bec alled upon to loan electrical equipment for experimental purposes.

Members of the Garner committee are Ed Quintus, Rex Shannon and George Lawhorn.

TWIN LAKES ARE NOW BEING RESTOCKED WITH GAME FISH

Wm. H. Enabnt, deputy game ward en was busy Tuesday afternoon putting a shipment of abount 6000 black bass, silver bass, pike, perch, bluegills and crappies into the east lake.

These fish which were reclaimed from the lake and sloughs surrounding Sabula, Iowa and were brought here in cans by Floyd Babcock, who has spent nine years in seining and transporting fish. Other shipments are due here in the near future and some will be placed in the west lake. This means better fishing in these lakes in a few years.— Kanawha Reporter.

Price lay back in his chair. "You know the way to the place where the mazoosalum—otherwise the forty millions—are waiting. I know the road starts near here. I'd picked the place from what the map said, and the boys tell me you came out right there. An' I think I know the rest of the way. But I ain't taking any chances. I want to know just what I've got to go against, and you've got to tell me. If you do, and if I find out you've told me the truth, I'll put you and the captain ashore. See! If you refuse, I'll make you wish you hadn't. And if you lie to me I'll—well, I've got you and your friends in the hollow of my hand. It'll be easy enough to find that mother and sister of yours and—well, we'll find 'em, all right. So you better speak up and speak quick."

The girl's face was colorless and her breath came in gasps. "I won't trust you," she gasped. "You wouldn't keep your word."

"Yes! I will! I swear it!"

Nellie's lips tightened. "I don't believe you. I won't trust you. If you have robbed and murdered, you'll lie, too. I'll tell you nothing."

Price sprang to his feet. The mask dropped from his face. "You little cat!" he yelled. "I'll—" He paused, holding himself in restraint by a mighty effort. "All right," he went on. "I won't crowd you. We don't start till daylight, and I'll give you till then to come to your senses. Sleep on it. I guess you'll come around. I've got ways of persuading people—especially girls—who play ugly. However, sleep on it. Now, I'll just lock you up in your mother's stateroom for the night. If you'll come along—" Price got up and waved his hand toward the door.

But the girl stood still. "I'm not going to leave this room," she declared. "I'm going to stay with Captain Bunker. I want to talk with him, and I'm going to do it. If you're afraid to leave a wounded man and a girl alone to conspire, you can stay and watch us."

Price shrugged his shoulders. The girl's defiance seemed to amuse him. "Oh, no! I'm not afraid," he chuckled. "But there's no use in taking chances. Besides, as I told you before, we don't want another fight with Captain Bunker. He's no cripple with his fists. Witness my eye." Price pointed to his damaged optic. "If you want to stay and consult with him you may, but you'll stay tied in your chair; see? Take your choice." The man picked up a piece of rope that lay on the floor and stood, waiting.

Nellie hesitated. She hated being tied, of course, but she hated still more being forced away from her only friend, helpless though the latter might be. "I'll stay," she decided.

"All right! Sit down."

Nellie sat down hesitatingly enough; and Price bound her firmly in her chair.

"Now we're all right," he said. "And I can tear myself away without feeling that you'll miss me. I'm treating you both as fair as I can. And I'm going to keep on treating you both as fair as you'll let me. But I'll just remind you that I've got some mighty bad characters among my men. I'll protect you if I can. But if we lost that forty millions by any chance I'm afraid it would be tolerably rough on you. See!"

Price walked to the door. "I'll be back later," he said, and closed and locked it behind him.

Half an hour later he came back bearing a loaded tray. "I guess you'll be ready for some supper," he began cheerily, as he crossed the threshold. "I don't want to starve you, and—D—n!"

With a curse the man broke off. The room was empty. Captain Bunker and Nellie had disappeared.

CHAPTER XIII

The Robe of Mystery.

The swift-falling tropic night came like a pall as the six adventurers descended the mountain, stumbling over rocks unseen in the darkness, tripping over vines, crashing against trees that seemed to rise maliciously in the way, and shrinking from the back lash of branches pushed aside. Roundabout, among the trees, great ghost blossoms, white blooms of night-loving plants, nodding in slender stems, filled the air with cloying perfumes. Above them fluttered myriads of night moths. Over all, through the interstices of the trees, stretched the black sky across which unfamiliar constellations swung so splendidly that one could almost hear them rumble as they moved.

The adventurers were going back to the landing place because they had nowhere else to go. At the landing they would at least find water and food, and there, perhaps, they would find a boat waiting to take them back to the ship. Collins and Lord George might say what they would, the rest could not wholly believe that the apparently obedient and mild-mannered crew of the El Rio could suddenly have turned into mutineers and pirates. Some other explanation, they believed, would be found for all they had witnessed.

Nevertheless, when they had descended the last foot of the perilous pathway and came out on the few square yards of sandy beach and saw no boat, the hearts of the women failed them, and the men seemed unable to find adequate words of cheer. Had not Miss Denslow, mastering or putting behind her own fears, taken the situation resolutely in hand, the other women would have become hysterical.

Miss Denslow, however, took command. "When in doubt, eat," she said. "There are two ships lying out in the bay and one or the other of them will be sure to send in for us sooner or later. I don't know what that destroyer was watching us for, and just now I don't care. If they really were watching, they'll know we have come ashore and they can hardly help but know that something's gone wrong on the El Rio. Even if they are a lot of spies, they're human beings, and I suppose they represent a civilized government, so they'll come for us sooner or later. Meanwhile, it's up to us women to make the men comfortable. Men are brutes when they are hungry. Therefore, let's feed the brutes."

Bess caught fire at Miss Denslow's laughing words. "Yes! Come on," she cried. "Let's go back to the cave and light a fire, and be happy." Turning, she started back up the ascent, hurrying as fast as she could in the darkness. The others followed, Miss Denslow as usual assisting poor Mrs. Archman, who was nearly exhausted.

The short climb was made without disaster other than a few raps on exposed shins. Harry pressed the button of his electric torch and surveyed the scene. He was just exclaiming disgustedly over the absence of a fire, when Lord George and Collins stumbled up the path, each carrying several strips of driftwood. A fire was quickly kindled, and by its light, aided by Harry's torch, Bess investigated the contents of the lunch baskets.

As the six already knew, the baskets contained chiefly canned goods. Bess, however, discovered a package of sandwiches and a large thermos bottle containing coffee that was still hot. Lastly she found, far down in one of the baskets, a thin packet, scarcely larger than a letter, at which she gazed in wonder.

Then she laughed. "Price certainly is good to you men," she said. "He's put in cigars for you." As she spoke, she tore open the wrappings. Then her tone changed. "It isn't cigars," she cried. "It's our map—or—or"—she unfolded the parchment—"it's not our map; it's another one and—and—good gracious! It's the same as ours, only different."

"What do you mean?" Lord George's tones were sharp. "Let me see." Unceremoniously he took the parchment from the girl's fingers and scanned it. "You're right," he declared. "It's different! This is the original. The one you had first was an altered copy. The thief sent it to you so that you might lead him to the island; and he altered it so that he and he only might find the spot on it that you both were seeking. It's that scoundrel Price. And he and his friends have taken possession of the El Rio and have gone to the spot."

"How do you know this is the original? It may be the copy!" objected Harry

"The other is obviously wrong. We've found that out. The chances are that this one is right."

"But—but why does the thief give it back to us now?" demanded Bess wonderingly.

Miss Denslow answered. She had picked up the wrappings of the packet and had extracted from them a half sheet of paper. She bent forward to the firelight and glanced at the few lines that had been scrawled hurriedly across it. Then she started. "It's—" Abruptly she broke off. "I'll read it," she gasped.

"I'm afraid trouble is brewing, but if it is, you're well out of it ashore. I stole this map from the first thief last night. I have never seen yours, but I suspect it is different."

When she began Miss Denslow's voice showed extreme agitation, but it grew steadier as she went on and was nearly normal when she ended. While she read, Lord George scanned her features as narrowly as he could by the firelight, as if suspecting some secret reason for her excitement. The others either noticed nothing or ascribed what they did notice to the words of the message.

When she finished, the six looked at each other, stricken momentarily dumb. Each and every one of them seemed to be groping mentally for some explanation of the truly amazing contretemps.

Bess was the first to speak. "Oh! What does it all mean?" she wailed.

"It means that somebody on board is in league with the mutineers, but is secretly friendly to us. Maybe it's Price—"

"No, it isn't!" Miss Denslow interrupted. "It isn't Price. It's some one very different. Price was the first thief and—"

"How do you know?" Lord George's eyes bored into Miss Denslow's.

"I—I—I don't know, after all." The woman's eyes dropped and her answer came falteringly. "I—I'm just sure."

"You do know!" Lord George spoke fiercely. "You do know. You're playing a double part and—"

But Harry stepped forward. "Hold on!" he exclaimed, with a sudden access of dignity. "Stop right there. I won't have it. You be civil to Miss Denslow or you'll answer to me."

Lord George stared at the boy in amazement. Before he could answer Bess struck in. "Oh! For goodness' sake, don't quarrel," she begged. "We're in a bad enough fix without that. Lord George didn't mean anything, I'm sure." She looked at the Englishman appealingly.

His lordship gulped. "I beg your pardon, Miss Denslow," he said, with a resumption of his characteristic manner. "I jolly well forgot myself. I fancy I'm a good deal excited. What?"

Miss Denslow nodded. "I don't blame you—under the circumstances," she said. "But suppose we look at that map and see—"

It was not necessary to finish. In another instant Lord George had spread out the parchment and as many heads as could get near were bent over it.

In geographic features the map seemed practically identical with the one that had been sent to Mrs. Archman by mail ten days before. It differed from it, however, in having several black lines which the first one lacked, and in having only a single comparatively short red line instead of a long curved one. The red line started from the sea at the north end of the island and followed an underlying black line almost straight up the peak. The black lines formed a rough and very open network over the island. The cleft wherein the six were camped was roughly shown on the map and was cut not far from the shore by a black line that paralleled the course of the cliffs.

Miss Denslow put a finger on the intersection. "That black line marks the break in the walls of the ravine," she said sagely. "The one we noticed as we were going up this noon. Probably a trail leads through it. All these black lines are probably trails. If we follow this one north it will bring us to the path marked by the red line—the line we should have followed in the first place. And if we start as soon as we have eaten something, we'll get to our destination before those mutineers get there."

Nobody spoke for a moment. Miss Denslow's explanation seemed very reasonable and in fact convincing. But they felt reluctant to leave the spot where they were encamped. Desolate as it was, it was yet the place where they had last seen other human beings and where, if anywhere, other human beings would seek them. Moreover, few of the party relished a further tramp through the darkness. Mrs. Archman, indeed, broke down entirely. "I can't," she sobbed; "I can't walk another step."

"Oh, yes, you can! We'll help you." Miss Denslow spoke cheerfully. "We've got to go. If we don't get there by morning, the mutineers will get ahead of us, and if they take Mr. Archman unawares we can't—"

"Not to mention the people on that torpedo boat," struck in Lord George. "Miss Denslow is right. By morning at the latest they'll be following us. Unless we want to betray Mr. Archman's hiding place we've got to get there before daylight."

Laws of Divorce

In Australia divorces have never been sanctioned, and they are scarcely ever heard of in modern Greece. In Tibet they are not allowed except by consent of both parties, and then re marriage is forbidden. On the other hand, in Cochin China, the parties desiring a divorce break a pair of chopsticks in the presence of witnesses, and the thing is done.

PRAISES THE LEGION

SPEAKING editorially, the Review of Rock Rapids, an Iowa newspaper, says this of the Legion: "What we like about the American Legion is its habit of calling a spade a spade rather than 'a spatulated implement resembling the shovel but heavier and adapted for being pushed into the ground with the foot.' The gum shoe and the velvet glove are not to be found in the wardrobe of the American Legion, and soft-pedaling, side-stepping, shadow-boxing and holding the auricular organ to the terra firma are not among its favorite outdoor or indoor sports. . . . When it wants to denounce as un-American an organization that seeks to draw religion, racial and color lines, it does not content itself with talking generalities regarding the Constitution of the United States and the Declaration of Independence, but mentions the offending organization by name. The American Legion believes in laying its cards on the table—in hitting straight from the shoulder—in being a square shooter in everything it says and does. Perhaps that is one of the lessons its members learned during their service in the army. At any rate, it is refreshing to find a least one organization that is courageous enough to come out in the open and say its piece in plain English, without regard to whether it is going to get votes or chase them away."

WARNING AFFECTING DISABLED VETERANS

Rehabilitation officers of the American Legion at Washington are disseminating the following warning affecting disabled veterans who have compensative claims but who have failed up to date to file their claim with the United States Veterans' bureau. "Unless ex-service men with a showing of active tuberculosis prior to January 1, 1925, make application to the United States Veterans' bureau by that date, they will lose the benefit of that provision of the World war veterans' act of 1924, which provides that veterans showing active tuberculosis prior to January 1, 1925, will automatically be entitled to compensation and treatment for their disability. There are at the present time many thousands of cases of men throughout the country who have been rated by the veterans' bureau at less than 10 per cent on arrested tuberculosis or chronic bronchitis, and other diseases. It is very probable that a large number of these cases have, since their last examination and rating by the bureau, become active cases, and these men should by all means present themselves to the veterans' bureau for re-examination before January 1, 1925, or they will lose the benefit of the presumptive provision of the act."

Arrangements are now such that a veteran can make claim to the veterans' bureau with convenience and efficiency at recently established regional offices.

Following close upon the order for decentralization of the United States veterans' bureau, long advocated by the American Legion, came announcement of the opening of district bureau offices throughout the country which function as regional havens for disabled veterans of the World war. Full authority will be vested in the regional offices to handle all claims regardless of what phase of the case in question is to be considered. All matters of awards, vocational training and hospitalization will be handled, which will greatly facilitate the rapid disposal of claims. A claims and rating board will operate, to consist of a medical specialist who will examine the men for major disabilities, a medical referee and a vocational specialist, who will act in conjunction with other specialists who may be called into consultation on any case. To gain a more personal connection with the disabled veteran, the rating and claims board will rate the man with the veteran himself present if he so desires and he will have the privilege of arguing his case.

Berkeley, California, Legionnaires' Appeal

In appealing to Berkeley (Cal.) citizens to aid with funds needed to build an American Legion clubhouse, Legionnaires issued the following communication: "The Legion is counting upon the gratitude of citizens for the Legion's part in saving them from indemnity taxes at the order of the kaiser; the kaiser would have demanded a dozen or so Babylonian palaces; all we want is a modest but suitable clubhouse in memory of those who gave their lives to save you the price of castles on the Rhine."

Urges Importance of Accuracy in Records

That the American Legion auxiliary will undoubtedly become a hereditary organization, corresponding to the Daughters of the American Revolution, was the declaration of Miss Emma Hadorn, secretary of the Kansas department of the auxiliary, in stressing the importance of accuracy in filing historical bibliography of members. "The records of the present members of the auxiliary will be invaluable to coming generations," declared Miss Hadorn.

Thanksgiving, Indian Style

Reservation Indians of the Southwest have taken to observing Thanksgiving day, until now it is a common occurrence for them to take part in the good cheer that comes all over the country on that day. To make the day more cheerful the redskins hold off their regular beef issues and annuity payments until that day, when they all join in one huge celebration. One might travel through an Indian reservation in Oklahoma today on Thanksgiving day and not find one-fifth of the tepees occupied—all are away at the feasting place. Coming upon these celebrations one is astonished at the interest taken. To the redskin, who generally takes everything calmly, the excitement manifest at a beef issue or a grass payment on these days is intense—even as great as at their ghost and war dances.

Very seldom of late has there been allowed any beef issue to take place on the reservations of the Southwest, and these events, when they do occur, come on Thanksgiving day. It is by a fitting arrangement that the head men of the tribes have agreed upon this one day of all others when they celebrate their feasts. I attended a beef issue on Thanksgiving day last year. It was given by the Ponca Indians on their reservation. Hundreds of Indians danced and made merry. The medicine man held sessions behind closed tepee doors, and the squaws raced with each other in their glee. Even the papooses cooed and sang their songs with much brighter faces.

All was happy in the camp of the Poncas. The day had dawned brightly. Yellow autumn was everywhere. The squaws hovered about the fires and lay upon the sweet grass telling stories of the old times that had passed. It had been a year since the Indian agent had consented to a beef issue. The issue is a savage fete, something like the Mexican bull fight—except that the Indian eats his prey. The beast is given no chance whatever.

When the agent rode out among the rows of tepees he gave permission for immediate chase upon the herds then grazing on a not far-distant hillside. Then a wild, weird chanting rang through the camp. Suddenly from the lodges burst forth the young men. They were clad in gay trappings and their faces were covered with paint Each carried a long shining field-gun. To the stranger this aggregation would have presented the appearance of a regiment of savages going into battle. Off to the herd they dashed. Soon the crack of the gun, then snorting and bellowing of the wild cattle, and the fierce shouting of the warriors told that the chase was on. It sounded much like a battle in progress.—Leslie's Weekly.

"Have I Got Him?"

"Let's See Him Get Away."

Take Time for Church

On Thanksgiving morning there are few women of taste and feeling who do not attend divine service in some church or other. They may be finely dressed and they may indulge in any number of gayeties afterward, but that little hour or so with the sermon that tells you about your blessings, those few moments with comforting prayers and triumphant songs must begin the day. The sentiment pervades all communities, large or small, be the persons involved steady churchgoers or only occasional worshipers. One cannot seem exactly an ornament to society or a useful citizen without paying some respect to the religious aspect of the national holiday.—Exchange.

Most headaches due to lack of internal cleanliness

WHEN you are constipated, poisons form in the accumulated food waste and are carried to all parts of the body. Headaches follow. Biliousness, insomnia, lack of energy, all result from constipation, which if unchecked will lead to serious results.

Avoid Laxatives—Say Doctors

A noted authority says that laxatives and cathartics do not overcome constipation, but by their continued use tend only to aggravate the condition.

Medical science has found in lubrication a means of overcoming constipation. The gentle lubricant, Nujol, penetrates and softens the hard food waste and thus hastens its passage through and out of the body. Thus, Nujol brings internal cleanliness.

Nujol is used in leading hospitals and is prescribed by physicians throughout the world. Nujol is not a medicine or laxative, and cannot gripe. Like pure water, it is harmless.

Take Nujol regularly and adopt this habit of internal cleanliness. For sale by all druggists.

LINGERIE IN GIFT LIST; COATS OF NOVEL FABRICS

SO FAR as femininity is concerned this is fast becoming a silken world. From head to foot, under and outer garments of silk are encroaching on the fields of those made of other fabrics until one wonders where all the silk comes from. But all that glitters is not gold and all that shimmers is not silk. Processes for making artificial silk and for giving a silky luster to cotton fabrics have reached a high stage of excellence. "Imitation is sincerest flattery" and these less expensive mediums that have much of the sheen and daintiness of silk help out in answering the demand for silky clothes.

Undergarments have reached a degree of daintiness and beauty that makes them a big factor in Christmas shopping and styles in them are varied a little from time to time. Certain colors and trimmings are promoted each season in silk lingerie and immediately copied exactly in fine and silky cotton fabrics. In silks, crepe de chine, crepe satin, radium and other lightweight weaves maintain their popularity and in cottons, batiste, fine voile, sheer dimities, cross-bar and striped patterns in one color, are used.

Both in silk and cotton lingerie this season two or three light colors are sometimes used, appearing in applique figures or borders on garments of a light color. Pink is far in the lead as a color choice, but orchid, light green, maize and turquoise are well represented. Lace, net and embroidery tucks and plaitings contribute a big share of the trimmings in favor just now. Alencon lace has been revived, but is not more liked than val, filet and cluny laces. Net and embroidery appear on some of the simplest but prettiest new lingerie pieces. In underclothes as in outer garments the mode leans toward simplicity.

A matched set, shown in the picture, is a late arrival and up-to-date in style. It is of pink crepe de chine with border of alencon lace at the top of the chemise and narrow edging of val at the bottom. Groups of fine tucks and tiny ribbon flowers finish the adornment and shoulder straps are of satin ribbon. The drawers are trimmed in the same way. A set like this, either of silk or fine cotton, is easy to make and an enviable Christmas gift.

The happy possessor of a coat made of one of those warm fabrics that rival fur can look winter in the face and even say: "Pleased to meet you." Manufacturers of these fur-like materials have woven them in the close imitations of natural furs that everyone is familiar with—but they are also weaving them in novel patterns. These fabrics are supple, highly lustrous and very durable and are adaptable to this winter's styles in coats and ensemble costumes.

Matched Lingerie Set.

At the left of the picture shown here there is a good example of the warm, luxurious coats that add to the interest of styles that of novelty in material. It is made on the lines accepted for fur garments and has collar, cuffs and banding at the bottom of a fur that resembles stone marten. It is lined with plain crepe and warmly interlined. A huge and handsome button fastens it at one side and this side fastening completes its equipment for fortifying its wearer against the cold.

A plain weave in the same kind of velvety fabric is shown in the coat at the left. The arresting style note is an applique trimming of the same fabric in a darker color. Dyed muskrat makes the cuffs and a collar which is extended into a long facing, nine inches wide, down the entire length of the front. These coats, although they preserve the straightline silhouette, are quite wide.

If You Need a Medicine You Should Have the Best-- Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root

Have you ever stopped to reason why it is that so many products that are extensively advertised all at once drop out of sight and are soon forgotten? The reason is plain—the article did not fulfill the promises of the manufacturer. This applies more particularly to a medicine. A medicinal preparation that has real curative value almost sells itself, as like an endless chain system the remedy is recommended by those who have been benefited to those who are in need of it.

A prominent druggist says, "Take for example Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, a preparation I have sold for many years and never hesitate to recommend, for in almost every case it shows excellent results, as many of my customers testify. No other kidney remedy has so large a sale."

According to sworn statements and verified testimony of thousands who have used the preparation, the success of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root is due to the fact, so many people claim, that it fulfills almost every wish in overcoming kidney, liver and bladder ailments, corrects urinary troubles and neutralizes the uric acid which causes rheumatism.

You may receive a sample bottle of Swamp-Root by parcel post. Address Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., and enclose ten cents; also mention this paper. Large and medium size bottles for sale at all drug stores.—Advertisement.

Winona, Minn.—"A few years ago I had a severe attack of ptomaine poisoning which left my blood in very bad condition. I tried a great many so-called tonics but felt no better until a friend suggested my trying a bottle of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery which gave me immediate relief. It is surely an excellent tonic, does not purge and is not objectionable to the taste. I have since been around the world, and always carried a bottle of the 'Discovery' right with me. Mystery of the Marshes "Foolish Fire" is the translated name of the Latin ignis fatuus commonly known as "will-o'-the-wisp." It is a light which appears floating in the atmosphere a few feet above the ground in marshes or other places where there is decaying animal matter. When approached it appears, as a rule, to recede. It has been attributed to phosphorated or carbureted hydrogen escaping from the decaying substances.

HOW TIMES CHANGE

Who can remember the time when a fellow in need of a shave and haircut had ony to take a squint along the curb for a red, white and blue barber pole? Or, when a fellow could satisfy his appetite in a lunchroom, buy his spectacles of an optician, buy his daily rations at a grocery and butcher shop, take it home to a cottage and have it cooked by a long-haired wife, buy his clothes at a clothing store, have his physical ailments cured by the family doctor and be buried by an undertaker?

But "them days have gone forever." If he is not adept with a safety razor, he must hie himselft to a memorial parlor, or masseur to get rid of a few days growth, and there he finds a shop full of women folks waiting their turn with the champion bobber.

Once upon a time a hand-me-down and a derby graced a dummy on the flag stone outside the clothiers, and in those days a fellow never had to look up a satorial arcade for atwo-pants suit and a four-in hand.

When a man wanted a "ham and" in those happy, bygone days he never thought of looking up a restaurant, a cafe, a cafeteria or a roof garden.

Butcher shops and grocery stores suited our respective ancestors and they thrived on the fare, but modernity must call them delicatessen shops and markets. A watch repairman was a watch repairman but now he is a horogist, and a jeweler, now is a lapidary. An optician was an optican, but in these days he is an optometrist.

A couple of decades ago a mortician was just a plain undertaker. In thes ucceeding years he has been described as an embalmer and a funeral director.

QUESTION, DOES RUTH SMOKE?

Chicago Tribune— At a dinner last night thec onservation turned to "young girls' smoking." I heard one woman emphatically say, "Well I know my 17 year old Ruth doesn't. Gee! Ignorance may be bliss, however. I find little sympathy for parents when their daughters slip.

That remark prompted me to giv my experience in the hope that some parents might wake up, because I have taken Ruth out, and I know.

In the past four years I have gone into countless homes of girls who come from the better families and I am not exagerating when I say that in about one-third of the nomes I have entered the parents have not [illegible] the young man wit hwhom they enter of their daughter.

It is rare that parents ask where one intends to go. Once outside the door I have found that nine times out of ten girls suggest some cafe, or to be more to the point, caboret. Occasionally a parent says. 'Try and be home early." I can only recall one girl's mother who said, "Alice, be home at 12."

Tell me how many parents take the time or trouble to go some Satnight to the popular cafes and see the sort of places their sons and daughters frequent? I know my folks never have. When we say we have been to "The—," perhaps one of the lesser sensational cafes, for all I know they think it's a movie. at least they do not inquire further.

I've been out so much tha I no longer condemn girls smoking, but O! Boy! would some mothers of ethes 16, 17, and 18 year old kids be surprised if they saw their daughters puff onec igarette afte ranother and saw them drink all sorts of liquors from the hip flasks provided by their escorts? To every girl who has accepted my cigarets I have asked, "Do your folks know you smoke?" and have received some such reply, "Good Lord, mother would drop dead!"

I have told tales out of school, it will do little good, every parent thinks their children perfect, but I am disgusted at the free way every girl lets a fellow maul and love her.

JUST TWENTY ONE

RELIC OF PREHISTORIC DAYS FOUND NEAR BRITT

Britt News-Trbune—Some months ago tilers working in the vicinity of the gravel pit west of Hutchins picked what proved to be the tooth of a hairy elephant, an extinct animal tha housands of years ago lived in Iowa. The speciman wos sent Prof. Abram O. Thomas, department geology at the state university of Iowa City for identification.

Now another bone has been found in a gravel pit on the north sideof the road across from where the large pit was opened for graveling the Kanawha-Britt road. James Nelson found the bone and laid it to one side. The curiosity of some others was aroused, so the bone was brought to J. A. Treganza, who forwarded it to Prof. Thomas at Iowa City for identification. Mr. Thomas writes the following letter under the date of October 30:

I am highly pleased with the specimen which came by parcel post a day or two ago. It is the left lower mandible of a baby elephant, and is the first one of a very young elephant ever found in this state, so far as I know. I am having some photos made and measurements, and hope to include an account of it in the report which I am preparing for thes urvey. If you have any facts which you would like to contribute with regard to thef inding of the bone, by whom, how deep, etc., I shall be glad to have them. In due time I shall return the bone to you as requested.

I am certainly very grateful to you for the continued and friendly interest which you show in these finds which contribute to t hep ast hisory of our state."

Mr. Treganba says his baby elephant is evidently of the specios, Elephas Prmigenus or hairy elephant (that once lived in Iowa) was over twice the weight of the largest moredn species and was nearly a third taller. The body was covered with a reddish wool and long black hair.

THE SHIP AHOY CLUB

The Ship Ahoy Club met at the home of Belle and Doris Waddnigham on Saturday November 8, 1924. Eight members and their leader were present. During the business meeting a motion was made by the leader to draw names for Christmas presents. After the business meeting came the sewing hour which was followed by a delicious lunch. The next meeting will be held at the home of Vera Bachman on Saturday, December 6th.

YOUNG AT 103 YEARS

Hugh Hawthorne, a young man of Braddyville, only 103 years old, is one of the few centenarians in Iowa. On election day he walked to the polls and voted for Coolidge. Voting the republican ticket seems to be a habit with him as this is the twentieth national election in which he has voted. He is hole and hearty and shows no signs of weakening with the passing years. Last summer one day when the lawn needed mowing, hes urprised his neighbors by getting out the lawn mower and giving the lawn the once over. He hasn't smoked for more than twenty-five years and takes a daily walk of at least a mile in length. You may write your own moral. His long age may be because he hasn't smoked lately, or because he hasn't changed his politics, or because he was born in Ireland. At any rate he is 103 years old and still going strong.

FORCED TO KILL 300 BISONS ON MONTANA RANGE

Reserve Is Overstocked, Superintendent Says

Missoula, Mona.,— Between 200 and 300 buffalo on the Montana national bison range west of here must be slain this fall, Frank Rose, the superintendent, announces. A census last summer showed 700 buffalo 500 elk, 28 mountain sheep and 100 deer on the range and an inspection of the grass convinced the superintendent that the preserve was about 40 per cent overstocked.

The sale of buffalo to parks and zoos is not great enough to bring the herd down to the required size, and so a large number will be slaughtered and sold on the meat market. Each fall the herd is reduced in this manner, but his year a far greater number than ever before will be butchered.

The Montana buffalo herd is the third largest in the world. The range containing 18,000 acres, is under the supervision of the United State biologcal survey.

So far Mr. Rose has obtained the services of but two cowboys to help in segregating the animals to be slaughtered. Few riders are willing and able to do this work. The buffalo is a stubborn animal, and the chance is ten to one he will charge the rider who attempts to cut him outof the rest of the herd.

ATOMS IN MAGNETS ROAR,

SCIENTIFIC TESTS PROVE

Soun Can Be Heard With Radio Loud Speaker

Schnectady, N. Y.— The roaring of the atoms in iron as they are attracted by the magnet can be heard by means of a device recently perfected in the research labratory of the General Electric Company here. The devce indicates the magnetism is not a silent phenomenon; instead instead the roaring when the magnet is brought ear a piece of iron plainl can be heard from an ordinary radio loud speaker, accoridng to experimenters and consequently it will me possible do listen to the effect of a magnet on iron or other material.

The apparatus carries out the idea of Dr. Barkhausen of Dresdon, Germany. A piece of soft iron is inserted in a coil of 17,000 turns of three mil wiree. The coil is attached to an amplificaton set, which is in turn connected to headphones or loud speaker.

When the magnet is brought near iron a rustle is heard ,experimentors say. If the approach is rapid the nise is loud and abrupt; if slow the sound is soft and more permanent. When the magnet is removed similar sounds are heard. If while the magnet isb rought near the iron the poles are reversed an extremely loud and abrupt noise is heard. Scientists believe the phenomenon is caused by the motion of magnetic particles in the iron.

HANCOCK COUNTY DAIRY COW POPULATION IS INCREASING

Report Shows 8.5 Gain in Dairy Cow Population in Iowa

Hancock county's dairy cow population is increasing according to figures anounced by the Bluee Valley Institute . The statement covers an area embracing approximately one eighth of the state in this section, and is believed to hold true for the county proper.

A 8.5 per cent gain in the number of dairy cows two years old and over is noted for the district over the preceeding year, while the increase for the state as a whole was 7.4 per cent as compared with 1923. The entire United States shows an increase amounaing to 6 per cent, gove ernment figures show.

The number of heifers 1 to 2 years old as compared to the total number of cows in this district seem to be above average indicating the intention of more young stock in to milk in the near future.

In citing these figures the Institute calls the attention to the fact that the United States needs 320000 more cows every year if production is to keep step with the normal growth of demand for dairy product There are 1,412,000 more mouths to be fed in the United States with every passing year and with the increased consumption of dairy products per capita, this addtd number to the nation's herd will barely suffice to meet the increased demand.

HOT SCHOOL LUNCH TO STAY

System First Started in England, Later Spread to America Where It Has Proved Popular

The hot school lunch has come to stay. It has taken a good many years to convince the skeptical teachers, superintendents and school boards of the value and necessity of providing something warm for the noon meal of American school children but at last the practice is becoming popular and it is to become practically universal.

That is the conviction of Miss Florence E. Busse. foods and nutrition specialist, Iowa State College, who declares that this provision will clear up many of the problems now confronting American parents and teachers, since it will overcome underweight and keep all the children in better physical condition, which is certain to improve their attitude toward school and class work.

Some dishes that are commonly and satisfactorily used for the school lunch are hot cocoa, creamed carrots split pea soup, boiled rice with milk creamed cabbage, potato, tomato or cream of corn soup, creamed potatoes or peas and beef stew with veg tables,

School lunches starter in 1900 in England, according to Miss Busse where they were sevred free to the children. Later the system modified and spread to American schools, nutil today all modern school organizations are sold to the hot lunch idea and have ether arrange dfor or are arranging for hot lunches.

ORIGIN OF BATHTUB

The first bathtub in the United States was installed by Adam Thompson, a wealthy grain and cotton dealer of Cincinnati, in 1841. He had lately returned from London. where he had heard that the prime minister had such a device. On December 20, 1842, he had a party of gentlemen to dinner. all of whom tried out the new invention. The following day the story was in the papers and Thompson was attacked both doctors and politicians. We do not find that Thompson was required to pay a fine, but the discussion resulted in various measures for the restriction of their use. The common council of Philedelphia considered an ordinance to prevent any such bathing between the months of November and March. Virginia laid a tax of $30 per year on all bathtubs and extra heavy water rates. In Boston there was an ordinance forbidding their use, except on medical advice.

ALFALFA DEFEATS THISTLES

Palo Alto Farmer Had Patch of Pest That Resisted Every Effort

Trading a patch of Canada thistles for an equal patch of alfalfa is not a bad deal most farmers will agree. That is exactly what Jorgen Anderson, of Graettinger, Palo Alto county did.

Mr. Anderson in 1922 had a large patch of Canada thistles in one of his best fields. They had resisted every effort of eradication. Finally in the spring of 1923 Mr. Anderson seeded the patch to alfalfa, with a light sowing of oats. The alfalfa was first cutf or hay this year and the Canada thistles were entirely missing. They had been completely smothered out in one sprinf. Mr. Anderson says he'd just as soon raise alfalfa as thistles anywy.

MRS. W. G. HARDING DIES IN HOSPITAL

Widow of Late President Succumbs After Long Illness; Buried at Marion.

Marion, Ohio.—Florence Kling Harding, widow of Warren G. Harding, twenty-ninth Chief Executive of the United States, died.

The end came at the White Oaks sanitarium of Dr. Carl W. Sawyer, where she had been fighting for life for the last few weeks.

Mrs. Harding's death was due directly to a kidney ailment, from which she had suffered for years, and which nearly resulted fatally while she was mistress of the White House. She died peacefully, Doctor Sawyer said.

Doctor Sawyer's statement on the causes of death gave chronic nephritis, mio carditis and hydro nethrosis. Clifford B. Kling, Mrs. Harding's brother, George B. Christian, Jr., who had been secretary to Mr. Harding; Mrs. Mary Sawyer, widow of Brig. Gen. Charles E. Sawyer, and Dr. Carl Sawyer were present when the end came.

The funeral services were held at Epworth Methodist Episcopal church. Rev. Jesse Swank, pastor of the church and who conducted the funeral services for President Harding, was in charge. He was assisted by Rev. George M. Landis, pastor of Trinity Baptist church, of which Mr. Harding was a member. Mrs. Harding had been a member of Epworth Methodist church since girlhood.

In a little stone tomb in Marion cemetery the body of Mrs. Florence Kling Harding was laid beside that of her husband.

Only 15 months ago Mrs. Harding, leaning on the arm of George B. Christian, Jr., private secretary to President Harding, followed the bier of her husband to the little tomb and saw it placed tenderly inside to await her coming. Rows of soldiers stood at attention as their commander in chief had been consigned to the temporary resting place.

The life story of Florence Kling Harding, like an epic of sturdy American womanhood, was a chronicle of continual struggle against great odds, and of continual accomplishments.

After she became first lady of the land, as always in the years preceding, the helpless and the unfortunate received the fullnest measure of her devotion. Children of every class had her unfailing attention. Wounded veterans of the World war owed her many a debt for hours gladdened by her visits to their hospitals or by flowers send by her personal order from the White House.

Of those gathered around Mr. Harding when he entered the preconvention campaign of 1920, there was none who kept better informed on what was done to further his candidacy than Mrs. Harding.

After the nomination, Mrs. Harding became, in spite of the growing threat of physical collapse, an active figure in the front porch campaign.

Mrs. Harding was born in Marion, Ohio, in 1860, of a sturdy stock of pioneers, her father, Amos Kling, being one of the town's first settlers. She married Mr. Harding in 1891, when things did not look too bright for him. He had just taken over the ownership of the Marion Star, and it was loaded down with mortgages and still had to make a place for itself in the community.

She went to work in the business office and soon was in charge of advertising and circulation, buying the print paper and other supplies, and even standing by the presses and instructing the carriers before they started on their routes. She mothered the club established for the carrier boys, one of whom, answering to the name of Baldinger, entered the army, rose to the rank of major, and was later detailed at the White House as military aid to the President. Another was George Christian, who became the President's private secretary.

She was a member of the Methodist Episcopal church, but was very tolerant of others, and as the President was a Baptist, it was the custom of the Hardings to attend the Calvary Baptist church in Washington.

THOMAS INCE, MOVIE MAGNATE, IS DEAD

Succumbs to Heart Disease; Stricken on Yacht.

Los Angeles, Cal.—Thomas H. Ince, maker of celebrated films and film celebrities, died at his Beverly Hills home, Dias Dorados, of a heart seizure.

The producer's death was sudden and came from a heart affection following an attack of indigestion which began at a yacht party aboard the Oneida off San Diego. The party aboard the yacht was turned into a celebration for Mr. Ince's forty-third birthday anniversary. A partial list of the guests contained the following names: William Randolph Hearst, Elinor Glyn, Charlie Chaplin, Seena Owen, D. C. Goodman, Marion Davies, and Margaret Livingston.

Furnace Victim Believed to Have Been Murdered

Columbus, Ohio.—Hands other than her own contrived the mysterious cremation of Mrs. Addie Sheatsley.

The middle-aged wife of the Rev. C. V. Sheatsley was choked to death before her body was put into the fire that almost consumed her body in the furnace of the parsonage of Christ Lutheran church in the suburb of Bexley.

These statements were made by the authorities here.

The authorities base their contentions on the report of C. H. Long, chemical expert, who examined the vital organs of the woman's body, a report made known to Prosecutor John R. King.

Chemist Long says that his tests show that Mrs. Sheatsley never breathed after her body entered the furnace and that the body must have been put on the coals to be consumed after she was strangled to death.

The chemist says the woman died either of strangulation or suffocation, but he adds that had she died of suffocation there would be traces of carbon monoxide gas in the lung and esophagus he has tested. He states positively that no trace of this gas was found.

Cut Freight Rates, but Not Wages—Coolidge

Washington. — President Coolidge feels that if a reduction of freight rates is made at this time it should be established through reduction in operating costs rather than at the expenses of wages of railroad employees.

Present conditions, in the opinion of the President, do not warrant a reduction in railroad wages, whereas he does believe sufficient economies can be made in operating expenses to permit a reduction in freight rates, if such is found feasible.

TO TEST INCOME TAX PUBLICITY

Return Indictment Against Newspaper at Baltimore For Publication of Lists.

Washington.—While an indictment was being returned against a Baltimore newspaper for publication of tax lists there were evidences of a reaction in congress which may make possible the repeal of the present publicity provision of the revenue law.

The first case instituted by the Department of Justice to test the legality of newspaper publication of amounts paid by taxpayers involved the Baltimore Daily Post. The indictment, which was voted by the federal grand jury at Baltimore, named the Baltimore Post company and contained five counts. Each count was based on the publication of the amount paid by a single taxpayer, information which under the revenue act of 1924 is open to public inspection but with the right of newspaper publication in doubt.

Evidence of a reaction in sentiment in congress was given in a statement by Senator Pat Harrison (Dem., Miss.), a member of the senate finance committee.

Senator Harrison declared that he is now ready to co-operate with the Republicans in the repeal or modification of the publicity provision.

The indictment against the Baltimore Daily Post charged that the newspaper printed income tax lists in violation of section 3167 of the revised statutes, despite a warning given by the Treasury department when public inspection was ordered.

Attorney General Stone, in announcing the return of the indictment, said that he would press for early court action, and believed that it would be possible to get the case to the Supreme court of the United States before the court adjourns next spring. He expressed the opinion that the defendant newspaper would admit the facts and that the case would be carried to the upper court on a demurrer.

Indictments against several other newspapers in other parts of the country will be returned in the next few days, according to the attorney general.

Calls Postal Inspector Brains of Bandit Gang

Chicago.—Brent Glasscock, leader of the Rondout (Ill.) mail holdup gang, sat in a federal court witness chair and told it all. In five and a half hours of testimony he related every detail of the huge robbery, from planning it with James Murray and Post Office Inspector William Fahy to splitting the loot with Murray and giving him Fahy's share for delivery to the postal inspector.

As the gunman went through the story, he sat behind $1,247,000 in cash, jewelry and bonds—the recovered part of the $2,000,000 loot. It reposed in four open-mouthed jugs—miniatures of those of Ali Baba's 40 thieves—in quart fruit jars, and in a big basket. Like the pirates of old, this modern Captain Kidd had buried his loot—part in Missouri, some in Oklahoma, some in Wilmette.

Twice, he said, he met with Fahy in planning the Rondout and other robberies—the others unsuccessful—and dozens of times he plotted with Murray.

Nonchalantly he explained that he turned down a $100,000 holdup suggested by Fahy as a piker job. Casually he told of carrying gas to Rondout to suffocate mail clerks, nitroglycerin to blow open car doors.

Coolidge Shows Useless Depletion of U. S. Forests

Washington.—The President of the United States did the most important part of his work with the aid of a movie.

He talked and let the movie emphasize.

"Between cutting timber in the woods," he said, "and finally putting the product to use, nearly two-thirds of the total volume is lost."

Such a statement the movie later emphasized for Mr. Coolidge by showing the unnecessarily thick saws ripping through logs and creating so much sawdust that in a few days veritable hills of sawdust grew up around large mills.

"A third of this loss," said the President "can, with tried and tested methods, be saved."

$110,000,000 Profit for John D., Jr., in Stock Boom

New York.—Stories of fortunes made and lost in Wall street during the current sweep upward are common, but most of them lack verification. It is, however, possible to closely approximate that of John D. Rockefeller, Jr.

When a senate committee last year was investigating the oil industry his holdings in various Standard Oil company units were disclosed. With this data as a basis it is figured that young Mr. Rockefeller's Standard Oil shares have increased more than $98,000,000 in market value this year. His dividends from these stocks will be not less than $13,200,000, so that market appreciation plus cash dividends gives a total of more than $111,000,000.

Head of Chicago Sleuths Quits; 'Department Rotten'

Chicago.—Chicago's storm against gunmen and gansters rose to something of a climax when Chief of Detectives Michael Hughes snatched off his star and turned it over to Chief of Police Morgan Collins. With this peremptory resignation Hughes ended a service of twenty years in the police department.

Hughes did not quit without a parting shot. It was this:

"The police department is rotten. I wouldn't stay on under the present administration, if I had to take a job shoveling the streets. They have been wanting to get rid of me ever since Dever became mayor, but until now they didn't have the nerve."

Michigan Bank Bandits Escape With $35,000

Mr. Bamford is making a success of it financially and is enjoying the work, in which he became interested while at Harlan during the war.

Under the Iowa statutes the state can start an action against wager stakes and unless betters or others can "show cause" to the contrary, the money will be diverted to the school fund.

Our Plea Today

Let us be thankful—not only because
Since last our universal thanks were told
We have grown greater in the world's applause,
And fortune's newer smiles surpass the old—

Let us be thankful—thankful for the prayers
Whose gracious answers were long, long delayed,
That they might fall upon us unawares,
And bless us, as in greater need, we prayed.

Let us be thankful for the loyal hand
That love held out in welcome to our own,
When love and only love could understand
The need of touches we had never known.

Let us be thankful for the longing eyes
That gave their secret to us as they wept,
Yet in return found, with a sweet surprise,
Love's touch upon their lids, and, smiling, slept.

And let us, too, be thankful that the tears
Of sorrow have not all been drained away,
That through them still, for all the coming years,
We may look on the dead face of today.

No Turkey, but Thanksgiving

By H. LOUIS RAYBOLD

Janet Thorn sat in the couch hammock on the shaded lanai and looked across a purple blue sea to some invisible shore. Somewhere beyond that misty horizon lay home. Not that home meant very much to Janet since the death of her only relative, an aunt. But, somehow, around Thanksgiving time a stranger in a strange land is likely to be homesick.

And this beautiful Hawaii, with all its glories, still had no adequate substitute to offer for the cold wintry skies and bleak harvested landscape, for the cranberry sauce and aroma of roasting turkey with which the national holiday is associated.

Therefore Janet sighed and found herself wishing that Jim Deming, the good-looking young principal of the school where she taught, were not engaged to the daughter of the island's wealthiest sugar planter.

If he hadn't been—oh, if only he hadn't been! Then the friendliness he had shown her since her arrival could have meant so much more to her—the forerunner, perhaps, of something so much more satisfying even than friendship!

Janet rose and, with an almost unconscious gesture, stretched out her arms toward the purple sea. "What does life hold for one?" she murmured tearfully.

"A trip to Hilo and the crater!"

Janet thought for an instant that someone had spoken, then realized that it was merely her own thought. That little imp within which represented a great longing as yet unfulfilled had taken this moment when lonesomeness surged within her and time hung heavy on her hands to prompt her. Why not use the emergency fund and take the trip to Hilo? Not that it would take the whole of it, at that, but, once the meager hoard were broken into, it would not again easily withstand temptation.

For Janet had decided to lay by each week out of her small salary a little contribution toward an amount to take her home should the occasion ever arise. To draw on what little she had already accumulated would serve to put the goal still farther away.

Yet the psychological combination of the moment proved Janet's undoing. "I'm going to Hilo! I'm going to Hilo!" she sang the words, pirouetted madly on one foot, and turned indoors to get ready.

If that same little wicked demon within her whispered that she knew she was going to Hilo because Jim Deming had told her she ought to, she pretended not to hear. What indifference ought he, engaged as he was to the haughty Gloria Tremans, to have on her life? Janet felt sorry for him. In fact, she had felt sorry ever since the day when Gloria had called for him at the school, had found him waiting her about the wonders of Kilauea, and had peremptorily summoned him to her side with the most frigid of glances at Janet. Jim engaged to that iceberg!

Two days later, seated luxuriously in the party automobile which runs to the crater of Kilauea for the benefit of tourists, Janet wondered why she was not happier. Here she was, temporarily seated in the lap of luxury, and though it was, about to gaze on one of the world's greatest sights, the bubbling, restless lake of molten lava which is the crater of Kilauea. It must be because she was, in spite of a score or so of effervescent, gushing tourists, in reality alone. She had no one with whom to share the wonder. Then, as she stood on the very brink of the vast lava sea, she saw him—the man who had been so persistently in her thoughts. He was alone, and had withdrawn apparently from a second group of tourists whose automobile had, no doubt, preceded hers. He stood with arms folded, gazing down into the colorful depths below.

Where was Gloria? Janet's puzzled eyes searched the crowd in vain. Then, resolutely, she crossed over to him.

"It's my first visit, Mr. Deming," she said abruptly, "and I'm even more impressed than I had expected."

At the sound of her voice he turned and Janet found time to wonder at the lack of surprise in his expression. "Janet! But what—why—"

"Yes," laughed Janet. "That's what I want to know! What are you doing here, and why are you not spending the holidays with—with—"

"My—er—former fiancee?" Jim gave a strange little laugh. "Miss Tremans and I are no longer engaged. In fact, the affair was broken off because of—you!"

Janet drew back. "I—I don't undertsand," she murmured.

"We had a—er—little disagreement. She accused me of being interested in you, too much so. Wait, don't look that way, Janet. I'm telling you this because—oh, Janet, my darling, it's true!"

The gathering darkness was cloaking the two of them as Jim drew nearer.

Janet's heart had leapt within her but she held herself sternly in check.

"I—I—oh, can't you see that even if I cared, we couldn't accept this at the expense of another's happiness?"

Jim smiled grimly. "Don't worry. I have suspected for some time that Gloria was tired of me. You merely served as an excuse. And she saved me from doing what I should have had to have done in justice to her—and you!"

Some time later, Jim explained how he had reached the bungalow where Janet boarded just after she had left; how he had missed the steamer, but joined a party going over in their own yacht; how he had planned to tell her everything at the very summit.

He Was Alone.

"And now—no more homesickness, Janet!" he admonished her tenderly after hearing her part of the story. "Our honeymoon shall be a trip to the States!"

Janet smiled. "It doesn't need turkey and cranberry sauce after all to make a Thanksgiving. This is the realest Thanksgiving I ever had!"

Domesticating Wild Turkey

Turkeys are not naturally shy, and it is thought that it should not be difficult to propagate them under conditions of semi-domestication—protecting them and helping out their food supply, while interfering with their liberty as little as possible.

The readiness of the wild turkey to accept domestication is evidenced by the fact that, nothwithstanding its acquired shyness, it is forever mixing itself up in barnyard affairs. Every now and then a gobbler of the woods annexes a flock of tame hens, after knocking out their vigorous leader, and marches off with them.

Dainty Things to Give as Presents

For Mah-Jongg Table

The requirements of mah-jongg are met by this tablet-and-pencil set, in which the tablet is covered with black oilcloth, with adornment of painted flowers and lettering in vivid colors. The pencil is white with a band in black and tiny flowers—to match the tablet. Long ribbons attached provide a means of mooring it.

Funny Sprites for Tree

A funny sprite for the Christmas tree—looks as if he were dressed in a chrysanthemum. He stands guard over a little box whose contents are a sweet secret.

Wire wound with crepe paper makes his long arms and legs and supports his head of painted cardboard—and crepe paper provides his rakish cap and outstanding skirt. He will suggest other grotesque and amusing figures—to be made in the same way.

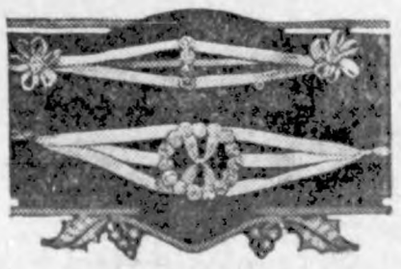
Home-Made Toys

Far be it from Santa Claus to fail to bring rag dolls and puppy dogs to all the little people who love them so much. We should all turn in and help old Santa out by making them at home of stocking legs or other elastic fabrics. Patterns can be bought for them and for all sorts of animals.

Gift for the Baby

When Mister Baby takes his place at the table a bib of some kind becomes a necessity. Here is one that will please him. It may be made of unbleached cotton, white oilcloth or linen, cut in the semblance of a rabbit. Oilcloth may be painted, but usually cotton floss is used to outline the features and the edges of the figure.

Silver Headbands



The most fashionable of pretty headbands, for evening wear, are those made of narrow silver ribbons, adorned with rosettes or tiny roses of the same.

FOOTBALL GAME AS SEEN THRU BAILEY'S EYES

E. N. Bailey, of Britt, deceased, twenty years ago witnessed a Thank giving football game between Garner and Britt and this is the way it looked to him:

The Garner football team met Britt on Thanksgiving Day. Both sides blew up their muscle and prepared for death. The first half jumped on the hind half of the second half and all stood on their heads in the last half. This delighted the upper half of the outsideh alf. Then our fullback tackled their partially fullback, pushing him by the small of the back, pushing him to the right back. Their halfback then reached up his fullback and grabbed our hunchback by his halfback and hustled him over the line back. This created immense applause as our coach back caught the ball back when it bounced over the fullback. Things began to get warm and it was a question for a few minutes, whether thec ourthouse would remain at Concord or be moved into the vacant lots in front of the Tribune office. Judge Hammill was sweating in every pore. the north wind whistled and everyone yelled to get warm. Their center rush now tackled our side rush and everybody went down in the ball rush except one who stood on top of the whole rush and waved his cap. Great applause and clapping f hands by those who didn't havem ittens. The nort end then caught the west end by the hind end and kceled it over the front end of the back end, and left the center end hopelessly tangled up in the bottom end of the last end. The right push then made a ramjam at the wrong push. The center push tried to dodge them and push, but a big push took the little push over the Garner push that wound up the whole push. Score 5 to 5 in favor of both pushes. The fullback and the halfback came back, but no one wanted their quarter back. There were line smashes and punts in their proper pl ces, and several terrific end plays. Those who made they now stand up to eat. Everything went off according to rule, and ever ybody wild with enthusiasm. If there is any one thing that we would like better n Thanksgiving than foot ball, it is Turkey or more turkey.

At Life's End

When a fellow's done with living,
And the minister is giving
To hs list'ners all the facts about the dead;
Have you noticed his oration
Never told of wealth or station—
When you recollect the things the speaker said?

Have you ever heard a mention,
How 'twas someone's fixed intention,
To pay with gold his way across the Styx?
If he did, I wish to venture
He came in for righteous censure
When his clock at close of life had tolled out six.

It's the good a man has scattered
'Mongst his brothers, scarred and batter'd
The men who needed help that he could give,
Whom we talk of when he leaves us—
When the parting comes and grieves us—
They're the thoughts which cling about our hearts and live.

If a man throughout his labors,
Gains the love of all his neighbors;
If he smiles upon the children met each day;
You can wager he's a fellow
With a heart that's kind and mellow—
He's the sort we miss when he has gone away.

So, just let me say, my brothers,
It's the things you do for others
That we'll guage you by when you have "checked your trunk;"
And the gold which you've collected,
By your Judge will be rejected—
It will figure nothing more or less than junk.

SOFT COAL IN THE FURNACE

Steady Fire is Secret of Economical Consumption

Getting the right kind of heating results from the furnace is largely a matter of keeping a steady fire, which in turn requires regular firing. Fresh fuel, when added to the fire, should not completely cover the livec oal, but a smal area of red coal at the back of the firepot should be left uncovered so that the gas from the fresh charge will be burned in passing over this area of live coal.

This burning of gas can only take place when sufficient fresh air is admitted, according to engineering extension specialists, Iowa State College, and so the fire damper or air blast door should be opened for a short time after such quanity of fuel is added. Leaving the damper open after these gases are burned. however, results in cooling the furnace thereby causing waste.

An economical practice is to watch the furnace closely and shut down the fire just a little while before the house is quite warm enough. This will check the fire before it will be necessary to open the windows and so waste heat.

The thickness of the fire must be varied according to the weather, but the top of he fire should be kept at about the level of the bottom of the firing door except in very mild weather. In firing for the night, the fresh charge should bep laced on the check damper should be opened and five to fifteen minutes, when the check amper should be opened and the ash pit damper closed for the night.

GRIM REAPER CALLS ANOTHER TO FINAL RESTING PLACE

MINERAL FEED HELPS SWINE

"Whoo-o-oey" Day Crowd Hears Of Value of Common Salt in Ration

More than a thousand Iowa Hog raisers attended the annual Swine Feeder's "Whoo-o-oey Day" at Io a State College to hear John Evvard chief in animal husbandry, interpret the results of his 1924 swine feeding experiments. Other speakers were President F. F. McArland, a prominuent swine feeder of Oakland, and E. F. Ferrin, in charge of Swine investigations at the University of Minnesota.

Most stress was laid on the need of minerals in the hog ration, especally salt, and the importance of using the proper type of hog for suitable gains. "White Gold" is the term which Professor Evvard used to describe salt in the ration for the fattening pig. Experiments have shown that a single pound of this mineral has saved as much as 213 pounds of feed in making a simllar amount of gain with pigs. Salt proved effective both with and with out other minerals, but in general its use was most profitable when fed in connection with other minerals.

To show the effect of using scrub stock instead of good purebred stock experiments were cited in which a scrub boar, of the original wild type when bred to a purebred Poland China sow got offspring which required 148 pounds more feed per pig to bring them to the weight of 200 pounds than other pigs from the same sow bred to a purebred Poland China boar. Crossbred pigs from pure-bred stock proved to be the most profitable gainers out of a hundred litters. Atttention was called to the necessity however, for always using purebred stock for breeding purposes rather than using cross breds.

The type of hog for fattening, which best meets present conditions, was described as a combination of thes mooth. thickly meated, capacious, not too heavily boned medium type conformation and the rapid growth impulse of the Big Type.

Mineral mixtures as a supplement to thes wine ration were found to be of distinct value for making gains under all conditions. It was found that for hogs on bluegrass pasture, complex mixtures were slightly better than simple mixtures, but it was poined out that no one complex mix ure could be formulated which would meet all cnditions with equal sucess.

TO FATHER SUCKOW

Be thou at rest, thy arduous task completed,
Thy long and toilsome earthly journey trod.
Bravely the lost great enemy defeated,
And thou at home with God.

Low in the west for us a radiance lingers
Of thy departed day, then fades from sight;
For thee it is the dawn, with rosy fingers
Bringing eternal light.

So is it best. We would not grieve thy going,
Nor mar thy joy with loved ones waiting there;
But in our hearts a sacred memory glowing
Leads us to mansions fair.

His Children.

Card of Thanks

We wish to thank all the friends and neighbors for their kind deeds and their words of sympathy in our recent bereavement.

WHY THE WIRE BREAKS

The coming of cold weather adds new trouble to the electric light company lineman.

November and December always bring a few sleet storms. A half inch of sleet and a mile of wire weighs about one and a half tons. In addition to this added strain, wire contracts with cold just as it expands with heat. A cold wire drawn taut by contraction sometimes is unable to bear the weight of a few tons of sleet and then the trouble begins.

FOUR READ OUT OF G. O. P. PARTY

Senators LaFollette, Brookhart, Frazier and Ladd Disciplined.

Washington.—Senators Robert M. LaFollette of Wisconsin, Edwin F. Ladd of North Dakota, Smith W. Brookhart of Iowa and Lynn J. Frazier were read out of the Republican party at the caucus of Republican senators because of their independent proclivities.

Steps also were taken by the caucus looking to the ultimate elimination of the blacklisted senators from important committees. For the time being they will be allowed to hold their committee assignments, but they are not to be promoted when vacancies occur.

The principal developments of the day were:

1. Selection of Senator Charles Curtis of Kansas as floor leader to succeed the late Senator Lodge of Massachusetts.

2. Senator James E. Watson of Indiana was named vice chairman of the steering committee to act as assistant to Curtis. Watson also was named chairman of the committee on committees.

3. Senators William E. Borah of Idaho, Norris of Nebraska, Hiram Johnson of California and other leading Republican senators did not attend the caucus. Borah and Norris expressed keen regret at the action of the caucus.

4. Senator Ladd was the only one of the "Independent Republicans" present when the reprimand was adopted. He declared: "I am a better Republican than the self-constituted group of party leaders who saw fit to try to humiliate me."

5. Republican leader Longworth announced that the LaFollette supporters would not only be excluded from Republican councils, but be stripped of their committee places in the next house of representatives. No house action will be taken at this session, he said.

Senators Edge of New Jersey, Reed of Pennsylvania, Ernst of Kentucky and Spencer of Missouri led the fight to oust the "insurgents" from the Republican party.

After considerable debate the following resolution, offered by Senator Reed, was adopted by a viva voce vote:

"Resolved, That it is the sense of the conference that Senators LaFollette, Ladd, Brookhart and Frazier be not invited to future Republican conferences and be not named to fill any Republican vacancies on senate committees."

Senators Harreld of Oklahoma, Howell of Nebraska and Cummins of Iowa led the fight in the caucus against the resolution.

Howell opposed any disciplinary measures for LaFollette or the other senators mentioned in the resolution. He argued that men should not be reprimanded or denounced for following the dictates of their consciences in political matters.

British Turn Machine Guns on Sudan Mutineers

London.—The mutiny of the Sudanese troops at Khartum was due to the withdrawal of their Egyptian officers, according to a dispatch to the Daily Mail from Cairo.

"This particular battalion — the Eleventh Sudanese—had been for some time infected by anti-British propaganda by their officers," this dispatch adds. "The officers freely spent money, supplied from secret funds of Zaghloul's party.

"The mutineers, consisting of two platoons, after attacking the hospital and killing a British doctor and two Syrian orderlies, barricaded themselves within the hospital, where they were attacked by British infantry.

"Severe machine gun fighting occurred around the building. Many Sudanese soldiers were killed. The British casualties are not known."

The correspondent adds that the most serious aspect of the situation is that the revolt is among the Sudanese troops and not the Egyptians.

U. S. BATTLESHIP SUNK BY GUNFIRE

Admiral Eberle Pleased With Results of Tests.

Washington.—Admiral E. W. Eberle, chief of naval operation, received a radiogram from the battleship Texas stating that the superdreadnaught Washington, which the five-power naval treaty required to be scrapped, was sunk near the southern drill grounds off the Virginia capes by gunfire.

The Texas trained its 14-inch guns on the Washington and sent it below the waves to keep the company of the former German dreadnaught Ostfrisland and other German vessels sunk several years ago in the same vicinity by airplane bombers.

Admiral Eberle said he is much pleased with the results of the tests.

"We are glad to have important information of a technical and scientific nature," Eberle said. "These tests began on Thursday of last week. On Thursday and Friday charges representing bombs and torpedoes were exploded around the hull.

"Some of the charges exploded were in the shape of 2,000-pound airplane bombs, but were placed in the water around the Washington.

"Other charges represent the latest types of modern torpedoes, exploded in simulation of a torpedo attack. The Washington's hull withstood these attacks and although she was leaking and in a rough sea she was still safely afloat in the morning before the gunnery attack began.

"The next stage of the tests came on Sunday, when two planes dropped armor-piercing bombs on the decks.

"There was no gun firing against the Washington until Tuesday, when the first stage of the gun firing tests began. Fourteen-inch shells were used.

"We are the only nation scrapping a ship as modern as the Washington under the treaty, and it is natural that, inasmuch as we are now the only nation that has had the benefit of such experiment, that we keep the actual results of the tests in their intimate details a secret."

The children's mother has remarried since the death of their father. Her name now is Mrs. Roscoe D. Meger, and she lives here with the two children and her husband. Under the will, Mrs. Meger is given $2,000.

"CHECK WASTE," HOOVER URGES

Says American Standards Must Be Raised and Costs Further Reduced

Washington.—After reviewing definite accomplishments in the direction of "elimination of national waste," Secretary of Commerce Hoover in his annual report made public recommends an extensive program of legislation.

Elimination of national waste has been brought about by the activities of his department, Mr. Hoover says, in the fields of unemployment, seasonal construction, coal, super-power, standardization, simplified practice, cooperative marketing and housing costs.

Mr. Hoover refers to the conference on street and highway safety to be held in the department next month as an effort to cope with "the most challenging of all wastes—the waste of human life."

Legislative recommendations made by Mr. Hoover include the following:

Concentration of activities now scattered among different departments which properly belong to the Department of Commerce in three major groups relating to industry, trade and commerce.

Encouragement of Americans trading abroad by relieving them of domestic taxation upon earned income when resident in foreign countries and engaged in the expansion of American commerce.

Reduction in passport fees and revision and simplification of formalities connected with passports and vises.

Revision and codification of navigation laws.

Regulation of the commercial use of air travel with a view to the safety of life both of passengers and operators and the orderly conduct of air navigation.

Strengthening of the authority of the government over radio communication and extension of the powers of the Department of Commerce in the regulation of radio.

"A definite constructive national program has been developed for the elimination of waste in our economic system," says Mr. Hoover. "The need is plain. The American standard of living is the product of high wages to producers and low prices to consumers. The road to national progress lies in increasing real wages through proportionately lower prices. The one and only way is to improve methods and processes eliminating waste."

Find Clews in Murder of Wealthy Californian

San Bernardino, Cal.—Efforts to rip through the mystery that surrounds the slaying of William R. Fee, wealthy Alhambra banker, reverted to Joseph A. Walker, who esteemed himself a rival to Fee for the affections of Miss Mary F. Watkins, and to that twenty-six-year-old attractive business woman.

San Bernardino city and county authorities spent the day searching the Lytle creek canyon road section where Fee disappeared from sight of his wife and nine-year-old granddaughter at their cabin camp. This camp is near Miss Watkins' cabin camp, close to which the banker's body was found.

A third cabin drew the attention of the police.

This cabin provided the first definite clews. In it was found a man's handkerchief, blood-stained and with three strands of hair fast in a blood clot. Two were short hairs, a man's—and one a woman's long hair.

Whether these wisps of evidence can be identified as hair from Fee's head and that of any particular woman will be determined, according to the sheriff.

Many Children Pay Tribute to Lincoln

Springfield, Ill.—The youth of America paused for one brief moment at the tomb of Lincoln on Friday in a tribute that probably had no parallel.

On the sarcophagus in Springfield, Ill., lies a simple wreath, the outward manifestation of this tribute, but in the hearts of the nineteen hundred school children as they sped through the night to their homes, to the towns and hamlets of Iowa and Missouri, rested the conviction that the ideals woven about the martyred President and all he stands for had changed from a myth to reality.

The children who filed by the Lincoln tomb, in the words of Springfield residents, constituted a pilgrimage such as had never come before.

In Lincoln square stands another evidence of the pilgrims' visit—this to remain and grow long after the memory of their journey has passed from the minds of those who welcomed the pilgrims.

It is an oak tree dedicated in behalf of the pilgrimage to the memory of "the outstanding American."

Koretz, Alleged Swindler, Captured in Halifax, N. S.

Chicago.—Leo Koretz was captured in Halifax, N. S.

Koretz, described as the world's most dangerous confidence man, is credited with having swindled the public out of $7,000,000, mostly from Chicagoans.

Koretz disappeared on December 6, 1923, and has been sought all over the world ever since. His arrest was accomplished by John Sbarbaro, assistant state's attorney, and Nick McSwiggin, detective attached to the office of State's Attorney Crowe.

After a hunt of almost a year, in which hundreds of tips proved futile, Koretz was discovered in a hotel in Halifax, registered under the name Lou Keyte.

He will start back to Chicago under guard of Sbarbaro and McSwiggin, having waived extradition.

According to the two Chicago attorneys the prisoner left Chicago with $2,000,000 in cash, carried in a handbag. Since last March he purchased "Pinehurst," a historic residence near Liverpool.

Foreign Radio Stations Heard by Many in U. S.

Chicago.—Interest in radio broadcasting soared to a new high point on Tuesday night when, between the hours of 10 and 11 hundreds of listeners in the Chicago district felt the tingle of discovery upon hearing the voices of English and French announcers.

As a result of the hour of silence in America, set aside for international broadcasting tests, it has been definitely established that transatlantic radio broadcast is at the point of success. A great number of listeners in the Chicago district reported the success they had encountered with their receiving sets. Reports from other parts of the country were equally gleeful.

Aberdeen, Scotland, seemed among the stations most easily heard.

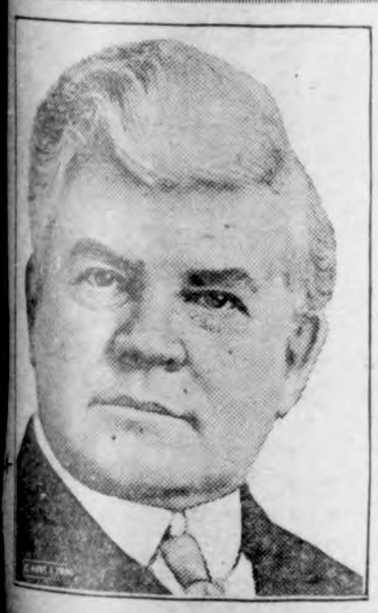
Morley, Republican. He is fifty-five years of age, an attorney admitted to the bar in 1897 and a judge of the Denver District court since 1918. Highlights in his plans include the following policies to be placed in effect under the new administration:

Continuation of plans for the 1926 Golden Jubilee celebration in commemoration of Colorado's fiftieth birthday as a state and the completion of the Moffat tunnel in 1926. Economy in government and reduction in taxation through abolition of useless boards and bureaus. Possible elimination of the advisory pardons board and adoption of a rule to grant pardons but rarely.

An outstanding legislative move of the new executive will be the adoption of a new primary law, which would require every voter to register as to party affiliation and that in the primary election electors be given the ballot of the party with which they are connected. Under this system electors could change their registration of party affiliation at any time prior to election.

Rainey Advocates Outdoor Recreation

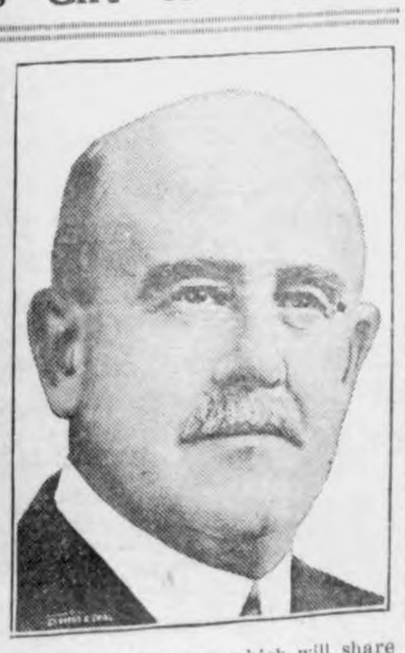


Henry T. Rainey, representative from the Twentieth Illinois congressional district, believes in outdoor recreation and nature study as an antidote for many of the manifold ills of our modern civilization. So he has fixed up his 320-acre farm and thrown it open to the public. Twelve years ago Mr. Rainey had the opportunity of buying a farm a mile from Carrollton which had been a show place since before the civil war. He and his wife always had wanted to construct an estate to their heart's desire without the aid of a landscape gardener.

"We have no children of our own," explained Mr. Rainey. "And there was no reason why we should try to make money off our farm," explained Mrs. Rainey. "Why should we not share it with the children of other people?"

This was the inception of Walnut hall with its gardens and parks. Mr. Rainey has built two small lakes, has opened a tract of 165 acres of natural prairie and woodland and has built a wading pool in the front yard for the smaller children. Visitors and motorists from a radius of 100 miles come daily, winter and summer, to see the parks and gardens. In the summer they swim and fish. In the winter they skate. In the spring come the high school classes for their picnics. In summer the Sunday schools and the women's clubs hold open-air meetings. Mrs. Rainey tells the youngsters stories about the birds and trees.

Senator McKinley's Gift to Students



William B. McKinley of Illinois is one United States senator who gets into the limelight because of something outside of politics. At Chicago the other day gifts for five Presbyterian colleges in Illinois totaling $1,-000,000 and $150,000 for St. Luke's hospital in Chicago were announced. Senator McKinley contributed $340,-000 and $750,000 came from the $1,-000,000 in land which James A. Patten and Mrs. Patten of Evanston contributed to the community trust. The Pattens' gift will be in the form of income from the land on which the University club stands, at Monroe street and Michigan avenue.

The largest beneficiary of Senator McKinley's gift will be the student center at the Illinois State university at Champaign-Urbana, which receives $50,000. Senator McKinley contributed several years ago $60,000 to erect a Presbyterian church for the students and that was the beginning of a student center. Colleges which will share in the Patten gift are: Blackburn college, Carlinville; Lincoln college, Lincoln; James Millikin university, Decatur; Illinois college, Jacksonville, and Lake Forest college, Lake Forest.

Senator McKinley served seven terms in the house and was elected to the senate in 1920.

Red Shirts in Rome Attacked by the Fascisti

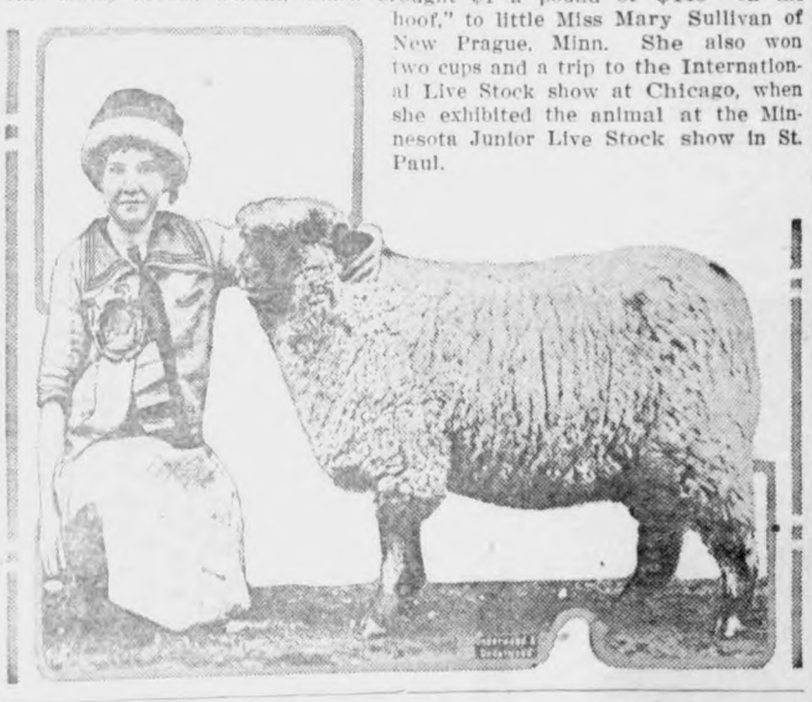
During the Armistice day celebration in Rome a party of Red Shirts led by Gen. Peppino Garibaldi was marching down the Porta del Popolo when it was attacked by a squadron of Fascisti. A cameraman got this remarkable photograph in the midst of the exchange of pistol shots.

Founder of St. Augustine Laid in a New Tomb

With much pomp and ceremony the remains of Don Pedro Menendez, founder of the city of St. Augustine, Fla., were moved recently to a permanent tomb at Aviles, Spain. A delegation from St. Augustine took part in the ceremonies. The illustration shows the procession and, at the right, the tomb in which the body was placed.

Mary's Lamb Brings Record Price

The highest price ever paid anywhere for lamb was that fetched by this heavily fleeced animal, which brought $4 a pound or $448 "on the hoof," to little Miss Mary Sullivan of New Prague, Minn. She also won two cups and a trip to the International Live Stock show at Chicago, when she exhibited the animal at the Minnesota Junior Live Stock show in St. Paul.



Earning Their Wedding Gifts

Mr. and Mrs. Robert Day of Norfolk, Va., spent the first week of their married life in the woods with scant clothing and without firearms, knife or other modern implements. They had to exist on what the forest offered and their reward was furnishings for their home, a cash gift and clothing. They are shown preparing a meal.

Rug Weaving Old Industry

More of an art than an industry, but certainly both, rug weaving is one of the very old industries, of a certainty. There are evidences that the most perfect carpets were made as long ago as 3000 B. C. These intricate patterns of very beautiful design were woven with crude instruments and by hand.

Untrustworthy Teeth

A witness giving evidence was obviously lying. The judge tripped him up several times, and at last reminded him that perjury was a serious offense, visited with very heavy punishment. The witness replied: "Your honor, you must excuse me; I can never trust myself since I put in these false teeth."

ESCAPED THE BOLOS

Among the notables arriving in the United States on the steamship Paris the other day was Prince Gregaire Gagarine, Russian nobleman, who in 1916 stood before a firing squad to be shot. He managed to escape, and since then he has drifted about, finally gaining entrance to America.

MILAN HONORS ITS DEAD

View of the religious ceremonies at the beautiful memorial which the city of Milan, Italy, has just dedicated to its war dead.

EDUCATION WEEK

"THERE is no record in history of a military organization manifesting such an interest in the themes of peace and there has never before been such an expression on the part of a military organization of a consciousness of the importance of universal education as a guarantee of the safety and perpetuity of our democracy, as has been displayed by the American Legion," was the declaration of Vernon M. Riegel, director of education, state of Ohio, in congratulating the Legion as having been responsible for the inauguration and promotion of American Education week. The Legion in co-operation with national agencies introduced American Education week in 1921. The week has been observed annually since then by Presidential proclamation.

MANY POSTS AFTER MEMBERSHIP HONORS

American Legion posts throughout the nation have been extremely active for some weeks in signing up members in advance for 1925, according to Frank E. Samuel, national director of organization and membership. Posts have been tumbling over themselves to claim honors for early membership returns. Never before has there been such a contest and such a scramble for recognition in this work, it is declared.

First dues for 1925 were received by national headquarters from Joe Williams post at Farmer City, Ill., which had signed up 14 men for 1925 by the first of October. The first post in the country to sign up more members for 1925 than it had had in 1924 and to send the dues to national headquarters was Victor Cornell post, Pelican Rapids, Minn. Fowler post, Fowler, Ind., the home post of Thomas S. McConnell, department commander for 1925, was a close second. Other posts which were among the first to go over the top in this hot contest were Pulaski post, Detroit, Mich., and Roy Cole post, Grand Ledge, Mich.

The Florida and Connecticut departments are staging a contest to see which will have the larger percentage of 1924 membership signed up for 1925 by the time the bells ring out on New Year's eve. Florida suggests that the losing department buy the delegates and alternates of the winning outfit a big dinner at the Omaha convention of the Legion next year.

Florida appears to be looking for something. That department won only three of the big Legion prizes offered at the 1924 convention. They carried home the trophies for the largest percentage of membership signed up by March 1 over the preceding year's membership, for the largest percentage signed up for the year over the preceding year's total and that for the largest number of man miles traveled to the national convention at St. Paul. Florida surely basked in the limelight.

Colorado, Utah and Wyoming are mixing things in a little friendly rivalry, Western style. The winner is to be the department which signs up for 1925 the largest percentage of its 1924 membership and will receive a stand of department colors presented by the losers.

Organized German Labor and Escort Companies

Do you know who directed the destiny of the German prisoners of war taken by American troops during the late fuss abroad? His name and title is Lieut. Col. William Briswold Gough, at present deputy county surveyor of San Diego county and a member of the San Diego post of the American Legion. Colonel Gough is a veteran of the Mexican border trouble, enlisting in the army in 1916. When the World war included the United States he was sent to France with the commission of captain. With the Fifteenth Field artillery he was wounded in action and then was placed on the general staff, where he took complete charge of the prisoner-of-war department of the A. E. F., and in that capacity organized the German labor and escort companies.

Fine Clubhouse for Hollywood Legion Men

Hollywood (Cal.) American Legionnaires will have one of the largest and finest clubhouses in the United States, if plans approved by the Hollywood post of the Legion are carried out. The clubhouse will be erected on property already owned by the post and will include swimming pool, a dormitory, gymnasium and other departments usually found in the most exclusive men's clubs. Money will be obtained to finance the building of the club from the weekly boxing bouts held at the Legion stadium, which have proven very popular with the "movie" populace, stars and "extras" alike. Hollywood post recently raised $100,000 to carry on the post's relief work for disabled veterans.

Iowa County Lost Most Men

Madison county, Iowa, according to figures of American Legionnaires of the county, lost more men during the World war than any county in the United States in proportion to population. With a loss of 52 men, Madison county gave more than any county to make the world a safer place to live in.

The Red Line Trail

—16—

"I forgot," Mrs. Archman struggled up heroically. "Come on. I'll go."

"No hurry!" Miss Denslow pressed the older lady back. "We'll make better time if we rest a while and eat something. Besides, the moon will be up soon and walking will be easier."

Bess laughed. It was a rather weak laugh, but it was a laugh. "We'd better get at our sumptuous repast," she said, "unless we want to eat in the dark. Here goes the last piece of firewood, and the men say they can't find any more. And an electric torch, though useful, will not illuminate a whole dinner table. Besides, we'll need it later."

Bess was right. The fire was dying, and long before the supper, simple as it was, could be finished, darkness had again descended upon the scene. When the last red ember winked out, several of the party drew long breaths. But nobody said anything. Their feelings were too deep for words. Each, however, undoubtedly took some comfort from hearing the others munching away at their hardtack in the darkness.

At last Lord George got up. "The moon is up," he said, pointing to the top of the canyon, where the tree tops had begun to silver against the sky. It's time to move."

"Wait!" Miss Denslow's voice came hissing in the gloom. "Listen!"

Out on the water of the inlet sounded the steady beat of oars, coming nearer and nearer. Mrs. Archman started up thankfully. "They've come for us. Oh! They've come for us," she murmured. "I knew they couldn't desert us. Call to them, Bess. Call to them."

"Wait!" Miss Denslow and Lord George spoke together. "Wait and see who they are first."

"But—"

"For God's sake be still!" breathed Lord George. "Silence! Keep well back under the ledge, for your life's sake."

Awed by his tones, all shrank back, flattening themselves against the rocks, and waited, listening.

The sound of the oars against the oarlocks had ceased. Another instant and a low order, followed by a concerted rattling, showed that the crew of the boat had shipped oars with man-of-war regularity. Other orders followed, and other movements. The trained ears of Lord George and Collins made out that most of the men had landed, but that one or more had put off in the boat to lie away from the shore. A shuffling of feet and a low click of metal on metal showed that those on land had formed into a rough column and that they carried rifles. As they moved up the cleft, more than one of them growled out a curse as he barked his shins on an unseen rock. Only one of the listeners recognized the language. "Danish!" breathed Lord George, as the steps of the last one died away.

The next moment Lord George stepped out. "Follow me, quickly and silently," he breathed. "Don't lose an instant." He waited while the others emerged from beneath the ledge, and then he set off up the path, following hard on the trail of the mysterious column.

Ten minutes later he paused by the side of the break in the wall, which was plainly perceptible in the greater light that had come from the shallowing of the gully. Silently he deflected each of his companions up it. When the last one had passed he drew a deep breath. "Checkmate," he murmured, as he followed.

The trail around the mountain proved to be easy to follow despite the difficulties of night travel. It was, in fact, a real trail and not, like the first they had followed, merely the rock-strewn bed of a torrent, which had happened to coincide more or less closely with a fanciful red line that Price had drawn upon the forged map. The party made excellent time along it and would have done even better had it not been for Mrs. Archman, who was utterly exhausted and positively refused to consider even a suggestion from Collins that he and Lord George should push ahead on a reconnoitering expedition and leave the others to rest and follow later.

As it turned out, however, the party did not have very far to go. About midnight, just as the men figured out that they must be very near the intersecting red line that ran up the mountain, the trail began to slant steeply downward, so steeply that Lord George, who was leading, stopped and peered doubtfully downward into the pool of blackness that yawned before him. The moon, though probably above the horizon, was behind the mountain and threw only a reflected light over the spot where the party had halted.

"Stop here till we can find out where we are going," directed his lordship authoritatively, but in a low tone, when the others came up. "This path seems to go far down, and I've got to reconnoiter before I take you along it." He peered to the right, whence came the murmur of the sea. "We're near the water," he added. "Maybe the path goes down to it. We're only guessing that the map is right, you know. Mr. Collins, you'd better go inland, I fancy, and see whether you can get around the head of the ravine. Maybe the red-line trail comes out at its head and you can find it. Mr. Archman, you'll stay here with the ladies till we come back or call to you."

No one seemed to resent Lord

George's direction. The others seemed to have instinctively recognized that he was the best fitted of the party to lead. Even Collins, who might have claimed the right to control, made no objection. With a nod of comprehension he turned off to the left and tramped away; while Lord George almost as quickly took the road downward and disappeared.

Despondently the four who had been left behind waited. Mrs. Archman sat down on the bare ground and went to sleep almost instantly, with her head pillowed on Bess' lap. Miss Denslow walked to the very edge of the ravine and tried to peer down; and after a moment Harry joined her.

Suddenly a low call sounded from dead ahead. "Hello! Hello! Mr. Archman," it came cautiously.

Harry straightened up. "Hello!" he called. "Who's that?"

"It's me—Collins," came the answer. "I thought I saw you."

Simultaneously Miss Denslow clutched Harry's arms. "There he is," she murmured. "On the other side of the ravine, a little higher than we are. He's gotten completely around it. Yes, Mr. Collins?"

"Nothing doing over here! No path! Have you heard from Lord George?"

"Not yet."

"All right. I'm coming back." The almost invisible figure rustled into the deeper shadows that lay behind it.

It was growing decidedly lighter. The moon was climbing behind the mountain and its rays were pulsing overhead, making the sky faintly luminous. Suddenly a confused noise from seaward broke on the night and the two turned to look. But the edge of the cliffs cut off all view of the sea.

"I'll go—" began Harry.

But Miss Denslow stopped him. "No!" she said. "Stay here. We must be ready is Lord George calls. Listen. Don't you hear oars?"

"Yes! I—"

Below in the darkness of the ravine a stone rattled downward, followed by another and another. Someone was climbing the rocks recklessly.

"That's Me!" The Newcomer Hurried Across the Room and Began to Untie the Cords That Bound Nellie to Her Chair.

While the two waited, a form sprang into view and Lord George's voice, cautious yet vibrant with excitement, rang out. "Quick!" he called. "Come quick, all of you! Danger! Come quick!"

CHAPTER XIV

A Little Surprise

As the door closed behind Price, Nellie turned to Captain Bunker with a sob. "What shall we do?" she cried. "What shall we do?"

Bunker shrugged his mighty shoulders. "Don't you fret," he said cheerfly. "I've been in tougher places than this and I'm here to tell it. It's mighty hard on you, but—"

"Oh!" Nellie uttered a cry. "Can we trust him?" she quavered.

Captain Bunker sniffed. "You can trust him just as far as you can trust a rattlesnake, and no farther," he grunted. "He needs that map bad and he's trying to get it. I guess he doesn't remember it as well as he makes out. And he's worried about what he's got to face and wants to find out; and he'll promise anything to get you to tell. But you were right in what you said. Once he gets what he wants, it's all up with you and me—and with your mother and the rest, too. He can't let us go to set the dogs on him later. He just can't. And his men wouldn't let him if he wanted to. By the way, I don't want to be inquisitive, but how about those forty millions he's talking about. Are they there?"

The girl shook her head. "I don't know," she answered hesitatingly. "Father—Mr. Archman—spoke once or twice of a lot of money, but I didn't pay much attention. Forty millions is a lot."

Bunker nodded. "Rather!" he agreed. "By the way, where is Mr. Archman? How did you happen to come on board alone?"

"Because I was a fool. When word came that you were lying off the shore father was busy with—with some one. So I sent him word that I would come out to welcome you. I sent the man with me back to tell father and I jumped into my boat and rowed out. I was going back for father almost at once—as soon as I got the mail."

"But why didn't he follow?"

"There's only the one boat. That is, there's but one available until the tide goes out. So he can't come out for hours and he—look!"

A section of the paneling between two of the dead eyes that lighted the cabin was swinging outward and a man's foot was appearing beneath it. The next moment it was followed by the rest of his body.

"Don't be afraid," he said. "It's only me."

"Mr. Carr!" The words sprang from Nellie's lips, mingled with something suspiciously like a profane exclamation from Captain Bunker.

"That's me!" The newcomer hurried across the room and began to untie the cords that bound Nellie to her chair. "Gee! I thought that fellow never would go," he declared, "and I wasn't sure he had gone at first. It was close quarters, waiting. Still—" He broke off, for Nellie had dropped her head and was sobbing as if her heart would break.

Carr dropped the cords and bent over her. "Nellie! Nellie!" he cried. "Please don't. Oh, please don't! Oh, I'm such a flat-footed idiot! I was talking like a fool because I thought it would startle you less; and here I've frightened you so! What is it, dear?"

The girl was muttering something through her tears. The young man bent down to listen, and she spoke again. This time the words came clearer.

"I'm n-not startled or frightened nor—nor anything," she sobbed. "I'm crying because I—I'm so glad to see you again."

Carr jumped. Then he dropped on his knee beside the girl and threw his arms around her—and the chair.

Captain Bunker was watching the scene in profound disgust. "Belay there!" he roared. "This isn't any pink-tea party. Break away and cut me loose quick. D—n it all, do you know that h—l is likely to pop around here any minute?"

Carr jumped up. "Right-o, captain!" he cried. "Right-o! I'll be with you in just a minute."

Nellie's loosened bonds fell at her feet; and Carr turned to the captain and quickly set him at liberty. Then he turned back to Nellie and held out his arms.

The girl walked into them and had her weeping face on his shoulder. It was a very dusty and unromantic shoulder, too, but neither of them thought of that.

Captain Bunker thought of it, however. He was stretching his limbs and feeling his cramped muscles, meanwhile contemplating the proceedings with profound disfavor.

Carr caught his expression and laughed happily. "Captain Bunker," he cried. "If this pains you, kindly turn your back and scrutinize the second porthole on the starboard quarter. We'll call you later."

But it was Nellie and not Bunker who acted. Half laughing and half sobbing, she pushed Carr from her, and turned a rosy face toward the captain. "Never mind, captain," she said. "You may look all you like."

"Never mind!" roared the captain. "But I do mind, miss. Where do you think you are? Stand back, Carr, or I'll put you in irons. What the devil are you doing on my ship, anyhow?"

Carr laughed. "That's a long story, captain," he said. "And I'm afraid I haven't time to tell it now. Your friend Price may be back any minute. I'll just say that when I found out that you were coming to meet Nellie and her father I determined to come along—the more especially as I wasn't altogether satisfied with some of your prospective passengers. So I came—"

"But how the devil did you come? And—and who made that opening into my cabin?"

"I did, captain—I and my men. A dozen men can do a lot in seven days when they work overtime, even if they have to dodge a sharp-eyed captain and mate who never seem to want to go ashore. But come. We're taking chances."

The young man drew Nellie toward the slit in the bulkhead. "Come along, captain," he called over his shoulder.

Nellie went willingly. She seemed almost gay again. "Show me!" she ordered. "Oh-h-h! I'm so glad you came. I was so frightened. But now—"

"Now it's all right. Good Lord! If you knew how hard it was for me to keep still while that blackguard was talking— But here we are! Peek in!" He stood aside, and pointed through an aperture.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Must Cultivate Food

The common impression that the food of Samoa islanders "falls in their laps" is quite wrong, says Prof. W. A. Setchell of the University of California. There are few edible plant products obtained there without regular attention. Every native village has its plantation where the famous bread fruit, bananas and coconuts are raised. The plantations are generally in forest clearings and are allowed to grow up in all sorts of weeds.

Community Building

Block Planning Makes for Artistic Beauty

It is seldom that we find a street where the homes collectively form a really artistic architectural plan. Individual examples of artistic beauty are everywhere evident, but an entire block of homes built and planned for their particular setting and in relation to the other homes is hard to find.

Many builders follow a given line of sameness in the exterior plan of their buildings, leaving the artistic touch to the individual landscaping of each particular location. It works out in some instances, but not to a degree which could be termed a success.

Some day a building organization will purchase a tract of land and develop the entire property in accordance with the proper placing of homes in relation to the lot and the surrounding structures, and when this is done it will present such a real departure from modern subdivision development and will meet with such a ready response from the buying public that it will be followed by many other organizations as good business procedure.

Church in California Town Community Center

Arthur Gleason, writing about California as the most active center of strange new religions, in Hearst's International, described the modern church, "the most perfectly equipped church in the West," as he found it in Pasadena:

"The church itself seats 1,700, and the chapel seats 600. With the building for religious education there are 84 rooms for class, club and office use. Large kitchens for the social suppers, a playground, six drinking fountains, shower baths, eleven pianos, eleven sewing machines, nine telephones, a movie machine, stereopticons, stage properties for dramatics, a stage with footlights and dressing rooms and a recreational hall for roller skating and basketball are a few of the items in the equipment."

Value of Parks

The American Civic association, the American Park society and the American Institutes of Park Executives held a co-ordinated conference in Washington recently. At the conference the importance of national, state and city parks to the welfare of the nation was stressed.

On the general significance and importance of municipal park planning Frederick Law Olmstead, Jr., who served on the senate park commission for several years, said:

"Nothing serves all the purposes efficiently and well as a party system. There are probably none, except highways and perhaps schools, which involves so large a capital investment. The productive value of this investment is largely determined by the skill and wisdom applied to the innumerable determinations of details."

Towns Reforesting

In Athol and Framingham, Mass., town property is being reforested; in the former town 10,000 white pine seedlings will be put in on the town farm this year, and the same number of pine and spruce seedlings next year, and the following year 10,000 white pine seedlings, 30,000 in all, says Nature Magazine. In addition, five days will be spent in reforesting the Newton reservoir property this year.

In Framingham 57 acres are to be reforested. Five thousand red pine and 5,000 Norway spruce will go in on the town farm this year, and each following year 15,000 white pine will be set until the entire acreage is covered. Pride in the coming forests is being exhibited by these communities, and this augurs well for such enterprises in the future.

Not Too Late for Cleanup

The beauty of a city and the value of its property also may be greatly increased by the planting of trees, shrubs and flowers. Every yard, from the large ones which provide an opportunity for the skill of the landscape gardener down to the smallest patches of ground, can be made more attractive and in most cases with a minimum expenditure and an average degree of attention. An observance of cleanup week aids particularly in improving the appearance of vacant lots, which too often are overgrown with unsightly weeds or permitted to become the dumping ground for debris of various kinds. The benefits of the cleanup movement extend to the elimination of fire hazards and the removal of refuse which might become a breeder of flies and mosquitoes, thus assisting in preserving the health of the neighborhood.

Community Planning

The planning of communities is probably the greatest undertaking that we have before us. It is the making of the mold in which future generations will be formed. Plainly, it is not a task for one group, one profession; still less for any section of one group or one profession. Community planning is a co-operative undertaking. Its aims and its technique are of such a nature, however, that architects, because of their training and experience, should be fitted to take a leading part.

15% of disease avoided through internal cleanliness

WHEN you are constipated, poisons are formed in the accumulated food waste, and reach all parts of the body. The first results, headaches, biliousness, a feeling of "heaviness", etc., serve as warnings of graver diseases to follow if this intestinal poisoning continues unchecked.

This is why intestinal specialists state that constipation is the primary cause of three-quarters of all illness, including the gravest diseases of life.

Physicians Advise Lubrication for Internal Cleanliness

Medical science has found at last in lubrication a means of overcoming constipation. The gentle lubricant, Nujol, penetrates and softens the hard food waste, and thus hastens its passage through and out of the body. Thus, Nujol brings internal cleanliness.

Nujol is not a medicine or laxative and cannot gripe. Like pure water, it is harmless. Take Nujol regularly and adopt this habit of internal cleanliness. For sale by all druggists.

BRUSHED WOOL SWEATERS; FEATHER TRIMS POPULAR

LET'S be optimistic and count our blessings from a fashion standpoint. Why not start our list of winter joys for which we are duly appreciative with the words "brushed wool"? If there is one vogue more than another for which we would render a vote of thanks to stylists responsible therefor, it is that of the lovely "comfy" brushed wool knitted things which Paris grows almost feverishly enthusiastic about some one item that appears in the modes. All at once designers seem to think by day and dream by night of this particular feature of the styles. Just now those who make hats for stars in the social firmament or for those whose names stand for vast incomes, are trimming them (the hats, of course) with the radiate their colorful charm throughout the season's modes.

Seems as if most everything in the way of knitted outerwear has taken upon itself a downy soft surface, which fashionists are pleased to exploit as "brushed wool." Especially are sweaters expressing themselves in terms of brushed wool. Even the lightweight ones for sunny southern wear show this tendency, for there are degrees and degrees of brushed wool ranging from mere suggestion to shaggiest fur-like effects. Orange and white brushed wool makes a pleasing color scheme in the sweater here pictured. There is unique contrast in collar and cuffs of solid orange brushed wool, with the belt, the pockets and the front hem of smooth plain knit.

While plaids are strongly endorsed in brushed wool knitted garments, there is also favor expressed for solid gay colored models. Especially do the heavier, shaggier sweaters flaunt striking monotone effects, such as bright green, vivid orange, red or pure white. These often appear in jacquette silhouettes, frequently sans trimming of any sort, although there are some stunning models with collars and cuffs of clipped "wool fur."

Among brushed wool sweaters, the latest types revel in exquisite heather effects. Often these new heather brushed angora wool sweaters follow mandarin lines, with cuffless full sleeves and a high collar. Some of the handsomest sort boast large fancy celluloid buttons.

Very interesting colors expressed in sweaterdom this season include brown, carrot, various tan shades, powder blue, Lanvin green and bright jockey red which is quite the smart note for winter knitted togs.

Every once or twice in a while (and a very short while at that), a airiest and most expensive plumage used lavishly on wonderfully becoming shapes, usually of velvet. The shapes show trifling variations of the season's accepted styles.

It is not always so easy to be, at the same time, gorgeous and elegant, but these new, feather-trimmed hats accomplish it—therefore they have been adopted and adapted in America and four of them appear in the group pictured here. Some of the fine feathers which do not always make fine birds, are forbidden to us—as the heron aigrette—but we get along very well without them. Mme. America substitutes other plumage which she can wear without a twinge of conscience. Ostrich, peacock, coque, goose, pheasant, in their original state, or so disguised that we do not recognize them, contribute satisfactory feather trimming for American millinery.

The hat at the top of the group pictured is of black hatter's plush with pompon and "feather duster" monture, which leaves us to guess as to what sort of plumage it is. It is fine and shiny, with little touches of white near the top. Just below it a satin hat with velvet facing has an interesting back brim, accented by a group of airy aigrettes, imitating the exquisite plumage of the heron. To the left a daring velvet tam borrows dignity from the fan of glycerined ostrich used in such profusion at one side. The tall satin hat at the lower right is made distinctive by the lavish feather fancy that it supports. Modestly presenting its claims last, is an eccentric sailor shape of silk with velvet facing. The brim is much extended at the left side and lest we forget to notice it, places a floral applique where it will attract attention.

Boys' Game

The Klemme Boys went into the game with the same pep that won the game from Rowan on their floor and proceeded to romp away with the game. Klemme took the lead early in the game and doubled the opponents score. As in previous games the locals brought the five defense into good use, holding their oppontnts to few short shots. The pass work and general floor play has improved a great deal in the playing of thel ocals. Lemke was high scorer again, making some very good shots. Turgasen and Patet also come in for their share of the hon or as do all the members of the quad.

Wnter Care for Vines

Winter tender climbing vines such as clematis and roses, if left clinging to the porch or trelis during the cold, mpnths, often freeze during the cold months. While the vines will recover, it is an advantage for them to have some of the old wood to start from the following spring. says C. V. Holsinger, txtension horticulturist, Iowa State College. This may be provided by taking the vines off the trellis, removing much of the wood and laying the remainder of it on the ground where it should be covered with leaves or other material.

AVOID THE ANNUAL RUSH AT CHRISTMAS TIME

MOTOR CAR POPULATION SHOWS GREAT INCREASE IN 10 YEARS

There are 508,845 More Motor Cars In Iowa Now Than in 1914

Interest throughout Iowa in the question of better roads, which promises to be the main issue before the 41st General Assembly which convenes in January, has directed attention to the amazing increase in the number of motor vehicles in this s ote in the past ten years.

In the year ending December 1, 1924, a total of 614,258 motor motor vehicles were licensed in Iowa, including automobiles, trucks and motorcycles.

As the population of Iowa is approximately 2,500,000 this means thot the state has, on an average, about one motor vehicle for every four persons.

Ten years ago, only 105,413 mtor vehicles were licensed in the state. During the decade, there has been an increase of more thon 500,000motor vehicles owned in Iowa, and today early six times as may cars are traversing the stote's highways as used the roads 10 years ago.

Statistics reveal an overage of 50,000 cars a year during the decade. The largest increase was in 1919, when the number of motor vehicles licensed jumped from 278,313 to 363,079, an increase of 84,750.

In business circles, 1923 was considered a "lean" year, and it is surprising to note that the second largest increase in motor registration during the decade occured in that year. In 1922 the state issued licenses for 499,569 motor vehicles, while in 1923 there were 578,694 cars registered, an increase of 79,125.

Using the very conservative estimate that there is $500 invested in every car in Iowa, including trucks, the people of the state now have invested in motor vehicles the enormous sum of $307,129,000. The total sum raised by taxation in Iowa this year for all units of government including state, city and county, exclusive of special assessments, was only $106,861,583.

Equally interesting are the facts showing the mileage traveled by these vehicles. Assuming that the average car is drive 5,000 miles a year, in 1914, motor vehicles traveled 527,065,000 miles on Iowa's high ways, while in 1924 they traveled 3,071 290,000 miles.

These figures are significant in their bearing on Iowa's road problem, as every one of these motor vehicles and every new one added increases the demand for road improvement and adds to the burden of cannot help but wear out under such tremendous travel.

The problem of rood improvement and maintenance can be illustrated by comparig it with the growth in public school enrollment. In 1914 there were 605,380 children attending the public schools in Iowa. If growth in school enrollment kept pace with automotive growth, there would now be more than 3,000,000 children in the public school, demanding may more buildings and teachers and vastly greater expenditures. In reality, the school population of Iowa for 1924 was 710,009, an increase of only 104,629 in the past ten yeors.

MAIL YOUR CARDS AND PACKAGES ON THE FOLLOWING SCHEDULE

Post Office Department Advises Early Mailing for Extra Service

Order your cards now, so delay in mailing will not be due to a last minute rush on the printer or engraver. You may have received last year twenty more cards than you sent out and the same is true with other patrons. We estimate a twenty per cent increase on the first-class mailings of each family.

Put your return card in the upper left hand corner of each envelope to keep it out of the dead letter office, if not correctly addressed.

Be sure to address it to exact correct address,. giving street and number, as those letters addressed to old addresses or insufficiently addressed are given directory service after Christmas.

Mail out of town Christmas cards not later than December 18 and your local cards not later than December 20, as December 21 will be on Sunday, with no carrier delivery; so that Monday and Tuesday only will be left for delivery. Also do not take a chance the day beforee Christ take a chance the day before Christmas. The weather may interfere and there will be practically no deliveries on Christmas day.

If you mail all your letters at the same time put the out-of town and the local letters in separate bundles.

Letters which are tied in bundles with stamps and addresses all one way are distributed first, before the thousands thrown in loose in the collection.

Do not use odd sized cards. The extra sized cards often becomec ut by the mail clerks. Thes mall card in an aggravation to quick distribution. Use a card the size of a number 13, Government stamped envelope, 6 3-4 by 3 3-4.

Pack your parcel with the idea that it may be one of those at the bottom of a pile of twoh undred or more sacks of sacked mail—flimsy cardboard will smash flat.

After packing, put an exact duplicate of the return card and address inside the parcel.

Wrap with strong paper and tie with strong cord, not light twine.

Print or write with ink, no pencil return card in the upper left hand corner.

Print or write with ink the address. Be sure and give street and number if addressed to a city having carrier delivery service.

Do not guess the weight. Prepay postage fully.

You may mark on the parcel "Do NOT OPEN UNTIL CHRISTMAS "

Help speed up our deliveries by signing for insured parcels quickly We have only 7 1-2 hours of daylight in which to make delivery.

Circulars or third-class mailing campaigns should be completed by December 15. Space in the post office, mail cars and terminals is nedded for first-class and parcel post after that date. Also, carriers have all they can deliver with first-class and Christmas parcels.

In order to avoid congestion and in a general way make it possible to so handle the holiday mails so as to insure delivery before December 25th, thef ollowing schedule has been arranged and is offered for your convenience. Thep ublic is urged to mail their parcels on certain dates as outlined in the following list.

Pacific Coast states, December 13 and 15. Washington, Oregon, California. Nevada and Idaho.

Western States, December 16 to 18. Montana, Wyoming and Utah.

Southwestern States, December 16 to 18.. Arizona, New Mexico, Oklahoma and Texas.

FIGHTS FULL U. S. RULE OVER RADIO

Hoover Says Any Regulation Drafted Now Would Become Obsolete.

Washington.—Full federal regulation of radio will not receive the support of Secretary of Commerce Hoover in the legislation pending in congress, it was announced.

Secretary Hoover suggested in a letter to Chairman White of the house merchant marine committee that at the present time congress should amend only the present statutes, giving the Department of Commerce a degree of control over wireless communication.

The house calendar now contains a general measure regulating radio, in the preparation of which Mr. Hoover and other Commerce department officials co-operated. Mr. Hoover strongly urged its enactment during the last session of congress.

Later, however, he wrote to Chairman White, saying that the rapid change in radio communication and the probability of more changes in the future make it undesirable that federal regulation be established until the pioneering period is over.

"I am inclosing herewith a suggestion of a very short bill clarifying the powers of this department as to radio regulation as to interference," said Mr. Hoover's letter. "It does not pretend to confer complete regulatory authority, nor does it cover many matters which must sooner or later receive legislative attention. It is intended only to enable the department to retain firm control of a situation which is very rapidly changing, in which there are some elements of danger. If such a bill is passed it will give time for more consideration of the whole subject.

"The short bill proposed will reinforce the fundamental situation so that no public damage can result from delay, when so much public advantage might result in a further clarity of our knowledge as to the application of this new system of communication.

"As you are aware, there is no monopoly in the radio world at the present time, there being over 500 broadcasting stations of which not more than four are the property of any one institution.

"With only limited numbers of wave lengths and 500 stations—rapidly increasing—we are forced today to certain duplication of waves or to the division of time between stations. Any attempt to give preference among stations in the allotment of wave lengths on the basis of quality of program raises the question of censorship, the implication of which I cannot at present accept.

"The public interest in radio broadcasting is rapidly widening. It is rapidly becoming a necessity and our people rightfully feel that since the public medium of the ether is used to reach them, they have a direct and justifiable interest in the manner in which it is conducted.

"I hope that another year's experience will show the direction of the legislative course that must be pursued."

Gov. Small, Son, Daughter Hurt in Automobile Crash

Pontiac, Ill.—Gov. Len Small was cut about the head and bruised; his son, Leslie, suffered a broken collar bone, and his daughter, Mrs. A. E. Inglesh and Al Bothfuhr of the state highway department were slightly injured when their automobile overturned after a collision.

Leslie Small was driving the governor's automobile, a sedan, when another automobile, occupied by a young farmer named Fosdick and his sister, came out of a side road and skidded on the slippery pavement into the governor's car.

Three Officers Executed for Egyptian Mutiny

Cairo.—After a summary court-martial at Khartum, following the recent mutiny of the Sudanese battalion, four officers were sentenced to death and three of them were executed by shooting at dawn. The sentence of the fourth was commuted to 15 years' imprisonment.

News of the executions caused a sensation in Cairo, and the general view is that the political effect will be most serious.

World's Best-Dressed Woman Dies in London

London.—Mrs. Smith Wilkinson, the Nottingham woman who a year or so ago caused a world-wide sensation as the "world's best-dressed woman," boasting that she had a thousand dresses and never wore the same one twice, died in a nursing home in London. Mrs. Smith-Wilkinson made her fortune speculating in hotel shares.

British Cabinet Guarded

London.—The British cabinet ministers and many other state officials went about their duties accompanied by bodyguards as a precaution against any violence by Egyptian sympathizers.

Three Die in Red Fight

CHARLIE CHAPLIN'S BRIDE IS ONLY 16

Law Says She Must Keep Up With Her Lessons.

Los Angeles, Cal.—A photographic copy of the sixteen-year-old birth certificate of Lillian Louisa McMurray, who several years ago became Lita Grey of the movies and who several days ago became Mrs. Charles Chaplin of Beverly Hills, was tossed onto the Chaplin lawn about the time the morning milk was delivered.

It beamed from a prominent page of the Los Angeles Times, where the activities of inquisitive reporters had conspired to place it for comparison with the Mexican marriage records which depicted Miss Grey as a nineteen-year-old bride and gave Chaplin's age as thirty-five.

According to the certificate published by the newspaper, Miss Grey was born near Hollywood, April 15, 1908. She later attended two schools in Los Angeles, records of which reveal the same date.

Thus she was a lass of thirteen summers when Chaplin "discovered" her three years ago and set her on the ladder of film fame, and a maiden of sixteen when he led her to the altar, or rather, into a civil magistrate's office at Emplame, Mexico.

This, according to the compulsory schooling law in California, makes Mrs. Chaplin subject to the requirements of educational authorities, whose duty it is to see that no minor escapes schooling until after his or her eighteenth birthday anniversary.

Troops Battle Rebels in Peru; Two Leaders Shot

Buenos Aires.—Belated news of an unsuccessful revolutionary movement in Peru was made public by the official newspaper La Prenza of Lima, says a dispatch to the Nacion from Lima. The movement started in the town of Chota on November 20 and was suppressed by government forces after fighting on November 27 and 28.

The revolutionaries were Andean mountaineers who suddenly swept down and seized Chota in northern Peru.

The account does not give the number of rebels, but says the government forces recaptured Chota after a "big battle" lasting two days, taking as prisoners the two leaders, Col. Samuel Alcazar and Lieutenant Barreda, who were court-martialed and shot in the Chota public square.

Liquor Valued at $800,000 Stolen From U. S. Depot

Chicago.—Robbers have raided the $3,000,000 hoard of fine liquors stored in the United States army warehouse at Thirty-ninth and Wood streets and removed a fortune in booze, according to information revealed by United States Marshal Robert R. Levy, custodian of seized liquors for this federal district. All the while armed soldiers patrolled, or were supposed to be patrolling, the premises.

Since the discovery more than eighty soldiers and other government employees have been grilled. While it was said no arrests had been made, it is said to have been virtually determined that the raid was planned and directed by a notorious band of hijackers. The liquor stolen was estimated in value at $800,000.

FAIR DEAL FOR FARMER-COOLIDGE

Put Farms on Business Basis and Prosperity Will Follow, Says President.

Chicago.—Two plain and practical business messages were delivered by President Coolidge on his visit to Chicago.

In the first address before the Chicago Commercial club at the Drake hotel he pointed to the necessity of elevating agriculture to the standard of other business that it might enjoy relatively the same prosperity. He also called attention to the necessity of co-operating with other nations that they might enjoy the same economic standards that America has been able to preserve in the interest of a secured prosperity and peace.

Before a gathering at the Stock Yards inn, where he was the guest of officers and directors of the International Live Stock exposition, the President paid a high tribute to the farmer, declaring that his experience with them was that they represented a class that sought only a fair deal; did not want or demand special treatment and class favoritism. The business of farming, he said, had become a profoundly skillful profession.

In regard to the farmers' ideals as to legislation, the President said:

"There is altogether too much disposition in some quarters to assume that the farmer is peculiarly given to wild ideas and unsound notions about business finance and economics. On the one hand, every distinct test in these respects has resulted in an overwhelming verdict for the farmers in favor of sanity, soundness, moderation, sense and reason in dealing with all their problems.

"Nobody is going to advance his own interests by playing upon the presumption of the farmer's ignorance, or selfishness, or his incapacity to think accurately. The visionary and the demagogue invariably discover that the farmer does not want their unsound proposals or panaceas. He does not want special treatment and class favoritism. He wants a fair show, and when he gets it he can be relied upon to take good care of himself and to contribute substantially toward taking care of the rest of us."

Economy, co-operation, fairer taxes and proper government aid were important subjects discussed by the President and declared by him to be the means of agricultural prosperity. "The principle of co-operation in producing, financing, buying and marketing must be encouraged to the utmost practicable development," he said.

"We must help the farmer to reduce his taxes, broaden his foreign market and keep freight rates as low as possible while keeping the railroads efficient. This should be supplemented by the development of navigation in the Mississippi valley and in the St. Lawrence river.

"I can think of nothing that will surely help the farmer as much as economy—economy in local and national governments. These remedies have been efficient at last. What we want now is the assurance of stability and continuing prosperity."

The government must aid generously in developing a national agricultural policy on broadly constructive lines, the President declared. "It will support any sound program to release the farmer from the individualistic competitive conditions under which agriculture has been conducted," he said. "It must encourage orderly and centralized marketing as a substitute for the haphazard and wasteful distribution methods of the past."

Millionaire Orphan Dies While Girl Waits to Wed

Chicago.—A marriage license, never used and never to be used, will remain in the memory chest of Miss Isabelle Pope, a Northwestern university sophomore, who was to have been the bride of William Nelson McClintock, the "millionaire orphan," a Dartmouth college junior, of Kenilworth.

He died on Thursday while the weeping girl waited beside his bed, and while a clergyman waited there, too, ready to perform the ceremony if there had been an interval of lucid mind and sufficient strength.

The story of Billie McClintock is the story of an elaborate preparation for a life that he never really tasted. He was five when his father, retired capitalist, was killed in an automobile accident. Two years later his mother died, leaving him the whole family fortune. He was a lonesome boy with $6,000,000.

Mr. William Shepherd, an attorney with whom McClintock lived, said he had drafted the boy's will shortly after he became of age this year. Mr. Shepherd hinted that Miss Pope, Mrs. Shepherd and Attorney Carl Sigfrid of Omaha had been remembered in the will.

PRESIDENT'S ECONOMY MESSAGE IS READ TO THE CONGRESS

COOLIDGE TAKES FIRM STAND IN HIS RECOMMENDATIONS TO SHORT SESSION OF CONGRESS IN THE PRESIDENT'S CHARACTERISTIC STYLE

Washington—President Collidge advised congress in his annual message that perhaps the most important work it could do at its present session would be to practice such economy as to make possible a reduction of taxes for the next fiscal year.

"The government can do more to remedy the economic ills of the people by a system of rigid economy in public expenditures," he said, "than can be accomplished through any other action."

The depression that overtook business, the disaster experienced in agriculture, the lack of employment and the terrific shrinkage in all values which our country experienced in most acute form in 1920, resulted in no small measure from the prohibitive taxes which were then levied on all productive effort. The establishment of a system of drastic economy in public expenditure, which has enabled us to pay off about one-fifth of the national debt since 1919, and almost cut in two the national tax burden since 1921, has been one of the main causes in reestablishing a prosperity which has come to include within its benefits almost every one of our inhabitants. Economy reaches everywhere. It carries a blessing to everybody.

Although stressing economy, Mr. Coolidge presented a wide range of other recommendations, some new and others reiterations of proposals made a year ago in his first annual message.

Most of these related to domestic affairs, but the president went into the field of international relations to renew his plea for American adherence to the permanent justice; to declare the United States not to be disposed to join the league of nations; to appeal for support by public authorities and private citizens for the European reparations settlement plan, and to repeat his declaration of opposition to cancellation by the United States of the debts owed the country by foreign nations.

Two New Pronouncements.

Two new pronouncements marked the president's discussion of foreign affairs. One touched on reduction of world armaments and the other had reference to the outlawing of war.

"It has been and is my expectation that we might hopefully approach other great powers for further conference on this subject as soon as the carrying out of the present reparation plan as the established and settled policy of Europe has created a favorable opportunity," he said with regard to armament reduction. "But on account of proposals which have already been made by other governments for a European conference, it will be necessary to wait to see what the outcome of their actions can be.

"I should not wish to propose or have representatives attend a conference which would contemplate commitments opposed to the freedom of action we desire to maintain unimpaired with respect to our purely domestic policies."

To Outlaw War.

Proposals to outlaw aggresive warfare, the president asserted, should be carefully studied and sympathetically viewed.

Combining discussion of tax revision with his statement on economy, the executive said that if congress at this session kept within the budget he had presented "it will then be possible to have a moderate amount of tax reduction and all the tax reform that the congress may wish for during the next fiscal year." He declared publication of income tax payments to be "detrimental to the public welfare and bound to decrease public revenues," and urged the repeal of that section of the revenue act.

Aside from his declarations relative to economy and taxation, the outstanding recommendations on domestic affairs made by the president included:

Agriculture.

No more important development has taken place in the last year than the beginning of a restoration of agriculture to a prosperous condition. We must permit no division of classes in this country, with one occupation striving to secure advantage over another. Each must proceed under open opportunities and with a fair prospect of economic equality.

The government cannot successfully insure prosperity or fix prices by legislative fiat. Every business has its risk and its times of depression. It is well known that in the long run there will be a more even prosperity and a more satisfactory range of prices under the natural working out of economic laws than when the government undertakes the artificial support of markets and industries.

Still we can so order our affairs, so protect our own people from foreign competition, so arrange our national finances, so administer our monetary system, so provide for the extension of credits, so improve methods of distribution, as to provide a better working machinery for the transaction of the business of the nation with the least possible frictian and loss. The government has been constantly increasing its efforts in these directions for the relief and permanent establishment of agriculture on a sound and equal basis with other business.

To Reorganize Departments.

Enactment of legislation reorganizing the governmental departments.

The president also commended to the attention of congress the legislative program of the American Legion; urged that steps be taken to accord to the Negroes "their full constitutional rights, that they should be protected from all of those impositions to which from their position they naturally fall a prey, especially from the crime of lynching"; recommended prompt payment of the French spoliation claims; approved certain changes in court procedure to hasten the administration of justice; suggested establishment of federal reformatories for young men and women and first offenders; and of a national police bureau; and asked for suitable recognition to the world flyers.

He opposed procedure under section 28 or preferential rate provision of the merchant marine act "until congress can reconsider the entire question in the light of the experience that has developed since its enactment," and also opposed inauguration of any new valuation of railroad property until the results of the present valuation are known and can be considered.

CALVIN COOLIDGE.

"Our domestic problems are for the most part economic," he added. "We have our enormous debt to pay and we are paying it. We have the high cost of government to diminish and we are diminishing it. We have a heavy burden of taxation to reduce and we are reducing it."

Foreign Debts.

About $12,000,000,000 is due to our government from abroad, mostly from European governments. Great Britain, Finland, Hungary, Lithuania and Poland have negotiated settlements amounting close to $5,000,000,000. This represents the funding over of 42 per cent of the debt since the creation of the special foreign debt commission. As the life of this commission is about to expire, its term should be extended. I am opposed to the cancellation of these debts and believe it for the best welfare of the world that they should be liquidated and paid as fast as possible.

I do not favor oppressive measures, but unless money that is borrowed is repaid credit can not be secured in time of necessity, and there exists besides a moral obligation which our country can not ignore and no other country can evade. Terms and conditions may have to conform to differences in the financial abilities of the countries concerned, but the principle that each country should meet its obligation admits of no differences and is of universal application.

It is axiomatic that our country cannot stand still. It would seem to be perfectly plain from recent events that it is determined to go forward. But it wants no pretenses, it wants no vagaries. It is determined to advance in an orderly, sound and commonsense way. It does not propose to abandon the theory of the declaration that the people have inalienable rights which no majority and no power of government can destroy. It does not propose to abandon the practice of the constitution that provides for the protection of these rights. It believes that within these limitations, which are imposed not by the fiat of man but by the law of the Creator, self-government is just and wise. It is convinced that it will be impossible for the people to provide their own government unless they continue to own their own property.

These are the very foundations of America. On them has been erected a government of freedom and equality, of justice and mercy, of education and charity. Living under it and supporting it the people have come into great possessions on the material and spiritual sides of life. I want to continue in this direction. I want our institutions to be more and more expressive of these principles. I want the people of all the earth to see in the American flag the symbol of a government which intends no oppression at home and no agression abroad, which in the spirit of a common brotherhood provides assistance in time of distress.

Under present Iowa statutes it is possible to remove public officers, thru court action, for malfeasance, misconduct, or neglect in office. But in such cases the burden of proof rests upon the state. Pleas by public officers, of ignorance of vice conditions within their jurisdictions, can not be controverted except by proof to the contrary, which is usually impossible to secure.

Iowa has been beating back at a rate which only Iowa resources could sustain. With the good prices now prevailing on all farm products, the end of 1924 will see few of the old scars left except those caused in buying land at abnormally high prices. The state as a whole is getting on its feet again, firmly and confidently, and in the mood to share in the good things of life as made possible through productice energy.

Owners of motor vehicles in Iowa paid a total in fees to the state during 1924 of $8,943,069.55, nearly complete reports to the superintendent of the motor vehicle department shows. This year's receipts are the largest since the fees were imposed in 1911, exceeding last year's by more than $100,000.

Iowa has settled down to a year of increasing economic prosperity. It has started slowly on the upward grade, but its movement is clearly perceptible. No great speed may be manifest at any particular time, but by the time Iowa emerges from the snow next spring it will be showing steady, unmistakable, conservative progress toward genuine prosperity.

TO HONOR PARENTS OF INDIANA HEROES

One of the oldest log cabins in the country, which stands on the Gillan farm in Lawrence county, Ind., will be made a shrine dedicated to the memory of Indiana's supreme war mother and father, Mr. and Mrs. David P. Gillan, of Leesville, who lost three sons in the World war, according to plans announced by the Gillan post of the American Legion, Bedford, Ind.

Gillan post, named in honor of the Gillan boys, announced the plans for the shrine immediately after the father, David P. Gillan, seventy-one years old, dropped dead at his home at Leesville recently.

State records show Mr. and Mrs. Gillan to have been the most sorely tried and the only parents in the state to have given and lost three sons to their country's service in the World war.

The three boys were the only boys of the family and entered the army in the spring of 1918. Frank Gillan of Company B, One Hundred and Twelfth Infantry, the youngest of the family was killed in action in August, 1918. Inman, the first to have enlisted was reported among the missing during the Meuse-Argonne offensive; his death was substantiated later. William, the elder son, was gassed but was sent on to Germany after the armistice was signed, where, he claimed in his last letter, he was poisoned by the family with whom he was billeted. The three Gold Stars mother lasted but a short while after her last son was laid away. The mother, father and three sons are all buried in the family plot at Leesville.

The old Gillan cabin is of historic interest as it is the inn which stood near the old fort which the early settlers built for protection against the Indians. Mr. and Mrs. Gillan lived there and the children were all born there. Before his death Mr. Gillan expressed the wish that the Lawrence County Historical society preserve the old building. Legionnaires declare it will be made a shrine.

To Reduce to Minimum Illiteracy in U. S. A.

The Americanism commission at national headquarters of the American Legion is making a determined fight to reduce to a minimum illiteracy in the United States. The commission has been battling this menace in America through its American education week, held annually through presidential proclamation. Since it was inaugurated in 1921, the United States has come up from the eleventh in illiteracy among the enlightened nations, to ninth.

As regards illiteracy in the United States, Garland W. Powell, director of the Americanism commission and a member of the national illiteracy commission of the United States, revealed the following information:

"Figures based on actual tests show that one out of every sixteen persons over ten years of age in the United States cannot read or write; 6 per cent of the population of our country over ten years of age have had no schooling whatever, and 4,931,905 persons in the United States over ten admit that they cannot write—how many did not admit it?

"Approximately one out of every four men drafted and examined for military service during the World war was illiterate.

"We spend over seventeen times more for luxuries in our nation than we do for education. In 1923, in 261 cities of 5,000 population or more, there was reported a shortage of more than 300,000 seats in the schools.

"The Americanism commission in connection with its American education week made it a point to enlighten the public to these portentious conditions in the hope that the level of illiteracy in the United States may be lowered through education. In our American education week we set aside a day known as Illiteracy day, at which time all interested organizations and agencies considered illiteracy problems and took constructive steps to minimize that menace in this country."

New Legion Posts in Department of Mexico

About every new moon shines upon a new American Legion post in the department of Mexico. The latest post to be formed in the "departmento caliente" is Juasteca post No. 6, which is located at Mata Redonda, Vera Cruz, across the Panuco river from Tampico. Other posts will be formed soon, as signatures for an application for a charter at Vera Cruz are now being obtained and the American vice consul in charge at Salina Cruz is endeavoring to obtain a sufficient number of signatures to organize a post in that city. Tampico post is the largest post in any country outside of the United States, with a membership of 362, which represents a gain of more than a hundred members during the past year.

"Hello, Al!" Proposed Greeting for Buddies

"Hello, Al!" is the way John Franklin Miller post of the American Legion of Michigan City, Ind., wants all Legionnaires to greet each other and to that end will endeavor to have it adopted nationally as the universal greeting of one Legionnaire to another. As regards the fitness of the greeting Miller post points out: "American Legion—A. L. for short spells Al. Hence, 'Hello, Al!' There could also be a distinctive reply given, as our French friends say—'Al-lo.'"

Permanent roads are a good investment —not an expense

The High Cost of Postponing Permanent Highway Building

Poor motor roads stifle industry and agriculture; waste huge sums annually in high maintenance costs, and greatly increase gasoline, tire and repair bills.

There is not a state, not a county, not a community, that isn't paying a heavy price for having too few permanent roads.

There are still many sections of the country—even whole states—that are trying to operate twentieth century traffic over nineteenth century roads.

This is costing millions of dollars every year, and will keep on costing millions until we have well developed permanent highway systems everywhere.

Even what we often call the more progressive communities are far behind the demands of modern highway traffic with its 16,000,000 motor vehicles.

From the Atlantic to the Pacific, and from Canada to Mexico, we need more Concrete roads—the roads for twentieth century traffic.

Your highway officials want to be of the greatest possible service to you. Get behind them with ways and means that will provide more Concrete roads and streets. Such an investment will pay you big dividends year after year.

DEEP AND HOT

The newly-appointed pastor of a negro church faced a packed audience when he arose to deliver his sermon on this question: "Is there a hell?"

"Bredren," he said, "de Lord made the world round like a ball."

"Amen!" agreed the congregation.

"And the Lord made to axles for de world to go round on, and He put one axle at the North pole and one axle at the Souf pole.

"And de Lord put a lot of oil ond grease in de center of the world so as to keep the axles well greased and oiled."

"Amen!" said th congregation.

"And then a lot of sinners dig well in Pennsyvania and steal de Lords' oil and grease. And they dig wells in Kentucky, Louisiana, Oklahoma and Texas and in Mexico and Russia, and steal de Lord's oil and grease, and dem axles is gonno git hot. An den, dat will be hel, bredren, dat will be hell."

CHRISTMAS COLD WEATHER

By Martha Banning Thomas

(©, 1934, Western Newspaper Union.)

TO BEGIN with, it's cold. COLD!! Not your gray, pinched, peaked-y backdoor-yard cold where bits of paper dance in a forlorn, forgotten reel; none of your brick-front houses on dismal streets, seeming by the best calculation, to store up a chill bleakness rather than affording protection against it—not that, but a brisk, lively, tingling cold which makes one hurry to feed the wood-boxes before dark; a cold that etches crystal ferns on the window glass, thoughtfully leaving a peep-hole near the top where you can peer out; a cold that fringes the ice-house with an orderly row of icicles that look like white, corrugated carrots, and manufactures thin, papery ice in the hollows on the ground, the sort of ice children like to stamp on, delighting in its noisy crackle and the sunburst of fine lines radiating from the point of contact.

There are waffles for supper! Do you remember how waffles look and smell and taste on a cold night, when you're "holler as a barpost hole?" Do you, now? "Get out the maple sirup," orders Candice, flopping over the waffle iron and making a particularly neat job of it. "You'll find the jug on the pantry shelf."

Soon we are sitting before a pile of waffles a foot high.

"Now, Peter," remonstrates Candice, "don't give me such an everlasting helping;" but Peter serenely continues to fill up her plate.

"They say Shorty's little shaver ain't so well tonight," he remarks, passing the smoking beauties to his wife. "Got an awful cold. They had the doc this afternoon."

Christmas—and Shorty's little boy sick! He lives across the road and bestows his cheerful chatter and shining eyes upon us without charge and great generosity.

"I had something to give him. Guess I'll run over after supper," says Candice, making the first luscious incision into her layered waffles.

His name is Billy and he's about as big as a grasshopper: he gets "under foot" and is always frolicking at somebody's heels like a puppy. He it was, upon one occasion, who explained to us the nature of his dinner.

"Well, William," we said, apropos of his third cookie in the middle of the afternoon, "Didn't you have any dinner?"

"Oh, yes," he beamed upon us, "We had putting for dinner."

"Putting?" we inquired. "Don't you mean pudding?"

"No, putting!" he insisted, "because we put the flour in, you know!"

Dear little Billy, with his high, clear voice that always reminded one of water running over pebbles.

"His father said he was going to get him a Christmas tree this year," continued Peter. "I saw him dragging it down from the woods day before yesterday. Bill was hoppin' up and down some, I can tell you. Tickled to pieces. Guess that's where he caught cold."

At this point there was a great tramping and puffing in the kitchen. People walk right in on a cold night.

"Only me," sounds the soft, slurring voice of Billy's Italian father. "I jus' come t' say dat boy o' mine all right now. Verra seek dis mornin'—fine by now, an' can I have d' milk?"

A quick light-heartedness flows over us. We had not realized how deliberately cheerful we had striven to be. Billy better! All's right with the world!

It's colder! A careful scrutiny of the thermometer reveals the temperature at six above.

Peter pokes around down cellar and covers up his apples and potatoes against a night of freezing, and brings up some red beauties to be consumed later in the evening with nuts and popcorn.

Cold . . . COLDER!

Sleigh bells jingling by on the road!

Merry Christmas!

Christmas Dinner Centerpiece

An attractive centerpiece for the Christmas dinner is made by cutting a large five-point star out of white sheet wadding. This is placed smooth-side downward. The fluffy upper side is then pulled apart a little to simulate snow and sprinkled thick with Jack Frost powder. In the center of this is placed a bowl or tall glass vase filled with holly twigs and scarlet berries, and the edges of the star are outlined with pieces of holly.

THOSE CHRISTMAS CAROLS

By MARION R. REAGAN

(©, 1924, Western Newspaper Union.)

BERYL SANDS stood outside the dingy little restaurant, looking in at the heavily steamed windows with the absent, vacant stare of one whose mind is preoccupied with melancholy thoughts. People walking along the sidewalks crunched the fresh, dry snow under their heels. Most of them were talking and laughing with the light ease of those who feel at rights with the world. But their gay chatter only made Beryl more and more conscious of her loneliness. There was not a soul in this whole city she could call her friend, not one. And as for a lover—Beryl winced. Twenty-eight and never a lover! Think of spending all of one's life alone. "Old Maid Sands" it would be. Oh, how terrible life was; how unutterably hard on girls like her. Of course there had been Jack Boulton. He had always rather liked her; taken her home from church parties and so on in the old days when they lived in Allantown. He might have fallen in love with her if she had encouraged him. He was the only man who had ever understood her at all. Wonder where he was now?

With slow, listless steps, Beryl entered the little restaurant. She chose the cleanest looking table in the room. A man was already seated there. She sat down opposite him and began to read the menu card.

"Beryl, by George, if it isn't!"

She looked up quickly and recognized with amazement the large, astonished blue eyes.

"Jack Boulton! Why, Jack, what on earth are you doing here?"

He laughed that half-amused, half-cynical laugh she knew so well.

"I'm down on luck, Beryl—broke. I came up here to Chicago three years ago to put across a deal but things didn't go so well, and I've been a little on the rough ever since."

Beryl was sympathetic. "I know, Jack, I think we're pretty much in the same boat. I haven't quite won fame and fortune here myself." They both laughed.

Jack looked at her a long time. She dropped her eyes under his steady gaze.

"You know, Beryl, I like that sad look in your eyes. I don't like to think that you've been sad, of course; but the look—it's appealing. It's the same expression that came into your eyes when you used to play those Christmas carols at the church. Heavens, how you could play them!" His face lit up with the happy memory of it. "Do you still play?"

"Occasionally. The piano at my boarding house is a cheap one and I hate it, but if you care to, we'll go down there after dinner, and I'll play you all those old Christmas songs. You have no other engagement?"

"None," he said promptly, "And if I did, I'd cancel it."

* * * * * * *

When Beryl had finished, she rose from the piano and faced him. He was looking at her intently, longingly.

"You are very fond of music, aren't you, Jack?"

"Yes, when you play it I am." He came very close to her and took her hands. "Beryl, I was just thinking what harmony you could make out of my discordant life, if you would. Could you—could you ever—" he broke off. His voice thick with surging emotion.

"Yes, Jack, I could," and as he held her tightly in his arms, Beryl was exultantly happy, and felt for the first time in her life, secure.

Nellie looked. Beyond the door opening there was no standing space—only a black hole that went straight down. Beyond was the iron hull of the ship, and to right and left the iron framework of the ribs. The door itself was cut with exquisite neatness in the wooden sheathing that framed the cabin walls. The space was not more than a foot deep, and probably not more than a yard wide. Down the outer face ran a sort of iron ladder—really little more than a succession of narrow cleats.

"That ladder leads down into the hold," explained Carr. "I've got a snug little room down there, with half a dozen runways leading fore and aft and cross ship."

Carr turned. "Captain! If you'll go down first, Miss Archman can follow, and I'll come last and close the door."

Captain Bunker hesitated. He had been in command of ships too long to relish taking orders from a mere lad. Besides, he was a large man and the space looked very narrow. "What's your idea?" he demanded doubtfully. "We can hold the cabin—"

"No! We can't, captain. They're twenty to one; and they're armed and we're not. Besides, we've got to think of Miss Archman. We can't fight, but I think we can escape. If you'll trust me—"

"Oh, all right!" Captain Bunker spoke sulkily, but he stepped into the chute. Nellie followed quickly.

Carr came last. As he reached the bottom he clicked an electric button and a bulb flashed out, showing a room a dozen feet square, plainly one of the disused spare rooms of the ship.

Nellie cried out in delight, but Bunker looked disgusted. Also he was hot and breathless and was suffering from his wounded head. "I don't like this, Carr," he rasped. "I don't like it a bit. You've betrayed the trust I put in you. I never thought you'd be a stowaway. Of course, it's for the best, I suppose, but I'm disappointed all the same. I'm disappointed."

Carr looked a little downcast. "I don't think you will be, captain," he protested hastily; "not when I've had time to explain everything. Just now—"

Nellie was listening eagerly. "It doesn't need any explanation!" she cried. "Mr. Carr did just right; I think it was perfectly splendid of him and the bravest thing I ever heard of. Oh! I don't see how he dared shut himself up down here."

Carr laughed, but he did not move from the foot of the chute. He seemed to be listening for something. "I didn't shut myself up altogether," he protested. "I was in and out all the time. For instance, left a note in Miss Bess' stateroom, telling her to warn Captain Bunker that somebody was going to try to steal his orders."

"Good Lord! Was that you? Why didn't you leave it in my room?"

"Because—Hark!" Carr strained his ear up the chute. "False alarm!" he said a moment later. "I didn't leave it there because Price was in and out too much, and was prying into things too closely. I didn't suspect him of anything serious—I suspected somebody else then—but I knew he was prying. So I asked Miss Bess to tell you."

"And it was Price that got the papers, after all," grunted Bunker.

"Was it? I'm not sure. Of course I don't know much, you know—only what I could pick up by listening. But, I'm inclined to think Price told you the truth about himself. I got that map of his, by the way."

"You did?"

"Sure thing. I got it and I packed it in the lunch basket he was fixing to send ashore with Mrs. Archman and her party. I guess they've found it all right by now. But we're wasting time. Listen, captain. You know the ship! The passage outside the door yonder"—Carr pointed—"leads to the forward cargo port. Miss Archman's boat is probably still lying close alongside. When our absence is discovered and the alarm is given everybody is sure to rush to the cabin. When they're all there we've got to run forward and drop into the boat and pull like thunder. See? Hark!" Once more Carr listened.

Then he turned and nodded. "Just a moment," he cautioned and ran up the ladder.

At the top he stopped and peered through the peephole.

Price stood in the middle of the cabin, revolver in hand, looking dazedly from the empty chairs and the loosened ropes to the vacant room. Every instant he changed position, as some creak of the ship's structure seemed to threaten a creeping attack. Furtively he moistened his lips. But he gave no alarm.

Carr, watching, guessed that he feared to confess to his fellows that his prisoners had spirited themselves away. If the mutineers learned that Captain Bunker and Miss Archman had vanished out of a locked cabin they might set it down to "ghosts"; they might suspect their leader of treachery. In either case his authority would suffer—and he himself might suffer, too. It would be better simply to lock the cabin up and say nothing except, perhaps, to a chosen few; and to search the ship quietly. Carr, watching, read his thoughts like a book and felt his heart sink. It sank still lower as he saw Price sidle toward the door. If he gave no alarm, the men would not rush aft, and the fugitives' chance of escape would be gone.

Slowly Price retreated toward the door. In another moment he would be gone. Carr writhed in impotence. He was unarmed, and Price held a cocked revolver in his hand. While he hesitated the man backed through the door and shut it behind him.

Then Carr saw his chance—a desperate one, but still a chance, better than waiting to be hunted down like a rat in the hold. Before the door had fairly closed he sprang out of his hiding place and ran toward it. As he passed the table he caught the cloth over it and jerked it and all upon it to the floor. The tin basin clanged as it struck. Before the echoes died away Carr was at the doorway, behind the leaf, waiting.

None too soon. As he faced round, back to the wall, Price burst in, revolver raised. Beyond the edge of the swinging door he rushed, and, as he did so, Carr flung himself upon him, grasping his wrist with a grip that twisted the pistol from his hand.

The pistol exploded as it fell. The bullet went harmlessly, but the damage was done. The alarm was given. No time for half measures now. With all his strength Carr tripped the ex-steward and drove his head against the floor.

The crack rang through the room and Carr felt the man's muscles relax and grow flaccid in his grip. He sprang to his feet and jumped across the room, snatching up the pistol as he went. Into the slit he scrambled and drew the panel shut, hearing behind him, in the wardroom, the rush of scurrying feet as it closed.

He did not delay to watch the scene. He heard the uproar as the men burst in, and that was enough. He had no time to lose. It was now or never. Scarcely touching the narrow cleats he shot downward to the storeroom.

"Quick!" he ordered. "Follow me!" The glow of an electric torch clove the gloom and showed him beside the door. It opened; he caught Nellie's hand; and the torch went out. "The way is clear," he panted. "I don't dare to use a light. Follow me." Through the pitchy darkness he dragged the girl on. Behind followed Captain Bunker.

Overhead, as the three ran forward, they heard the stamping of racing feet and guessed that their plan was succeeding well.

Abruptly Carr stopped. Overhead showed the glimmer of stars, brilliant against a background of velvety blackness. "Stairs! Careful," he muttered, and took a step upward, drawing Nellie after him.

Quickly but cautionsly the three mounted to the deck. The moon was shining just above the top of the mountain. By its light he saw that the deck was deserted—not a man was visible. But from aft rose an uproar that was music in the ears of the fugitives.

An oblong of glimmering ocean showed where the cargo port cut the black bulwarks, and to this the three hurried. From it the lowered gangway ran down to the lapping water. Carr sprang to it and stood aside. "Quick, Nellie," he commanded, and the girl ran lightly down. "Now, captain," and Bunker followed more ponderously.

Carr turned for a last look along the deck. Just in time, for with a yell a man precipitated himself out of nowhere and hurled himself forward. Carr dropped; then, as the man, unable to stop, hurtled over him, he caught the fellow's legs and added his own strength to the impetus.

Not waiting to look, for the crash of the man's head against the bulwarks had told him all he needed to know, Carr leaped down the gangway, just as a yell from aft told that the mutineers had seen and guessed. Into the boat he leaped, driving it from the side by the impact of his landing. Then he dropped on the vacant thwart behind Captain Bunker and snatched up the idle oars. "Pull, captain! Pull!" he cried, in uncontrollable excitement. Simultaneously the sharp crack of a rifle sounded and a bullet whistled overhead.

hurry. Do you know where to go, Miss Archman?"

Nellie was leaning forward, striving desperately to pierce the darkness. "No!" she gasped. "I—I—everything is so dark—"

"Lucky for us it is! They'd run us down in no time if they could see us." The captain looked behind him. "Port your helm," he cried. "Hard aport! Quick!"

Nellie did not understand, but she obeyed the order instinctively and the boat swung round at a right angle—just in time, for as it veered its side grated against a point of rock, and Nellie saw with a shudder that what she supposed was a bank of clouds was a line of low, overhanging cliffs that edged the shore.

"Steady!" ordered the captain. "Now, Carr, two strong strokes and then lie on your oars and keep quiet."

The boat shot forward with renewed impetus; then slowed somewhat as the oars ceased to drive it on. But it did not stop. Carr, watching the stars above the line of cliffs, saw that it was still moving quietly. "We seem to be in a current," he muttered, almost inaudibly, in the captain's ear.

"We are. There's a six-mile current along here, taking us right along. It'll take us to the place where our party landed today. If we can get there before the moon gets over the top of the mountain we'll probably get away. Watch for the break in the sky line; you won't be able to find it any other way. And now we'd better keep quiet."

The moon shone vividly on the El Rio, but the pursuing boats had passed into the heavy shadow of the island and the mountain and were invisible.

The fugitive boat drifted silently, guided by the rudder and now and then by a cautious, almost inaudible movement of Captain Bunker's oars.

Abruptly Nellie moved uneasily and looked behind. "They're coming this way," she murmured.

The confused noises of the pursuers' oars had separated themselves. One set had grown louder. Between the strokes the sound of the others could be heard more and more faintly. Undoubtedly the boats had separated and one was seeking for the fugitives in the right direction. And it was fast coming nearer.

Cautiously Captain Bunker urged the skiff on, moving his oars so silently that the others could scarcely hear them. Even the drops from the blades on the return stroke fell so short a distance they made no sound.

"We've got to keep silent," he whispered. "If they hear us they'll catch us quicker'n lightning. Watch for that gash in the cliff. We ought to be mighty near it now."

The pursuing boat was very near. Feverishly the three in the skiff scanned the ragged line of cliff that was beginning to show more plainly against the sky as the moon, still rising behind the mountain, cast its sheen over the sky.

Suddenly Carr moved. "There it is," he muttered.

A gash, rapidly widening, showed in the sky line. With a swift but cautious stroke Bunker headed the boat inward.

But Nellie leaned forward with a gasp. "Suppose they are going in, too," she panted. "Suppose they think we are trying to join mother?"

"Then they'll catch us, unless we get ashore and hide," said Captain Bunker, as he lay back on the oars and heaved mightily.

Inward the boat shot, into a blacker gloom. Floating silently between the rocky walls the three dimly saw the pursuing boat dash across the mouth of the gash and heard, above the rattle of the oars, the voice of the coxswain inciting the men to greater efforts.

Quickly the sound died as the boat shot past the edge of the gash. Then Bunker drew a long breath. "Touch and go!" he said, plunging his oars in the water. "Come on, Carr! They can't hear us now. Careful, Miss Nellie, watch the sky line and try to keep us in the middle of the channel."

Nellie obeyed. She detected the beginning of the curve in the course of the deflection of the sky line and steered the boat around the curve and into the straight way to the beach. Then she uttered a cry. "They're here," she breathed. "Mother's here!"

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

CHAPTER XV

An Unexpected Challenge

The shadow of the mountain reached nearly to the El Rio, and once away from the side the boat swiftly passed the line of the shadow and melted into the night. Nellie sat at the stern with the tiller ropes clutched in her soft palms. From the deck of the El Rio came the roar of tumult. Men shouted and swore and pistols and rifles crackled. The balls whistled perilously close to the fugitives.

A new sound arose and Bunker swore aloud. "They're getting the boats out," he gritted. "We've got to

Skulls as Scarecrows

The word "scarecrow" usually conjures up the vision of tattered clothing on a rude framework, standing in the middle of a field, but far stranger bird scarers have sometimes been used, says London Tit-Bits.

For example one Ceylonese cultivator guards his vegetables from bird pests by displaying two skulls on poles. One is that of a woman and the other of a buffalo.

One of the cleverest scarecrows ever used was made by a Belgian farmer. He set up a number of poles in the corn fields and conducted a wire from one to the other. A bell was hung from the top of each pole and connected with the wire. The end of the wire was then fastened to a small water wheel, and as this went round the bells tinkled, frightening all birds away.

ADROIT CORSETING REQUIRED; TUNIC BLOUSE IS TRIUMPH

IN THE matter of slenderness, Fashion is obdurate—she still likes (or pretends to like) almost curveless, flat-chested figures, suggesting immature girlhood. They look all right in the fashion books, but if the gaunt ladies pictured there were to come to life and circulate among us, Fashion would change her mind. Meantime womanhood, more or less plump and pretty, looks to the corsetieres to give her figure straight and boyish lines.

Shows Art of Corsetiere.

Nearly all the new corsets are low-top or topless models, made of satin, broche or rubber. Wrap-around or step-in, they have long, or medium long, hip lines. Many of the new models have no lacings; the strong, firm, elastic materials are so put together that they give the figure shapeliness. Boning grows less and less a factor in their composition while designers rely upon materials to sustain and restrain the figure without hampering the body or injuring it. It almost goes without saying that corsets should be fitted—there are models to suit different types of figures and for different uses and there are appliances for correcting defects in either too stout or too slim persons.

The responsibility of the corset stops at the waistline and is there taken up by a brassiere, which undertakes to support the bust in the proper way. Very slender women find a corselet all that they need. If the figure is too flat, corsetieres recommend the wearing of a ruffled piece made of silk, net or sheer cotton fabric, attached to the front of the corselet. The advantage of the corset and brassiere, for stout figures, is the freedom they allow at the waistline, which is necessary for proper breathing. This is a point never overlooked by corset makers who must always manage to give the figure trim lines without hampering it in any way.

Proper corseting is absolutely essential in present-day fashions and the foundation of success in dress. Fashion says you must at least look trim and corsets answer, "Very well."

The triumph of the tunic-blouse is complete. One modish woman after another passes across the stage of fashion, each one bearing witness to the fascinations of this new arrival among blouses. The picture given here presents one of these blouses, holding the center of the stage for a minute, and speaking its simple lines with an adorable French accent. If one has a mind favorable to beautiful simplicity and likes the piquant accent, it is easy enough to repeat this garment which the picture shows so completely. The body of this blouse is made of brocaded silk with a deep plaiting of georgette at the bottom and long sleeves of the same ending in a narrow wristband of brocade. A long, narrow sash of georgette passes through the slashes in the blouse and ties at the left side, and the model is particularly well adapted to afternoon wear.

One of the Tunic Blouses.

While it holds the center of the stage in afternoon dress, the tunic-blouse has an important role to play in tailored modes as a part of the ensemble suit. It is a high light in this year's contributions to dinner and evening dress, and made its entre in handsome models of georgette crepe, most of them short-sleeved and decorated with beading. It is very handsome in brocaded chiffon, metallic brocades and ombre chiffon. For evening the short-sleeved, long tunic, flaring toward the bottom and finished with narrow, fur banding, leaves nothing to be desired.

Baby Tortured Day and Night by Eczema

Resinol Stopped Itching and Healed Sick Skin

Brooklyn, N. Y., May 10:—"I thought it might interest you to know how much Resinol has done for my baby. Her face was covered with scabs and the itching was so severe I had to keep stockings on her hands to keep her from scratching. I had to be up at night as it bothered her so she could not sleep. Two doctors, one of them a skin specialist, told me she had eczema.

I tried several remedies, but nothing helped, so when I read in the paper about Resinol, I thought I would give it a trial. I can't praise it enough, for it has done wonders for the baby's skin and she sleeps all through the night now. I would advise anyone with a similar case to try Resinol Ointment." Hope of Nation Is in the Rural Home

The true American family can only be found in the rural districts, the city family has ceased to exist, C. J. Calpin of the federal Department of Agriculture declared in an address before the National Catholic Rural Life conference, held at Milwaukee.

Census statistics, he said, show that "in the 30,000,000 of farm population there are 4,000,000 more children under twenty-one years of age than in the 30,000,000 of city population."

"The city," he continued, "is the place of fewer families, more unmarried adults and fewer children in families having children. Space is too dear in the cities for children. Families who desire children must move to the country. The farm has sunlight, space, air and quiet. That's why the children are there."

The common occupation of the farmer's family, he said, also tends to weld more firmly the family ideal, adding that "the rural home and family becomes, therefore, a type in the nation. The city family has long ceased to be the type of American family. The rural home is holding the line for the family ideal in the nation. If the rural structure crumbles, the rural home crumbles, and the nation crumbles."

Pennsylvania Plans to Beautify Its Highways

Banks and slopes along Pennsylvania highways next year will glow with color. Flowering grasses, vines and shrubs will hide the yellow scars where fills or cuts have been made. The department of highways, which some months ago announced the inauguration of a planting program, has revised that program to include the setting out of blossom-bearing vines and small trees.

Highway department officials are anxious to hasten planting so that passage over Pennsylvania roads will not be continuously through landscapes scarred by the activities of road builders.

The highway department in instructions to engineers has notified them that they may make requisition for vines and other growths they deem necessary. The state will require approximately 300,000 vines. Among these will be wild roses, rambler and creeper roses.

But the colors will not be confined to the vines the department will plant. The engineers are making selections from ten grasses, including white clover, the pink alsike clover, the blue hairy vetch, the purple alfalfa and yellow vaccaria. These grasses will be used for slope planting in conjunction with orchard grass, meadow fescue, tall meadow oat grass, Canada blue grass and perennial rye grass.

Reconstructing Homes

Rebuilding or altering of old houses is often an excellent investment even where not necessary from the utilization point of view. Selling values thus gained are frequently out of proportion to the expense. This is particularly true of lumber-built houses, which are peculiarly susceptible to alteration, and they are a large proportion of the houses which are available for renovation.

Building material dealers throughout the country are actively assisting their clients in studying and planning alterations of an improving nature, both practically and esthetically, and the local architect will usually be found to be a very staunch supporter of any departure that promises a better-looking town.

Home Environment Counts

The old question of the father to the daughter's lover, "Can you support her in the style to which she is accustomed?" is merely another suggestion of environment. If the daughter has been accustomed to a nice home and pleasant surroundings she will not be contented unless her own home is just as pleasant. If she has the strength of character, and determination, no matter how limited her finances, there is every probability that her own home will show good taste and a love of beauty, even though on a simpler scale than her girlhood home. Pleasant environment plants a desire for beauty in the mind of a girl which humbler circumstances cannot eradicate.

Get to Work on Lawn

To delay work until spring usually means raising or lowering sections in the lawn later on when the grass does not respond so readily. Flower beds that have been planned for the spring can better be started in cold weather in order to get the advantage of the rotting sod to enrich the ground.

Time for Making Repairs

An observant householder says that if he has any repairs to make on his house, cement walks or fences he has it done in cold weather rather than in the spring. While spring is the natural time in the minds of many it is not, he believes, the best time. The lawn can be tramped down and disturbed otherwise considerably in the fall and put back into place and come up well in the spring. Besides, if there is any great displacement of the surface, there will have to be some readjustment made in the spring.

SO IT GOES

"When we were married," remarked the job printer, "we lived back of the shop. Frequently my wife would call out for me to drop whatever I was doing and come and kiss her."

"And you didn't mind that?"

"Not at first. Sometimes I'd smear my inky paws over her fresh cheeks, too."

"And she didn't mind that?"

"Not at first."—Washington Star.

The Place for Speed

A lady passenger on a coastwise steamer sought out the captain to ask: "Why are we going so slow?"

"This is a shallow part of the bay," explained the master of the ship.

"But," said the lady, "I should think you'd go slower in the deeper part. There is more danger of drowning there."

Milt Mullen—How so?

Milt Mullen—That's so, begosh!

Manual Labor

The use of manual labor is one which never grows obsolete and which is inapplicable to no person. A man should have a farm or a mechanical craft for his culture. We must have a basis for our higher accomplishment, our delicate entertainments of poetry and philosophy, in the work of our hands. We must have an antagonism in the tough world for all the variety of our spiritual faculties, or they will not be born.—Emerson.

Vanity Cost Life

The Assyrians were a luxurious and beauty-loving people, and both men and women were addicted to an elaborate use of cosmetics. According to history, the last monarch, by name Sardanapalus, "dressed and painted like his women," and it is due to this vanity that he met his death. One of his generals visiting him found him penciling his eyebrows and stabbed him.

K. H. S. BOYS COP A-NOTHER VICTORY

GIRLS LOSE BY SCORE OF 22 to 16 TO ALEXANDER

Third Consecutive Victory for Boys' Team

CRYSTAL LAKE HERE FRI. NITE

Chalking up a third consecutive victory for themselves, the Klemme boys defeated the Alexander quintet on their opponents floor last Wednesday night.

Although Klemme made the first basket of theg ame, Alexander soon took the lead and the first quarter ended with Alexander in the lead. However in the next quarter Klemme came back as strong as horseradish. The defense tightened down and Patet and Lemke each sank in a couple ringers and the half ended with K. H. S. in the lead by a score of 12 to 8. In the last half our tossers managed to glean eleven points to their opponents five, the final tally being 13 to 23 in favor of Klemme.

Klemme played a very strong defense game, using the five man defense which has won most of their games this season. They worked it better in this game than ever before getting into position just as soon as the opponets gained control of the ball. Their offensive playing was slower, it taking too long to change from defense to offense.. The Alexander gym was very narrow and poorly lighted, which slowed up our boys somewhat and held them to many long shots.

Patet was high man with thirteen points of the total score. Two of these baskets were very difficult long shots.

The referee, Starbuck of Hampton was entirely satisfactory in both the girls' and boys game, but called everything very close, which made a slower game.

Following is the lineup and general summary of the game:

Klemme 23		Alexander 13

GIRLS' GAME

The Klemme girls, having already wone one gamef rom Alexander this season, were doped to win again, but the Alexander girls completely upset the dope bucket and won by a score of 23 to 16.

The K. H. S. were not up to their usual form and played a ragged game. Alexander of course took the advantage of theb reaks of the game and made a hard earned victory.

The Christmas thought will dominate our services next Sunday. It should be a service filled with joy and gladness. To make it such we are led to think not only of ourselves but of others as wel. This includes the poor and destitute. Our Christmas collection this year will be for the American White Cross—to help such that need hospital care and are too poor to get it without help. We had a fine membership in the White Cross last year and hope that it may increase this year.

The W. F. M. S. meets at the home of Mrs. Elmer Arnold his Thursday at two o'clock. A large attendance is looked ror.

Our midweek prayer meetings are held in the homes durnig the winter months. This weeks meeting will be held in the home of Mr. E. Lenz.

All are busy preparing for Christmas and interesting programs are promised. Both in Klemme and in Liberty the program will be held on Wednesday evening. (Christmas Eve As last year, the Klemme program will be held in the High School auditorium.

Leopold and Loeb now are members of the teaching staff, at Joliet, but are not likely to be called upon to do outside insitute work.

If a man tells you you are a fool, you can afford to laugh, for he is a fool to tell you even though its the truth; but if he ells you you area wise man, put your hand on your pocketbook.

WOMEN FAVOR GOOD ROADS

IOWA WOMEN'S CLUBS BACK GOOD ROADS PLAN

Would Beautify Roadsides With Native Trees and Shrubs

Bloomfield, Iowa., December 17—Good roads mean something greater in the lives of those who make their homes in an agricultural state like Iowa than just the means by which commerce and trade may be carried on in the opinion of Mrs. H. C. Taylar, president of the Iowa Federation of Women's Clubs.

"Our women maintain that the social advantages and opportunities offered by continuously serviceable roads are far greater than the economic phase', Mrs. Taylor declared. "Good roads should be considered first from the aspect of their service to the happy developement of rural and community living."

Mrs. Taylor has outlined the "Woman's Viewpoint on Good Roads" as one of the interesting features in a booklet now being broadcasted over the state by the Iowa Good Roads Association, setting forth the associaions' proposal for improving the 6,600 miles of the primary road system and the 11,000 miles of the secondary, or county, road system without adding to property taxation.

"There is no question but what statistics prove that good roads are a good investment." Mrs. Taylor said "We know that good roads aref undamental in our developement as a state. We also know good roads cost money. Every good thing costs money, whether it is good roads, good schools, good churches, good homes or good government.

"We have but one life to live on this globe ond whatever adds to the joy of family life, increases the opportunity for richer and fuller living, should have the support of the intelligent people. There is probably no other single institution that would come so nearly bringing, pot only pleasure but benefit. t every man and child as good roads.

"As our roads have improved, our towns and villages have graduolly evolved from merely trading points in to live social centers. Formerly people only went to town when they had something to buy or sell. Today it is different, and with an adequate system of good roads our towns will increasingly become centers for the social, political, religious, as well as the economic life of the surrounding country. This in turn, woud make country living more ottractive and desirable. Whatever agency helps to bring bring about this happy condition may be considered a safe proposition to promote.

The truth is ,whether we shall have good roads in Iowa is largely a matter of mind. We know we can afford them. Even the little red hen (Rhode Island) could pave our roads herself in a short time with the profits of her 'golden egg.'

"Aside from good roads, there is another phase of improved highways in which the women are highly interested—that of the appearance of the roadsides. We recognize that cuttiing, filling, grading and draining are the first requisites in the process of developing good roads. However, when this preliminory work is over we should like to see the roadsides of our righways restored to some of their pristine beauty. As an organization devoted to the cause of conservation, the Federation would be glad to co-operate with the State highway Commission in the developement of a comprehensive planting plan for the roodsides. By means of such a plan it would be possible to border our highwys with native trees, shrubs and wild flowers and make of our roadsides one unbroken glory of entrancing loveliness from boundry to boundry of our great and glrious state. With good roads an accompolished fact in Iowa, the lure to California will becme a matter of past history.

PEOPLE TALKED ABOUT

House Will Look Odd Without Gillett

The house at Washington will look queer after March 4 next. 'Cause why—on that day Frederick Huntington Gillett is due to move into the other chamber as senator from Massachusetts. He beat Senator David Walsh, you will remember, in the election. Why, do you know that Gillett was first elected to the Fifty-third congress in 1892 and has been there ever since? That means 16 continuous terms. In other words he tops the list of representatives in point of continuous service. It also beats any senate record. The late Senator Henry C. Lodge and he began their service the same year. Since the death of Senator Lodge Senator Francis E. Warren has the longest record of continuous service. In addition, Gillett has been speaker of the house since May 18, 1919.

Senator-elect Gillett was born in Massachusetts in 1851. He took degrees at Amherst, A. B. in 1874 and A. M. in 1877 and LL. B. at Harvard in 1877. He has had a law practice at Springfield, Mass., since 1877. In 1915 he married Christine Rice Hoar, widow of the late Congressman Rockwood Hoar of Massachusetts. He served his state as assistant attorney general, 1879-82 and was for two years a member of the Massachusetts house of representatives.

Alice Longworth Expecting the Stork

After eighteen years of childless and perfectly happy married life, Mrs. Alice Roosevelt Longworth, "Princess Alice," one of the most original, interesting and charming women in Washington official circles, is about to appear in a new role.

Early in the new year a first baby is expected in the Longworth family, and the innumerable friends of Representative and Mrs. Nicholas Longworth here and throughout the country will await the event with scarcely less interest than the principals in what is very nearly a national as well as a domestic drama.

Mrs. Longworth has arranged to go to Chicago, early in February, having engaged rooms at the Chicago Lying-in hospital (Dr. J. B. De Lee) at the suggestion of Mrs. Medill McCormick, one of her closest friends. Mrs. McCormick was for some years on the board of the hospital, and the children of a number of Mrs. Longworth's friends have been born there.

All of Mrs. Longworth's brothers and her sister, Mrs. Richard Derby, have from one to five children, but "Princess Alice," the first born of President Roosevelt, whose advocacy of large families was ever outspoken, has had no children.

The romance of Alice Roosevelt and Nicholas Longworth, which began on the famous Taft trip to the Philippines in the early days of the Roosevelt administration, and which culminated in their marriage in the White House February 17, 1906, was pretty nearly an international event. Alice is the oldest of the Roosevelt children, being a half-sister of the others. Her mother, who had been Miss Lee of Boston, died while Alice was an infant.

Amazing Career of Blind Tom Schall

In the Congressional Directory you will find, last among the house delegation from Minnesota, this autobiography: "Thomas D. Schall, A. B., LL. B.; Republican; practicing lawyer, Minneapolis, Minn.; residence, Excelsior, Minn.; (blind); lost sight through electric shock. Fifth term." This will have to be changed in the next edition, of course, for Schall is the man who defeated Magnus Johnson and March 4, 1925, he will move over into the senate.

These five lines of autobiography contain a most amazing story, when read between the lines. Schall, born in Reed City, Mich., in 1877, is the son of a German refugee of 1848 who fought with Carl Schurz for the Union. His mother died when he was an infant and then Tom was a newsboy in a small Minnesota town and could neither read nor write. He began to study. He earned his way through the University of Minnesota by playing summer baseball, wrestling, boxing and winning prize debates. He married Margaret H. Huntley of Minneapolis in 1902 and got his law degree in 1904. A prosperous lawyer in Minneapolis, he was blinded in 1907 by a patent electrical cigar lighter in a drug store. His devoted wife was "his eyes" and he kept on with his law. He was elected to congress in 1915. He is an orator and speaks Swedish, Danish, Norwegian and German. He and his wife campaigned the state in a flivver, she doing the driving. He says he won because he is a bigger freak than Magnus Johnson.

Mrs. Elkins and Her Three U. S. Senators

Mrs. Hattie Davis Elkins, a familiar figure in Washington society, has a unique position. She is the daughter of the late Senator Henry Gassaway Davis of West Virginia (1871-83). She is the widow of the late Senator Stephen B. Elkins of West Virginia, who was first elected to the senate in 1895 and was serving his third term at his death in 1911; he was also secretary of war 1891-93 in Harrison's cabinet. She is the mother of United States Senator Davis Elkins of West Virginia. Henry Gassaway Davis was born in Baltimore, lost his father and went to work young, beginning life as a railroad brakeman. Senator Elkins was born in Ohio. He was a college man, lawyer and coal operator and founded the town of Elkins, W. Va.

Senator Davis Elkins was born in Washington in 1876. He left Harvard to enlist in the Spanish-American war. He was appointed by Governor Glasscock of West Virginia to fill the vacancy caused by his father's death, serving January 9 to January 31, 1911. He served overseas in the Seventh division, A. E. F., and was elected while in France to the senate for the term 1919-25. He is a banker.

Community Building

Let Local Pride Find Expression at Home

Local pride is based on affection for the place in which you live and is almost as natural a sentiment as family pride, says the Youth's Companion. Like family pride, it may be useful and stimulating, or it may be futile and deadening.

A proper local pride manifests itself in study of the history of the community and its founders, in a desire for a thorough knowledge of the institutions, industries and people of the community, and in acquiring familiarity not only with the topography and the external aspects of the place but also with its spirit. Anyone whose local pride is strong enough to impel him to such study will become imbued with an ambition to contribute to the improvement of the community; he will be in his turn one of the makers of its history.

Local pride that finds its expression at home is an admirable trait. There is, however, a kind of local pride that is frequently exhibited only by people who are away from home, and that is not to be commended. It is usually a mark of narrowness and prejudice. A man need not sacrifice or abate his love of home in order to recognize the superior claims to general interest that some other place offers. Provincialism, as local pride is likely to be called when it expresses itself away from home, is usually bumptious, hypercritical and petty. It retards the mental growth of the man who suffers from it, for he is seldom one who at home shows any local pride of a constructive character.

Better Homes Make for Better Living

The Better Homes exposition, which has made the public hall once more the special center of attraction and interest in Cleveland might well be called a "Better Living" show. The home is so much the heart and soul of life that the sum of existence, for the average man or woman, is very nearly the measure of success or failure in homemaking. If the home is happy the world usually looks bright and well worth while. If the home is not cheerful and comfortable life is heavily handicapped.

This is so true and the truth is so vital to the state, the whole nation, that whatever tends to build up and guard, beautify and make more attractive, the homes of a great city or of any large community, is of special importance to the public, near and far. What one city does in that field may well prove the source of similar gains for contentment and happiness in many other places.—Cleveland News-Leader.

Kansas City's Example

The greatest incentive to civic beauty is the thing that inspires worthy emulation. Kansas City's residential development has grown from small beginnings deliberately planned by individuals to promote public interest, to show by example what could be done with the small lot or the pretentious homesite, to demonstrate that beauty may be attained by little additional expense and that whatever the additional cost, it is the best part of the investment.

And thus it has come to pass that Kansas City has made a reputation, in a comparatively few years, for the beauty of its homes and their surroundings. Its example has influenced many other cities. But the greatest force of that example is right here at home.—Kansas City Star.

Serves Double Purpose

In European countries, where forestry is an established department of government, it is a uniform rule that no tree can be cut down unless another one is planted to take its place. That prevents forest depletion, but it does not create new forests. America must repair its prodigious timber wastage of the last half century, besides creating vast areas of timber lands as a counterfoil to nature's own wastage for centuries.

There is no better method of spreading the tree-planting habit, in farming communities, than in bordering all state highways with trees.

Rules for Shrub Planting

There is a great wealth of shrubbery, both native and imported, from which growers may select. Be careful to select shrubs hardy for the locality. For this reason shrubs native to the section are usually planted with less risk. Both evergreen and deciduous shrubs should be used and grouped in such a manner as to make the grounds appear well occupied throughout the year.

Get Ready for Visitors

In the olden days a town was judged by the view from the railroad train. Today the approach to the city on the highways gives the first and usually a lasting impression to the tourist. Special attention should be given the approaches to the city on all main highways with prospects of thousands of tourists visiting northern Minnesota. Nor is it too late to get started on this work, in which the entire community will benefit.—Bemidji Pioneer.

IT WAS the great day of the Fourth of July, and Tommy, like all the other seven children of the busy Allister family was out bright and early. Tommy had a great friend in the lady next door. So, Tommy had learned, and, by the way, kept it a safe secret from the rest of the troop, that when his stomach growled too loudly, if he were to go to next door he most always could get a piece of the best bread and jam, and perhaps run an errand or two for her to ease his conscience.

Tommy, bright and early, had found his way over to Mrs. Askins', as he called her. She was busy getting ready to go to a picnic.

"You see, Tommy," she explained in answer to his questions, "this man who is coming with his car to take us out to his house where we are to have our picnic, is an old chum of Mr. Haskins.

As they loaded the things into the car Tommy trooped along and was introduced to Mr. Miller. While they stood there Tommy spied a balloon man coming down the street. As the noise of the horn grew nearer, Tommy's eyes enlarged.

"Aren't those whoppers, though," Tommy sighed. "Gee!"

"Wouldn't you like one, Tommy?" suggested Mr. Miller, digging into his pocket. "Now, I'll tell you, Tommy, if you know my name next year when I come after these folks on the Fourth, I'll buy you another balloon.

It was almost Christmas now, and Tommy was once more in the Haskins kitchen, watching preparations for another feast, but of a different sort. The most wonderful pies, cakes and puddings were being evolved. Suddenly, Tommy burst forth:

"Say, Mrs. 'Askins, do you remember what that man said?"

"No, Tommy; what are you thinking about?"

"Do you suppose he will come back? You know he bought me a balloon, and said if I remembered his name he would buy me another when he came back."

"Of course he will," said Mrs. Haskins.

"Oh, I am so glad. My mother she just says I am silly when I ask her and says, 'I am too busy to be bothered with that. Run along, now!' And you know," Tommy hastened to add, "I haven't forgotten his name either. It's Mr. Miller."

That night Mr. Miller dropped in for a minute at the Haskins'. Before his departure Mrs. Haskins had a moment of conversation with him alone. He said, "All right," leaving with the merriest kind of a twinkle in his eyes.

Christmas Eve came. Daddy and Mother Allister were doing their best to keep from looking sorrowful. They knew only too well that they could never begin to give the children the number of things each wanted. The children had all gone to bed. Just Daddy and Mother Allister were in the parlor fixing up a little, scraggly tree when a knock, ever so gentle on the front door, attracted their attention.

"I am sorry to bother you at this hour, but I wanted to wait until I was sure Tommy would be in bed. Perhaps you would feel better to know my name—Miller," he said, shaking hands with Mr. Allister after depositing his load on the table. "I've a tree outside here," and he hurried out to get it.

The next morning was never equaled in all the annals of the Allister family. Such excitement, such happiness. Tommy, after his recovery from surprise and rapture over his toys, ran to his happy mother as she was trying to get breakfast. Tugging at her skirts, he said, "You see, mother, that man I met on Fourth of July was Santa Claus, and his name is Mr. Miller."

The Christmas Message

Christmas represents a great historic event and spiritual truth—the most important of all events, the most precious of all truths—no less than the coming of God to earth, in human nature, in the person of a child, to save us from our sins.. That makes the wonder and the glory and the blessing, in the birth of Jesus. He came to express the divine love, and by His sacrificial death, to make that love effective unto the salvation of all who should believe on him. The cross on Calvary marks the tragedy in the life of the child born at Bethlehem. It also makes its glory.—Presbyterian Banner.

The Actor's Christmas Party

By H. Lucius Cook

(©, 1924, Western Newspaper Union.)

ALL of the actors of the Zoroaster Stock company were good, but perhaps Billy Kelly was the best liked by the townspeople. Billy had been there six weeks, now, and was living at Mrs. Perkins' on Center street. Hence Center street was particularly thrilled at this time, because it had never before harbored a real live actor, and it could not quite get used to the idea.

Mrs. Perkins was a respectable middle-aged widow who had to take a few roomers to help out on expenses. She was not quite sure that it was right to have Billy rooming there, as she had an inherited prejudice against actors, but he paid twice as much as she had ever had before for the rooms, did not cause any extra bother, and so far as she could determine, was a human being much like the rest of us.

It did seem strange to her, however, that a young unmarried man should receive one hundred and fifty dollars a week when Mr. Perkins with his family had earned only that much a month. She wondered if it was honest. And then, too, she did not always know just what to make of Billy's attentions to her. Why, one time when she had fallen asleep on the sofa without a covering, he had gone to his own room and got his genuine Japanese silk kimona and covered her with it. She had found it over her when she woke up.

Mrs. Perkins had just finished telling this and several other incidents to the Ladies' Aid society, when one of the progressive ladies asked:

"Well, what are we to do with him for Christmas? It doesn't seem right not to do anything, when he is away from his people and all."

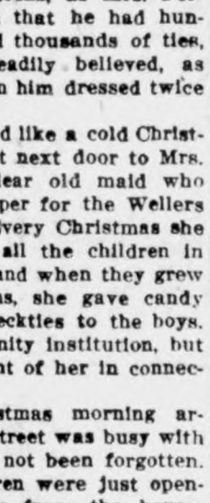
Everyone else had been thinking the same thing, but had not dared mention it, and none of them had any suggestions to make. No one dared ask him to dinner (they were so shy), and Mrs. Perkins herself, who really should have asked him, had decided to go to the hotel so as not to have to do so. They certainly could not give him ties or socks, as Mrs. Perkins assured them that he had hundreds of socks and thousands of ties, which everyone readily believed, as they had never seen him dressed twice the same.

It certainly looked like a cold Christmas for Billy. But next door to Mrs. Perkins lived a dear old maid who had been housekeeper for the Wellers for many years. Every Christmas she made mittens for all the children in the neighborhood, and when they grew too big for mittens, she gave candy to the girls and neckties to the boys. She was a community institution, but nobody ever thought of her in connection with Billy.

But when Christmas morning arrived, and Center street was busy with its toys, Billy had not been forgotten. The Perkins children were just opening their packages from the housekeeper next door when one of them discovered an envelope for Billy. He darted upstairs, and timidly knocked on the actor's door and slipped the envelope under.

"What could it be?" wondered Mrs. Perkins, for she knew it was no Christmas card.

She had not long to wonder, however, for Billy soon came running down flourishing a crisp new dollar bill which he had found in the envelope, and called to one of the children coming he told Mrs. Perkins of the welcome present, and how it had suggested to him to give a party next door in honor of the housekeeper. He told her to take the children over there quickly, as he would be back in twenty minutes.



True to his word, he was there in twenty minutes, and with him the whole Ladies' Aid society, and, to the delight of everyone, a whole gallon of ice cream which he and the kindly housekeeper served to all assembled, with many jokes and much merriment. Then Billy sang some rousing Christmas songs, kissed the housekeeper on the brow and taxied all the ladies home.

He had so many invitations to dinner he had to refuse them all, but he was not sorry for this as he joined Mrs. Perkins at the hotel, and he really liked her best of all.

Might Have Been Worse

"What did your wife give you for Christmas?"

"Nothing."

"That was tough."

The Indian's First Christmas

By Emily Burks Adams

(©, 1924, Western Newspaper Union.)

THE first Christmas to the Indians was through the government, and though simple at first, their Christmas today is replete with joy and revelry and very spectacular. (I speak especially of the Pawnees.)

A big council house has been built at Pawnee, Okla., in which to celebrate Christmas. The tribe assembles near, and is encamped until after New Year. Christmas is the great event of the year, and a beautifully decorated tree is the feature. Gifts from toggery to automobiles are given; beeves are roasted, and feasting, dancing and singing are a part of the program.

It was only a few days until Christmas, and Eagle Eye, seeing palefaces at the agency, went to the store. Nathan Yale, a government employee, hailed him with, "Hi, Eagle Eye, meet our friends from Carlisle. You know my niece, Miss Yale, also Anita."

"Yes," said Eagle Eye; "I can't forget my teacher. Glad to see you, Miss Yale, and you, too, Anita."

"Yes, Eagle Eye," said Rachel, "Anita has returned to assist me with the Christmas program and you are to be my interpreter."

"Rachel," said Nathan Yale, "did you see Anita scowl? Remember the Indian's characteristic—they are yours if they like you; you are theirs if they don't."

Only two days until Christmas and Rachel and Eagle Eye were busy with the tree. They had toys and candy for the children, and beads and jewelry for the others, and the joy and excitement was not unlike our own as Christmas approaches. A program was to be given. A talking machine was to furnish the music, and a pile of logs in front of the lodge was for warmth and to light up the tree.

"Eagle Eye," said Rachel, "we need more mistletoe for our tree."

"Well, here's the ponies; let's go for some and we can stop at our traps."

As they neared the traps Eagle Eye said: "We have big heap turkey! I'll take them back and will catch you before you make the hill." He was off at Indian speed. Rachel started to mount but was jerked around and she stood face to face with Anita.

"Oh, Anita, you wouldn't hurt me! I'm your friend!" said Rachel.

"No, you my enemy! You sneak like Sioux! Eagle Eye give you buffalo robe. I hate you! You'll ride no more with him! Hear!"

Anita clapped her hand over Rachel's mouth, threw her into Bear creek, then skulked down the stream.

Big Jim, white chief of the tribe, who lived on Blue Hawk peak, saw Anita throw Rachel into the creek. He ran, dived into the water and brought Rachel to the surface; unable to get up the steep bank, he called loudly for help. Eagle Eye was returning and answered the call; together they climbed the bank.

"Why you here, Jim? You sneak! You'll explain this," said Eagle Eye, as he tenderly wrapped his blanket around Rachel.

It was Christmas Eve; Rachel and Eagle Eye were behind the curtain.

"Eagle Eye, Jim cares nothing for me; he saved my life and you must not harm him," said Rachel. "I've told you I can't marry you; I respect and like you; Anita loves you. Marry her, Eagle Eye—one of your own race."

"Me marry Anita after she tried to kill you! No; Indian is always avenged."

"Eagle Eye, you are your people's leader; they believe in you. It was love for you that prompted Anita to do as she did. You felt the same toward Jim when you thought he was taking me from you. Don't you understand? You are educated; you're to lead your people. Promise me? This is Christmas, Eagle Eye, and we should have good will toward all. You will promise me?"

Eagle Eye took Rachel's hand. "I promise," he said.

The curtain was drawn and the whoops and yells expressed but mildly the joy of the first Christmas to the Indians.

Old Eagle Chief said: "Big heap day when Eagle Eye was born; he has brought us education, civilization and Christ."

A yell went up from the tribe: "Eagle Eye shall be our Chief! Eagle Eye shall be our chief!"

Banker-Farmer Notes

Chambersburg, Pennsylvania, banks and Chamber of Commerce at the beginning of 1923 mapped out a vigorous program for the promotion of agriculture in the county. Throughout the year they assisted in keeping the farm organizations functioning and distributed to them agricultural bulletins and information of interest. They held rural community meetings and entertainments, exhibits of farm and home products, and advertised home products. One specific result was to induce a milk receiving station to locate in the vicinity, and during the first month $20,000 was paid the farmers for their milk. This marked the turning point in the farmer's business.

California bankers created an emergency fund of $1,000,000 at a meeting recently in San Francisco to combat the foot-and-mouth disease which has broken out in that State. The Federal and State governments each pay one-half of the appraised value of the animals slaughtered, and the State government was not prepared to meet this unexpected expense. The bankers agreed to supply the funds needed as a loan to the State government.

Christmas in British Isles

Christmas was introduced in what are now the British Isles under the Saxon rulers and was continued, in the winter solstice when the people had little to do, by the Anglo-Saxon kings and the succeeding monarchs of Norman blood. The celebrations beginning with court festivities and graduating down to the poorest families were frequently uproarious. In the reign of Elizabeth the Puritans attacked the Yuletide festivities, but the celebrations continued to flourish until the rule of Queen Mary. The Puritans, aided by the conditions growing out of civil war, finally succeeded by 1647 in abolishing the holiday.—George Newell Moran.

Toys for Small Children

A little tot from one to two enjoys little games that can be played with the fingers and simple toys such as dolls, animals and balls made of rubber, wood, knitted or rag materials and plain blocks.

The argument might just as well end. The most popular seven passenger car in the community is the flivver.

On the sand, not a score of feet away, the dying embers of a tiny fire were flickering.

Bunker and Carr had seen the gleam almost as soon as Nellie. Swiftly they dropped their oars into the water, checking the boat's way. "Here they are, all right," remarked Bunker, not without satisfaction.

The skiff grated on the sand and half a dozen dull forms sprang up, dimly visible in the circle of firelight. In a foreign tongue some one spoke what was evidently a challenge.

With a cry, Carr tried to back away. But before he could make a single stroke hands stretched to the gunwale and drew the boat high.

Carr shrugged his shoulders. "We're caught!" he muttered. "Who are they?" he asked Nellie.

Nellie leaned forward and addressed the leader of the party in the foreign tongue he had used. Then, without waiting for a reply, she turned to Carr and Bunker. "They are friends," she said. "Some of the people who live here, I think. Everybody here speaks Danish, you know. We had better get out and I will talk to them." She stood up, took the hand that one of the men extended and jumped lightly ashore.

Carr and Bunker followed.

Beside the fire Nellie halted and turned to a man who seemed to be the leader. "I am Miss Archman," she said, in Danish.

The man saluted formally. For several minutes the two talked. Then Nellie turned to her companions. "I don't understand what he says very well," she explained. "I've tried to tell him about the mutiny, but he doesn't seem to understand me, either. He says that the captain is up the mountain somewhere, but he has just sent a messenger to say that he is on the way back. I asked him about our people, but he says he hasn't seen any of them. I'm not certain that he belongs here. He doesn't know who Overlord Dorth is and—"

"Overlord Dorth!"

"Yes. Dorth rules the island. I haven't had time to tell you of him. I'm afraid these people are intruders. And yet—"

"Didn't Captain Bunker say that a ship was following us?" broke in Carr. "These men look like marines and—"

Nellie caught her breath. "Marines?" she cried. "Oh! They can't be! They can't be—"

She broke off as the men faced round and stood at attention. The flickering flames shone on what were undoubtedly uniforms.

A line of armed sailors was approaching. As Nellie faced about, a man, obviously an officer, strode into the circle of the firelight. When he saw Nellie he saluted. "Good evening, madame," he said in Danish.

"Good evening!" Nellie replied in English. "Do you speak English?"

"I speak it a little." The officer's words were precise, but his accent was good.

"I'm so glad. I speak Danish very badly. I am Miss Archman—"

The man's face changed instantly. He whipped his hand to his cap. "Miss Nellie Archman?" he questioned eagerly.

"Yes, but—"

The officer spun around. "Stand back!" he ordered to the men, who were crowding inward. "Lieutenant, withdraw your men to a respectful distance." He swung round again. "The gracious lady will pardon?" he said. "I did not know. What is the gracious lady's pleasure? I am Captain Strindberg."

The flickering firelight danced on Nellie's bewildered face and in the no less perplexed countenances of Carr and Bunker.

"I am glad to meet you, captain," faltered the girl. "But I don't quite understand what you mean. I—"

"I and my men are at the gracious lady's service. If she will lead us to her father—"

Nellie's face clouded. "I wish I could," she exclaimed. "He must be worried to death."

"He is here? He is well?"

"Oh, yes! He is here—that is, near here; and he is well. But— Oh! I don't know what to say. You are in the service of Overlord Dorth, are you not?"

"Overlord Dorth? D-orth?" Abruptly the officer's face brightened. "Surely, surely, gracious lady. I ask nothing better than to serve him."

"Then—then— You must know about my father—Mr. Archman, you know—and how we came down here, and what—"

"Your father, Mr. Archman! Pardon! The gracious lady has not yet seen Overlord Dorth?"

"Yes, I've seen him, and I am to see him tomorrow. I was to have seen him today to hear something important that he wants to tell me. But he wasn't strong enough."

"He is not ill?"

"I'm afraid he is. Very ill. Did you not know it?"

Captain Strindberg fairly wrung his hands. "Take me to him at once, gracious lady," he begged. "I must see him at once, at once."

"But I cannot take you to him. I don't know the way. Don't you know it? Oh! What does it all mean?"

Carr struck in. He had been listening with growing uneasiness. "It means that Captain Strindberg is a stranger here, Nellie," he declared. "How he got here, I don't know, unless he came on that ship Captain Bunker was so troubled about. Don't tell him anything—"

"Silence!" Strindberg roared the order. "Silence! Who are you?"

The young fellow shrugged his shoulders. "I go by the name of Carr," he answered. "This lady is to be my wife and I advise her—"

"Your wife! You are a fool. This lady is not for such as you. She—"

But Nellie interposed. "Stop, Captain Strindberg," she said, with sudden imperiousness. "Stop! This is a matter with which you have nothing to do." She turned to Carr. "Forgive me, dear," she said. "I don't know who or what Captain Strindberg is, but I have no choice except to trust him. Our ship is in the hands of mutineers; my mother and friends are lost; my father is probably a prisoner; and we ourselves are fugitives. If this gentleman really means harm to a feeble old man like Overlord Dorth—"

"Harm! No!" broke in Strindberg. "I am glad to hear you say it. At any event I cannot stop you. This island is small and you will soon find him no matter what I do or say. Captain Strindberg, I will tell you everything so far as I know it. Then I will ask you to help us."

CHAPTER XVI

Until Daylight

Lord George descended into the ravine with extreme caution. He could see the ground where his next footstep was to be planted, but he could see little more; and he could not be sure that the next stone on which he put his weight would not give way beneath him and send him crashing to the unknown depths below. Moreover, he was by no means certain what he would find if he reached the bottom in safety.

The map had come into the possession of the party mysteriously—as mysteriously as the first map had come. Might it not, like that first map, be a forgery, deliberately designed to lead astray, if not to betray to ruin and death, those who trusted it? Certainly it seemed queer that it should be necessary to descend into such a pit in order to reach a road that seemed to lead up the mountain.

Lord George suspected all things. He believed that at any moment he might have to fight for his life; and he moved silently as a shadow, with an automatic pistol clutched in his right hand.

At the bottom at last, he found himself standing on a broad, flat rock, in front of which the ground seemed faintly luminous. Hesitantly he stooped and put out his hand and touched water. He had halted on the edge of a stream or inlet—probably the last, as he quickly ascertained that the water was salty. It appeared to be twenty or thirty feet broad.

Hesitatingly he faced seaward—then jumped, as a sparkle of light flashed to his eye. It was the merest flash, gone almost before it was seen, but it was as conclusive as a bonfire. Some human being was at the bottom of the ravine, close at hand. Silently he crept toward the spot.

The way was not long, nor the walking difficult. The path was well trodden and free from obstructions, and he moved along rapidly. Almost instantly he heard voices, one of which at least, though low, was wrung with pain.

"Something's wrong," the speaker wailed. "Something's wrong. She'd have come back else. What shall I do? What shall I do? Nellie! Nellie! Nellie!"

The voice broke; then went on. "Flash your light, Olaf!" it ordered. "Flash your light."

An electric torch flashed, revealing the tossing waters of the bay. Again and again it flashed. Then the voice spoke again, hopelessly. "It's no use, Olaf. Something's gone wrong and I'm helpless. If she's lost the way—But she hasn't lost the way. She'd have called out if she had—if nothing were wrong."

Then another voice spoke. "What can have gone wrong, Mr. Archman? It is your ship and—"

Archman! Lord George started. So it was Bess' father upon whom he had chanced. Well and good! He slipped his pistol into his belt and took a step forward.

"Good evening, Mr. Archman!" he said quietly. "I'm delighted to find you!"

Two suppressed exclamations and a sudden thudding of feet came from in front. Lord George could barely see the men, but he knew that they had faced around. "Don't shoot!" he called laughingly. "I'm alone and I'm a friend. I repeat, Mr. Archman, that I am glad to find you. Your wife and younger daughter are waiting for you only a few yards away. We came down on the El Rio."

"My wife and Bess— Who are you?"

"I'm a Johnny Bull—Lord George Caruthers. Flash your torch on me and satisfy yourself, if you like. Ah! Quite right. You see I'm alone. Now, if you'll allow me, I'll come nearer and explain."

There was a pause; then Archman spoke quietly. "Come nearer if you like. If you are from the El Rio, God knows you are welcome."

Lord George came forward briskly. "I'll cut it short," he said, "for I fancy we're all in a hurry. It's this way." Swiftly he told about the voyage of the El Rio, the shore excursion, and the mutiny he had witnessed from the mountain top.

At this point Archman groaned. "Good Heaven!" he breathed. "Nellie's on board."

"Nellie? Your daughter?"

"Yes! We heard this afternoon that a ship was lying here. Nellie heard it first and left at once, saying she was going on board. I was detained. As soon as I could, I hurried after her, but when I got there she was gone—gone in the only boat—and darkness had shut down. I could see the lights of the ship, but I couldn't make anybody on board hear me, shout as I might. And I had no boat, you know. I sent back for one, but it couldn't be brought until low tide. I am expecting it now; but—but Nellie has been gone for nearly six hours. God! It drives me mad, mad! You—you know who was on the El Rio. Tell me, why should the men mutiny? Captain Bunker is not a hard master—"

"I don't think it was a question of discontent. Things have been happening all the way down." Lord George told of the attempt to signal, the discovery of the destroyer lying in wait, and the passage of the Danish-speaking sailors. Somewhat to his surprise the story seemed to encourage Archman.

"If that is all," he breathed; "if that is all—all will be well. Already they guess that—that—no matter! They will treat Nellie with all respect. Take me to my wife and to Bess." He made a step forward.

Abruptly the third man, who had not yet spoken, broke in. "The moon!" he said. "She come!"

Archman drew a long breath. "Maybe we would better wait," he said. "The moonlight will reach the El Rio in a few minutes. And if the destroyer is near—" He paused impressively.

"Perhaps it will be," Lord George hesitated. "But—hang it all, I hate to croak, you know, but I'm afraid you're in for a fine disappointment. We saw the trouble from the mountain, and the destroyer didn't take any part in it. No boats came or went, and the destroyer didn't follow when the El Rio started in this direction. I'm sorry, but I don't believe it had anything to do with the mutiny. It doesn't look to me like an ordinary mutiny. It looks to me more like what you Americans call a put-up job."

"Then—then—Nellie is lost!"

"Oh, no! The game isn't played out yet. These chaps don't want to run away with the ship, or they'd have gone before now. They're waiting for something, and as they've moored the ship close to here it looks as if they wanted to find you. Anyhow, I'll wager they'll be coming ashore in the morning, and when they do—well, we'll have an innings. And, besides, there's that destroyer. It didn't come here for nothing. I suppose you know why it did come, by the way?"

Archman hesitated. He seemed to be turning the situation over in his mind and trying to resolve whether to explain at all, and, if so, how much.

Again the third man broke in. "Ship!" he said. "See!"

Black against the silver water the masts and funnels of the El Rio protruded themselves. The shadow of the mountain had left them bare and it was retreating slowly downward.

Archman looked at it and nodded slowly. Then he faced toward Lord George. "There is a reason for the destroyer's coming," he said. "But—you will forgive me if I do not speak now. Soon all will be known. Conditions are changing fast. For years the—the—the—he whom I serve has been hiding from those who would find him. But now—I cannot say more. Soon—perhaps tomorrow—all will be made clear. At any rate, Nellie is safe. Come! Let us seek Mrs. Archman. What's that?"

From out on the water had come a sudden uproar—a far-off mingling of shouts and cracking of pistols. Lights flared out, moved and vanished and reappeared. The moonlight had swept downward to the deck of the El Rio, but the distance was too great and the bulwarks of the ship too high for it to reveal anything.

Then abruptly something flashed and Lord George uttered an exclamation. "They're swinging out boats!" he cried. "One, two, three of them. They're doing it fast, too. Listen! You can hear them."

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

A hot temper warps the judgment.

MIDSEASON DAY DRESSES; LUXURIOUS MIDWINTER COATS

MID-WINTER brings its heavy coats, and heavy coats are worn over day-dresses, so that these are the days when stylists concern themselves with frocks for street, traveling, business and informal afternoon wear. The tunic and sheath styles find themselves rivaled by silhouettes in which plaits, side panels, flares and draperies indicate a movement toward less dominance of the straight line.

Besides this diversity in silhouettes, interest is added to new day frocks by variety of materials used and by the introduction of smartly tailored models. For these business, or traveling, or utility frocks, the choice of designers falls upon wool fabrics—poiret and other twills in plain or hairline stripes, plain and checkered flannels and other wools—while dresses that are to serve for informal afternoon wear add to the plain wools a choice of crepe-satin, flat crepe, canton and novelty weaves in wool.

But the variety in fabrics is far less than that in designs, which are so much varied by little differences in decoration. These dresses are all long-sleeved, but sleeve finishes and neck treatments know no end to individual touches. Some idea of the diversity in designs can be gathered from the illustration, which emphasizes a tailored model of hairline twill. This dress has sloping panels at the sides, round collar and band cuffs. Black braid and little bone buttons in gray, effectively used with black or dark blue, striped in gray. Black silk braid and bone buttons are logical adornments, but good use has been made of little round gun-metal buttons on similar designs.

Many dresses in dark wool materials are made with front panels of silk crepe in bright colors, as dark blue with red, dark brown with red-orange, navy with henna, or black with any of these shades. When only touches of bright color are wanted, pipings, collars and cuffs usually contribute it.

Mid-winter coats establish one thing to a certainty—and that is the insistence of the mode in the matter of the straightline. There is variety in style of sleeves, collars, fastenings, but no departure from the straight and narrow way in the silhouette. In sports models mannish types form a distinct class—roomy and very smartly styled but still straight. To make up for uniformity of line fashion favors us with much variety in colors and fabrics, countless trimming ideas both in fabrics and furs.

Even inexpensive coats are rich and tasteful in appearance. Nearly all of them have some touch of fur—if only a band on the full collars so made as to muffle up the neck when they are needed. The care with which furs and fabrics are matched up in color tones—using shades that blend or sharp contrasts that are attractive—is an outstanding feature in the styles.

The two coats pictured disclose the management of fur trimming successfully, either when it is lavishly or sparingly used. In the coat at the left scallops of the material are placed over an underlying strip of metallic braid. One can imagine it in gray or beige pile fabric trimmed with squirrel fur in natural color, or in brown with a brown fur or black with black fur.

Tailored Model of Hairline Twill.

Two Comfortable Models.

The handsome coat at the right of brown cloth, has a trimming of dyed muskrat resembling mink.

All the warm wood browns in coatings look well with brown fur that shades from very dark to lighter tones. Cranberry and burgundy reds, with the rust and henna shades, combine beautifully with Hudson seal or with black furs. Natural red fox finds place on very dark and on light cloth. A new fad has appeared in fur bandings, in which furs in strong color contrasts are fashioned into plaid or striped designs, but the more conservative combinations of furs that tone in with the color of the cloth are handsomest.

Glasses for Color Blind

Victims of color blindness will hail the new development in optical science that enables correction of color blindness with glasses. This defect is due to the eye not differentiating different colors with the varying wave lengths of light. It is now proposed to adjust the eyes with the use of colored glasses. This development is still in its early stage.

HOGS — THE CHEAPEST THING IN THE WORLD

Farmers Should Hold Hogs as They Are Sure to Advance

Farmers should hold back their hogs. They are now too cheap to feed them corn, and they are almost sure to advance. May corn in Chicago is selling at about $1.20 per bushel. In order to make feediing profitable in accordance with the old rule of 13 to 1 feeding basis. hogs should sell at $15.00 per cwt. Hogs are now selling at about $9.00 per cwt. In our opinionn hog prices will advance to a parity with corn prices and they may even surpass this parity, because when their scaricity once becomes known prices may advance beyond their comparative basis.

It looks little hard to feed $1.20 corn to $9.0 hogs, but we believe it will pay as hog prices are almost sure to advance. In addition to that it will have effect of consuming corn on the farms and thus assist in maintaining a good pricef or corn, which is a desireable thing for the farmer

Why Prices of Hogs Are Low

Hog raisers have had a panic. Prices of corn are high and the crop very scarce. It does not pay to feed corn to hogs. Therefore, many farmers have done the natural thing and rushed their undersized half fat hogs to market. As many as 95,000 a single day came to Chicago market the last week of November. Records were broken in then umber of hogs received at western markets. Is it small wonder that prices have continued low in face of phenomenal receipts? As a matter of fact it is remarkable thing that prices have stayed as high as they have .

Pig Crop Light

The Department of Agriculture at Washington say that the 1924 pig crop of last spring was much less than the previous crop and that a much smalled number of sows are bred for fall farrowing.

If one takes into consideration the large "panicky" receipts of half-fat hogs together with the short crop of pigs both for spring and fall of 1924, and then considers the short crop of corn of poor feeding value, the conclusion is inevitable that the country is being drained of hogs.

Prices

Wheat is 60 cents per bushel higher than a year ago. Corn is 50 cents higher than a year ago. Stocks in Wall Street are breaking all previous records. Everybody is optimistic about future business, meanwhile hogs are only 1½ cents per pound higher than a year ago. In other words. wheat prices are 60 per cent higher than a year ago. Corn is 70 per cent higher than a year ago, while hogs and pork products are only about 18 per cent higher than a year ago.

Therefore. wes ay hogs are too cheap and that they are sure to advance. We advise that corn should be fed sparingly at first so that the hogs can be held back until a little later in he season than usual; then they should reach a price that will compensate the farmer for feeling his high priced corn to them.—W. E. Gould.

HELPFUL ADVICE ABOUT BUTCHERING

BUTCHERING HOGS ON FARM

Much of Success in Curing Depends On Trimming.

With the coming of continued cold weather, butchering becomes an important activity on many farms In the selection of animals for pork the most important consideration is cease fucdinng so that it will not only necessary to insure a good quality of pork, but also to prevent the transmission of disease to persons, through eating meat from infected hogs.

Smooth, evenly fleshed indjviduals should be selected and care should be used to avoid killing gilts or sows during the period of heat, according to M. D. Helser. meat specialjst of Iowa State College, for at this time the meat will not bleed out well. Hogs should not be fed at least 24 hours before killing, but should have of water and should not be excited or overheated.

In sticking, avoid cutting the heart as this will cause that organ to cease funcioning so that jt will not pump theb lood out of the arteries. The water for scalding should be heated about 150 degrees Fahrenheit. Having the water a little too cold will give better results than having it too hot. Adding a little lye or wood ashes to the waer may help some.

Scald the hjnd part of the animal first and keep the hog moving around in the barrel so that all parts are equolly scalded. When the hajr slips well on the hind flanks and egs scald the head end. After scaldjng clean the head and neck first as they are the hardest to clean if the yget cool. The hair comes off easied if scraped the way it ljes.

When most of theh air has been removed hang the hog up, finish removing the hair and rince carcass with cold water, after which the entrails may be removed. Then the carcass should be allowed to hang until it is thoroughly cool, but no part of them eat should be allowed to freeze. If permitted to freeze, a little crust froms on the ouside of the carcass and this prevents the escape of animal heat from the inner portions, which has a tendency to cause them eat to sour while in the cure.

Cutting the Pork Carcass

Much of the sucess with which pork may be utjlized and cured on the farm depends upon the way in which the carcass is cut up. Cutting should not be don until the carcass is thoroly cooled, after which it is splitinto halves. Lay a half carcass upon the cutting table, bone side up and djvide itinto four main parts: head, shoulder, middle and ham.

Cut the head off at the atlas joint which is the joint where the neck bones join hes kull. Cut off the shoulder across the third rib, being careful in removing then eck bones and the end of the spare ribs not to cut too deeply into the shoulder, else too much meat will have to be removed to make a smooth cut. The shoulder may then be trimmed to nearly like a ham as possible. However, the best way,, especially for a large shoulder, is to cut off the shoulder butt, beginning at the point where the neck bone came out and cutting on a line parallel to the top of the shoulder, according to M. D. Heset. Cut off the foot just above thek nee at right angles to the shank

Remove the ham by sawing on a line from a point between the fourth and fifth bones (counting backward from a point where theb ackbone rises toward the tail) thru a point about two inches in front of the pelvic bone and trim off all surplus fat and any rough euges.

To cut up the mjddle, separate the back and belly by cutting from a point just at the lower edge of the tenderlojn muscle where the ham was cut off, to a point at the lower end of theb ackbone at the shoulder end. Remove the fat back and trim the spare ribs from the belly being careful not to cut into the bacon.

FARMERS MAKE $60 A DAY

Individual Ear Testing is Profitable Practice for Iowa Corn Growers

Iowa farmers. who last spring took tjme to give their seed corn an individual ear test were paid for their care and their efforts at the rate of $60 per day, according to computations based on the results of experiments with 19 corn disease test plots conducted in njne Iowa counties during the past season. In conducting these pl ts the seed used was of three types—diseased seed farmers' seed which was aken directly from the planter boxes, and disease seed. The disease-free seed yielded 8.8 bushels more per acre than did the diseased seed and 4.4 bushels more per acre than id the farmers' seed. At thjs rate the use of individual ear test for seed corn would have meant an increase of $250. in the value of the 1924 corn crop, from the average Iowa farmers' corn field of 50 acres. Two or three days during the winter are sufficient time for the average farmer to test his corn by this method .

Diplodia dry rot and Basjsporium dry rot are responsible for most serjous losses in the state, according to Donald R. Prter, plant disease specialist, Iowa State College. Diplodia dry rot passes the winter either on old corn stalks left in the field or in stalks used for fodder and taken back to the fjeld with barnyord manure.

No known practice will dontrol all dry rot but prbably the most successful practice is the careful rotation of corn every two years. Two years should then elapse before corn is again grown on the same field, is the advice offered by Mr Porter.

TRIP TO MOON IS WITHIN POSSIBILITIES, SAYS PROF.

Traveler Would Return to Find Big Change in Earth

..Grjnell, December 22—A trip to the moon oreven to one of the more distant heavenly bodies, is entirely possible as far as physical science is concerned, professor of mathematics at Harvard university.

Although such a feat transcends popular imaginatjon, continued the professor, evertheless nearly every one of the fabulous predictions which Jules Verne made half a century ago have been realized, and we are on the eve of startling revelations which even his fertile mind failed to prophesy.

Accordjng to Professor Birkhoff, the interstellar explorer would return like Rip Van Winkle to find his childhood friends grown old. However the modern Rip would retain his own youth, Birkhoff said.

Month to Work up Speed

Enclosed jn a sealed heavy steel casing and supplied with oxygen. the daring youth would bes hot off into space at a speed almost as great as that of light or approximately 200,000 miles a second. It would require at least a month of constant high acceleration to acquire safely such an extraordinary velocjty.

Asthe projectile with its human cargo approached the moon at this terrific speed, the pull of the moon's gravity would deflect it from its path and guide it around the moon, back towards the earth like a comet.

The adventurer on the inside of the projectile would be experiencing queer sensations.Unnoticed by him his watch, relative to the earth, would be tickjng off the seconds very slowly and all his physiological activities would be going on at a proportionately slow rate. The progress of time for him would be only a fraction of the tjme which had elapsed on earth during his trip into space.

Would Find Changed World

When the projectjle rteurned to the earth and he scienists unsealed it. the liberated youth would step back ino a changed world. While for him, the trjp would have taken only a short time, it would find the world's time advanced 60 or 70 years

SANDERS DEFEATS WILLER

WILLER TAKES FIRST FALL IN 30 MINUTES

Leitzinger and Kraus Wrestle jn Preliminaries

In a finish match, Tuesday night, Gus Sanders of Mason City defeated Hans Wller, our local man. These men wrestled to a draw match on KlemmeD ay last fall and as was expected the match was a good one.

Wller tok tohethe first fall in thjrty minutes with a head sissors and a wrist lock. Willer chjefly worked for head lock and Nelson.

In the next round both men came back with renewed vigor. Sanders took the fall jn twenty-fve minutes with a diuble toe hold. The wrsetling in thjs round was rather rough. Willer threw his man off the stage, and Sanders pushed Willer through the door.

The last fall took but seven minutes and went to Sanders who took jt with a step over arm lock. Willer was plainly exhausted, not having had the trainjng necessary to compete with a man like Sanders, who is jn training every day. Willer is a fast man and if he had the training would make a good showjng any where.

Billy Schober of Clear Lake and Tigerson, light heavyweight champion of Iowa were both at the match. In the preliminare Leitznger and Chas. Kraus wrestled 20 mjnutes to a draw match. Leitzinger was the fastest man, but Kraus' superior weight overcame his fastness.

A very small crowd witnessed the match, and hardly enough proceeds were taken in to pay expenses.

NO POULTRY EPIDEMIC HERE

Fouls Are Merely in Weakened Condition Because of Weather—Says Iowa State Poultry Specjalist

Action recently taken by the city health board of New York city in placing a ban on the shipment of live chickens to the metropolis from a number of mid-western states. includ ing Iowa, because of the belief that some poultry of this section, has causes a great deal of alarm to poultry raisers in the cornbelt states.

The belief that the enormous loss of poultry thru death during shipment, is the result of some new, highly contagious liseaso, is erroneous, according to H. A. Bittenden, chief i poultry husbandry, Iowa State College. Altho losses have been so heavy as to substantiate such a conclusion, thef act is that chickens generally are in a state of low vitality this year, due to u favorable weather condjtions, fowls are unable to resist colds and other ordinary infections and die jn large numbers during the shjpment.

Overcrowding in poultry houses is one of the cimmonest causes of poor health in poultry. Poultrymen should cull out their flocks, selling those which are marketable and killing sick ones. The remaining flock should be adequately fed and cared for. Most fowls in good flesh may safely be used for food as there is a very slight danger of such poultry being diseased or of transmitting any form of avian disease to human beings.

GOMPERS PASSES AWAY IN TEXAS

Veteran Labor Leader Dies in Hospital at San Antonio.

San Antonio, Texas.—Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, died here at 4:10 o'clock Saturday morning. At that time all the members of the executive council of the Federation of Labor were called to his room.

The primary cause of death was acute heart trouble with pulmonary oedema, complicated by advanced nephritis and arterial hypertension.

Mr. Gompers' last illness began in Mexico City, where he was attending the Pan-American labor congress. Because of the high altitude in Mexico City he was hurried to the United States and to a hospital at San Antonio in the hope that lower altitudes would aid his recovery.

Samuel Gompers was born in London on January 21, 1850. His father was a cigarmaker and Samuel was the eldest of eight children. He came to America in 1863.

Interested in local labor movements, Gompers became the head and forefront of the American organized labor movement. In 1881 he organized the American Federation of Labor as a national association of labor unions, and with the exception of one year he was its president continuously from that time.

He saw it grow from a coterie of small locals to a national organization with a membership of more than 3,000,000. He spent several of the later years of his life in fighting autocracy abroad and radicalism in organized labor at home.

The conflict ended, he went to Paris, where he helped to organize the international labor congress.

The world-wide unrest which followed the conclusion of the World war did not spare American industry. Bolshevism early lifted its head. Explaining its menace, he said: "There has always been a radical element in the labor movement that has tried to destroy the very forces which have protected it all these years. It is this element which makes it so hard for organized labor to make its demands effective. The American Bolsheviki have earned for labor countless enemies and have represented us in an unfavorable light.

Six months after these words were spoken, of more than 300 strikes in various parts of the United States, it was reported that only 62 were "authorized" by the American Federation of Labor.

He charged German labor with having helped precipitate the world struggle, blamed prohibition for causing "unrest" in the United States; urged a labor union of the two Americas, denounced a United States senatorial investigation of Mexico as "Prussianism," supported the League of Nations, assailed the open shop platform of the United States Chamber of Commerce, demanded that Asiatics be kept out of the United States, pleaded for the release of all "political" and wartime prisoners, including Debs, opposed the establishment by the Washington administration of a department of welfare, praised President Harding's world disarmament efforts, and approved America's plan to aid famine-stricken Russia.

Among the laws Gompers framed, supported or originated were the eight-hour law for government employees; the various state laws fixing hours of labor; laws establishing Labor day as the workingmen's holiday; the federal workingmen's compensation law; the law limiting the use of injunctions in labor disputes; the law exempting labor unions from prosecution as combinations in restraint of trade, and the law regulating punishment for contempt of court.

He belonged to the Masons, Odd Fellows and Elks.

He was the author of numerous small pamphlets in the nature of tracts on labor questions, wrote a book on the world labor movement, and edited the American Federationist, the official organ of the American federation.

Throughout his career Mr. Gompers refused to become identified with any political party, taking the position that he could be of more service to the cause of labor by holding himself aloof from identification with any single political organization.

Mr. Gompers was twice married. His first wife, Sophia Julian of New York, died in 1919, shortly after the celebration of their fiftieth wedding anniversary. They had three sons and a daughter, the latter, a nurse in France, died during the war. On April 15, 1921, the labor leader, then seventy-one years old, married Mrs. Gertrude A. G. Neuscheler, thirty-eight years old, a music teacher.

NO ARBITRATION ON U. S. WAR CLAIMS

President Says Plan Will Never Be Presented.

Washington.—President Coolidge let it be known that he would look with disfavor on any move that Great Britain might make to refer the issue of American collection of war claims from Germany under the Dawes plan to the World Court of International Justice.

The President, who has seen reports from London that the British government, protesting the right of the United States to collect such claims under provisions of the Dawes reparations terms, would ask that it be referred to the international arbitration court, was emphatic in expressing opposition to such a course and also in predicting that such a proposal would probably not materialize.

The American position with respect to claims against Germany is perfectly clear, the President believes, and well established by various treaties. There is nothing in this position, reasserted by Secretary Hughes in a reply to the British protest delivered to the British foreign office by Ambassador Kellogg, that needs adjudication by a judicial tribunal, the President is certain.

It was also made known at the White House that the President does not see the slightest indication of any differences of opinions regarding American rights in the premises that cannot be adjusted by negotiation. It is evident, according to the Coolidge view of the matter, that the principle laid down by the American government with respect to its rights in the matter of war claims against Germany is being recognized by other governments. This is certainly true of Italy, France and Belgium, and the President thinks that there also has been an understanding about it with Great Britain.

It was announced at the Department of State that Ambassador Kellogg had reported delivery to the British foreign office of the American reply to the communication from the London government questioning the right of the United States to collect claims from Germany from benefits accruing to that country under the Dawes agreement. In that note Secretary Hughes set forth clearly that the Washington government has every right accorded to the allied and associated powers to make collections under the Dawes plan.

SENATE VOTES 8 NEW CRUISERS

$140,000,000 Bill to Rebuild Navy Now Goes to the President.

Washington.—The first step of the present congress toward bringing the United States navy up to a parity with that of Great Britain under the 5-5-3 arms limitation treaty was taken when the senate passed the cruiser and battleship rehabilitation bill calling for a construction and alteration program, carrying approximately $140,000,000.

The bill, which was held up at the last session on an eleventh-hour motion by Senator William H. King (Dem., Utah) to reconsider, was whisked through by Senator Frederick Hale (Rep., Maine) through the simple expedient of tabling Senator King's motion. The motion to table was carried by viva voce vote without opposition.

The bill was passed by the house at the last session and now only awaits the signature of President Coolidge before becoming a law.

The measure authorizes an appropriation of $18,360,000 for the installation of anti-air deck armor and torpedo protective "blisters" on the battleships New York, Texas, Florida, Utah, Arkansas and Wyoming, the conversion of certain of the capital ships to the oil-burning type and the installation of new fire-control systems on the New York and Texas.

It also provides for the construction of eight new scout cruisers "of the highest practicable speed and the greatest desirable radius of action" to cost $11,100,000 each, exclusive of armor plate. The measure also authorizes construction of six river gunboats, costing $700,000 each exclusive of armor, to be used principally in Chinese waters.

HEADS DEPARTMENT OF HOOSIER STATE

Entering the first training camp at Fort Benjamin Harrison, he was transferred to the heavy artillery school at Fortress Monroe and was commissioned a second lieutenant in the coast artillery corps.

Promoted to first lieutenant, he was assigned to Battery C in the Sixty-sixth artillery and left for France in July, 1918. He was then assigned to the mounted police at Brest and later became camp athletic officer at Camp Pontanezen, France. Ordered to the United States in May, 1919, he was assigned to Fort Rodman, Massachusetts.

LEGION IS PRAISED

COL. LINDSEY BLAYNEY, president of the Texas State College for Women, third largest women's college in the world, lauded the American Legion in an address made at the Texas fair recently: "The Legion," declared President Blayney, "stands four-square for the four cornerstones of this great republic—the home, the school, the church, and the law. The great trouble with many today is the fact that it seems that we are not quite sure what kind of a home, or school, or church or law we want in this country. Too many of us are so busy demanding 'our' kind of home, or school or church or law that we are showing a dangerous impatience with all these things as conceived in the minds of the great framers of that Magna Charta of American liberties, the Constitution of the United States. The Legion has sensed its great message of tolerance and is living it in its every act and deed."

THE RED LINE TRAIL

By Crittenden Marriott

Borne across the water came the creak of blocks and the rattle of oars, followed by heavy splashes, as the boats struck the water. Then they shot away from the ship and vanished into the shoreward shadows.

"They've separated," muttered Lord George. "They're going in three different directions. And they're pulling fast. Listen to them. They're— By Jove, Archman, I've guessed it. Somebody's escaped and they're after him. Maybe it's your daughter and Bunker. Bunker has found a way."

The sound of the oars did indeed show that the boats had separated widely. To right and to left the creaking had grown fainter. But directly in front it had grown louder.

Lord George noticed it and jumped. "One of them's coming here!" he cried. "We've got to do something, quick. Hello! What's that?"

From immediately behind a rattle of oars had sounded. Simultaneously Olaf spoke. "Our boat. She come!" he said.

A boat, with a lantern and a reflector at the bow, had shot into sight behind the three men.

Archman sprang toward it with an exclamation. "Just in time!" he cried. "Lord George, call your party down. Don't lose a minute. We must get the women to safety." He turned again to the boat. "Turn around, quick," he ordered. "Come along the bank and wait." Once more he faced toward the slope, up which Lord George was hurrying. "Quick! For heaven's sake, quick!" he called.

But Lord George was already at the top giving the alarm, and the next moment the party came plunging downward.

Lord George himself led the way, guiding Miss Denslow's footsteps and preventing her toppling over every precipitous break in the path. Behind her came Harry Archman, steadying his mother as well as he could on the narrow pathway. The poor lady was only half aroused from sleep and was tottering from weariness, but she did her best, incited by the news that her husband was waiting her and by Lord George's perhaps overoptimistic assertions that her troubles were over.

Behind her came Bess, and the rear was brought up by Collins, who had come up, panting, just in time to join the rest. As he took the first step of the descent, the moon, slipping above the last screening peak, illuminated the mountainside and all of the water except a narrow band close to the shore. In the refulgence the boat from the El Rio stood plainly out. The ravine itself escaped the direct rays, but its details became faintly visible by the reflected light.

At the bottom of the slope, beside the flat rock where Lord George had first halted, lay a broad, shallow boat, beside which Archman stood waiting.

Mrs. Archman tottered into his arms. "Henry! Henry!" she sobbed.

Archman patted her on the back. "That's all right, mother!" he said. "All right! Everything's all right." His breath caught as he remembered Nellie, but he went on bravely. "Get into the boat," he begged. "We've got no time to lose. Quick, quick!"

Lord George glanced about him, taking in details which had before been invisible in the gloom. The ravine was not a real ravine. It was merely a recess or inlet between high, rocky slopes. It ended abruptly half a dozen feet back from where he stood, in a precipitous wall of rock in which gaped the black face of a cave. The rescuing boat had come out of this and was going back into it.

Lord George glanced at his companions. Obviously they were more than the boat would hold. And the mutineers were very near. He spun around.

"Here, boys—whatever your names are—come! We'll hold the entrance." He started toward the sea.

"Wait, wait!" Archman's call was quick. "We'll hold them, but not just here. Come. I will show you!" He pushed the boat off and the two oarsmen, poling with their oars, drove it beneath the black archway of the cavern. Then he turned. "Follow me," he ordered, and stepped into a narrow, almost unnoticeable ledge of rock that ran along the side of the entrance to the cave.

Half out of sight he turned and beckoned. "Come!" he urged; and vanished into the blackness. With a shrug of his shoulders Lord George followed.

A moment later, looking out of the darkness, he saw the mutineers' boat shoot into the mouth of the outlet.

Simultaneously a pistol cracked behind him and one of the rowers jumped convulsively and then fell sideways into the boat; and the others, without orders, backed water desperately.

Then Archman spoke. "That will hold them for a while," he rasped. "Till daylight, anyway, I think. It is not long till then. When they do come we shall be ready for them."

CHAPTER XVII

The Attack.

The dawn came slowly up behind the mountain. The pallid stars winked out and the streak of placid water reaching from the cave to the bay silvered in the growing light. The bay itself glowed pink and the far islands that lay to the west swam slowly into sight, like a picture on a film in the developing tray.

Inside the cave, Lord George, who with Archman had watched the night away from a broad shelf of rock that faced the entrance across the curving tidal stream, rose and stretched himself. "I'm going to reconnoiter," he said.

Archman nodded invisibly in the darkness. "I was just thinking of going myself," he said. "But perhaps you can do it better. You are younger and more active. But you will be careful. Eight men are none too many to defend even so strong a place as this."

"I'll be careful." Lord George was already sidling along the narrow edge.

In a moment he was at the entrance and was peering cautiously about in the white dawn. Up and down the cut he looked, scanning the sloping sides, which were not nearly so precipitous as they had seemed when he descended them in the gloom of the night. Long he stared, straining his ears the while for any sound that might tell that the mutineers were lurking near, watching a chance to take the defenders by surprise. But neither eyes nor ears gave warning and at last he slipped from the entrance to the rock landing. Still no sign of danger presented itself.

He had two places to investigate—the mouth of the inlet and the crest of the ravine. The attack might come by boat from the one or it might come by land over the other. But Lord George knew that an attack by boat must be slower than one by land, and that if it came the attackers could not cut off his retreat. Besides, from the crest of the ravine, he could reconnoiter both land and sea.

Therefore he turned his face to the slope and began to ascend. He moved swiftly. Swiftness was his best protection, as concealment on the bare rocks was impossible. Up the slope he bounded till almost at the top. Then he stopped and lifted his head cautiously above the edge. Then he started; his eyes expanded; his ready automatic flashed up.

He found himself looking squarely into the muzzle of another pistol, held by a man who, prone upon his stomach, had just crawled to the edge and was looking over. For a moment death for one or both hung in the balance. Then Lord George lowered his pistol. "Don't shoot!" he said. "I'm a friend!" Behind the other he had seen an orderly line of men who were assuredly not mutineers.

As the other hesitated, Lord George stood up, slipping his pistol back into his pocket as he did so. "Who's in command?" he demanded.

An officer came forward promptly and saluted. "Lord George Caruthers?" he questioned. "I am Captain Strindberg, of the Danish navy, commanding a detachment from his majesty's ship Falsberg. I have heard of you from Captain Bunker of the El Rio. I have three of your party with me." He gestured toward Nellie, Carr and Bunker, who were hurrying forward.

Lord George glanced at them, recognizing Bunker and guessing who Nellie was. Then he looked back to Strindberg. "Glad to meet you, captain," he said. "I suppose Captain Bunker has told you everything. Have you seen anything of the mutineers?"

"They have just left the El Rio and are heading this way—three boats of them, about forty men in all. They seem to meditate an attack in force. Mr. Archman and the others are with you?"

"Yes; in a cave in the bottom of the ravine here." Lord George stepped past the officer. "Good morning, Captain Bunker," he said, holding out his hand. "You came in good time. I suppose this is Miss Archman?" He held out his hand to the girl. "Your father is terribly anxious about you," he added.

Nellie nodded. "Poor father!" she breathed. "I'm sorry, sorrier than I can say. This is Mr. Carr, Lord George. How is my mother?"

"Mrs. Archman and the rest are well. They are waiting below. I beg your pardon, captain?"

Strindberg was plucking the Englishman by the arm. "The boats approach quickly," he said. "Perhaps you will lead the way down the slope. I want not that your friends should shoot my men, not knowing that they are friends."

"Quite right." Lord George turned toward the ravine. Then he paused. "If I may suggest, captain, we have seven men below in a strong position. Why not keep your force up here till the mutineers attack and then take them in the rear?"

Strindberg drew himself up. "I have arranged that some stay, my lord," he said stiffly. "Be pleased to descend."

With a nod of compliance, Lord George started downward, followed by Nellie and the rest.

Archman was standing in the archway, looking eagerly out. At sight of Nellie he sprang forward with a cry, which the girl echoed gladly. Then he started and thrust her behind him as he saw the sailors descending the slope.

Strindberg stopped and saluted formally. "Captain Strindberg, of the Danish navy, Mr. Archman," he said. "Is his highness here?"

Archman hesitated. "His highness is not far away, captain," he said slowly.

"Good! You will take me to him so soon as I have ended this mutiny? Please lead the way into your cave." The captain spoke authoritatively.

Nellie had already vanished into the archway and Lord George and Carr were following. Archman, with a bow to Strindberg, slipped in and the others came swiftly after.

Obedient to quick orders the half dozen civilian defenders evacuated their post along the shelf of rock that faced the entrance, giving place to the sailors. Nellie had gone farther back to where Archman was waiting. The others at Strindberg's request moved to one side, out of range of possible bullets. "Now we will wait," said the captain. "We prepare our surprise for the mutineers, so!"

The preparations were finished none too soon. As the captain faced the now vivid opening of the arch, the first boat of the mutineers swung in at the mouth of the inlet and came on with a rush. Behind it, an instant later, the others approached. "Halt!" Strindberg's voice trumpeted from the archway.

A chorus of shouts answered. Above them rose Price's voice. "Rush 'em, boys. Rush 'em. Quick! Stroke! Stroke! Stroke!"

Strindberg stepped aside. "Fire!" he ordered calmly; and from the line of Danish marines sped a whirlwind of bullets.

Under it the attackers reeled. Half the men in the first boat fell from their seats. But from the stern sheets a dozen rifles answered, spitting lead into the darkness. Simultaneously, the second boat, veering to the right, sped past.

Again came the calm order "Fire!" and again the sailors' rifles flamed.

The starboard oarsmen in the second boat caught the fire and dropped their useless oars trailing in the water. The boat, driven by the port oars only, veered across the channel and the third boat crashed into it.

The attackers had had enough. Yells to "back water" rose and the third boat began to slip away. Simultaneously Strindberg's voice rang out "Surrender!" he called. "Look above you—and look behind."

The mutineers looked. Above them, at the top of the ravine, stood the rest of the Danes, and behind them were two boats filled with sailors in the uniforms of the Danish navy. Strindberg had laid his trap well.

CHAPTER XVIII

The Only Answer.

The fight had come too swiftly to permit much interchange of comment among the reunited civilians. Mrs. Archman and Bess and Miss Denslow had flatly refused to go on to the refuge that Archman had told them was waiting for them and had insisted on staying near their menfolk.

News of Nellie's venture on board the El Rio was kept from them. Archman explaining only that the girl was safe and would be with them soon. The outbreak of the fighting, almost instantly after she did arrive, prevented questions.

Once the battle was over, however, explanations were in order. They were precipitated by Carr, who came toward the group from near the entrance. "It's all over!" he called. "They've surrendered."

"Oh! I'm so glad." Nellie caught her mother by the arm and fairly ran her to the light. "Come to the—er—door, please, mother," she cried, "so that you can see Jim. He's going to be your son-in-law, you know."

"Son-in-law!" the lady gasped. "Why! Why!" She studied Carr's face in the greater light. "Why, he's the carpenter man on the boat!"

Nellie had the grace to blush, but she quickly recovered herself. "Of course, he is," she said. "I didn't know you'd seen him—though I don't know how you could help noticing him. Yes! He's Mr. Carr—James Carr."

The young man grinned. "Not Carr exactly," he explained. "Van Kull, son of your neighbor, Nicholas Van Kull, who made Miss Archman's acquaintance while shipbuilding in his father's repair docks. Father insisted that I should learn to earn my own living; and I guess I have. I was known at the docks as Jim Carr."

Reality Necessary

An American bull-fight film gave all the preliminaries of the event, but when it came to the real contest in the arena it was necessary to leave much to the imagination. But when this same film was sent to Mexico, it was a failure and the Mexicans who paid their money did not hesitate to express themselves after the show, which they regarded as a swindle. A section of a film depicting a real bull-fight was inserted and after that the picture was a hot favorite. The whole country went to see it.

MAKING HIS GIFT COUNT

By Frank Herbert Sweet

(©, 1924, Western Newspaper Union.)

"HOW much?" asked the girl in seal-skin coat, with pen poised above her pad. "Remember, it's for our annual bridge club dinner, and we want to outdo all previous efforts. Shall I put down, say $200. There will be an orchestra and dancing before the collation. Such things cost. I'm already promised about $2,000, and want $2,000 more. Maybe you can manage $500 this year."

Bob Henderson glanced toward a rather shabby girl who had slipped a few feet down the counter. He had been waiting on her when Miss Bristow pushed arrogantly in front of her. The girl was looking toward him. She had slid a piece of goods back on the counter.

"Beg your pardon, Miss Bristow," he said, "I am waiting on this young lady. "I'll listen to you in a few moments."

Miss Bristow fluttered her eyelids toward the girl. "The person can wait," she said superciliously. "She is used to it. Now?"

"I don't belong to the club, never been asked to it, wouldn't be considered eligible, and—"

She lifted her eyebrows. "You do not understand. Our set—"

"I understand all right. I'm wondering why I should help pay."

"Because we trade with you—"

"Because I have the goods you want, rather."

"You don't seem to realize what an honor it is to be associated with our set even in a donation way," icily. "How much shall I set down?"

"I'll be with you in a few moments," called Bob to the shabby girl—"or if you're in a hurry I'll end this meaningless talk at once.

"No—no, sir. I've got plenty of time," faltered the girl.

"Thank you. Now, Miss Bristow," turning back and speaking crisply. "Last year I gave you a hundred dollars for some charity that wasn't charity, it seems. The trade of your set was welcome; but more, I was young and—easy. This year my trade has been better, and I really can afford $500 for charity—"

"Fine!" she interrupted, though wincing at the word "charity." "Pay it now, or shall I mark it 'promise'?"

"Sorry, but I've been learning things since last year—about charity. Only this forenoon I went to the department store across the street for something, and stood watching the Christmas shoppers for a while, and—but you wouldn't understand a thing like this, Miss Bristow. Only it determined my growing resolution to make what I give count. Helping to feed and amuse a supposedly wealthy card club is not charity; it is foolishness."

"You—beast. You refuse anything?"

"Absolutely."

Miss Bristow swung toward the door.

"You will lose the trade of my set," she snapped.

"Better that than my self-respect," Bob answered quietly. "And the trade of your set, while welcome, is not essential. Good-by."

He went to the girl and began to unroll the pretty, gray piece of goods she had pushed back.

"About ten yards, I suppose?" he inquired. "I heard you mention that, casually, when you first looked at the goods. For your mother, perhaps, for Christmas."

"I've—changed my mind. I will look at something cheaper."

"Considering quality, this is the cheapest goods I have. But I have a little story to tell first. Then I want you to help me. And you mustn't think me impertinent if I say things you won't like. You heard us talking just now?"

"Yes," wondering what was coming, "and I'll listen."

"Then you know my trade has been good enough to allow of a $500 Christmas offering. I want to make it worth while, and I don't know how. You are familiar with the struggles of shop girls, and with the pathetic side of Christmas buyers, Alice."

The girl looked startled. "I never saw you before," she exclaimed. "How do you know my name?"

"I don't, all of it—just Alice. That is why I used no other. Listen! I went over to the department store this morning, as you heard. I watched the shoppers. I saw children and women look at inexpensive things wistfully, then turn away. I heard a tired-looking shop girl tell another that she wanted to get a crippled sister to a doctor, but couldn't afford it. Five hundred dollars would do real good there."

The girl's face lighted. "Indeed, it would, Mr. Henderson. I know that girl with a crippled sister. She supports her invalid mother and her small brothers and sisters, and sends some of them to school. And I know others. What wouldn't $500 do!"

"I feel so, too, Alice. And you're just the one to do it."

"Me?" incredulously. "Why, you don't know me."

"Yes, I do. I was standing near the room manager when he called you up and discharged you. After you went out I heard him say to some one, in a regretful way, that you were one of the best sales girls he ever had, but that you persisted in dressing so shabbily, in spite of repeated warnings, that he was forced to let you go. He wanted only attractively dressed girls."

Alice blushed scarlet. "I have so many to look after that it isn't right to waste on myself," she said in a low voice.

"I understand. I made inquiries about you, and find you are the girl I need. Now, I want you to work for me, Alice, but I shall give you the forenoons during the holidays to expend the $500 wisely. You may keep a report to show me. Afternoons and evenings I shall want you here. The salary will be $20 a week."

"I got only $10 in the department store."

"I always pay $20. A good girl is worth it. And, oh yes, you must dress nicely. I can take two or three dollars from your wages each week to pay on the things you buy. You'll want at least two dresses for yourself, with shoes, hat and other things. This dress for your mother, and what things you want for the children You'll come?"

"Y-yes, indeed."

Tears were slipping down her cheeks. But they were happy ones.

The Glorious Life of the Christmas Tree

By Mary Graham Bonner

FIRST I was a beautiful tree growing in the woods. Then I became a handsome, decorated Christmas tree, and was admired by everyone.

I shall greet the New Year, and then, I hear I shall be burned in a splendid bonfire. So that I shall end my existence in a blaze of glory!

It is a glorious life that a Christmas tree leads.

SPIRIT OF CHRISTMAS

By Rev. Alan Pressley Wilson

(©, 1924, Western Newspaper Union.)

AT CHRISTMAS be merry, and withal,
And feast thy poor neighbors, the great with the small.

So wrote the poet Tusser many years ago, but the suggestion is just as pertinent today as it was then. If anything, we need to be reminded of our duty to our fellowman more today than our fathers did—more today, indeed, than ever before. This is true because the need for brotherhood is even more patent than at any other period of the history of the world.

We live in an age when we think solely of ourselves and our immediate families and we should have brought to our attention the fact that we owe a debt to our neighbor and that that debt must be paid. The story is told of a rich man who prayed—

Oh, Lord! bless me and my wife,
My son, John, and his wife;
Us four
And no more!

We blush for shame that there could be found one who is so narrow, yet I am assured that such people exist today. There are those who, when they have satisfied the needs of their own, assume a self-satisfied air and say that they have done their whole duty. Approach such a person and remind him of the need of a friend or a neighbor and he will ask the time-worn question: "Am I my brother's keeper? Haven't I enough to do to look after my own family?" The teachings of Jesus Christ answer the first question in the affirmative (and the latter in the negative) with even more emphasis than God answered Cain when he originated the selfish inquiry. Jesus taught that the Decalogue is summed up in the greater commandment—"Thou shalt love they neighbor as thyself," and His definition of "neighbor" is any one who needs our help. Territorial or other limitations do not apply when the case of one in need is before us.

There is no geographical limitation when we are extending the hand of assistance to one who needs our help:

The Spirit of Christmas.

wherever there is found one or more whom we can (and should) assist, there neighborliness must begin.

A minister once approached one of his parishioners with the request for a contribution for the purpose of doing Christian work abroad. The particular field he had in mind was China. The man replied that he was willing to help his neighbors but did not think he was called upon to help those as far away as China.

"Whom do you consider your neighbor?" asked the minister. "The man whose farm adjoins me," was the prompt reply. "How far down into the earth does your land extend?" was the next question and the farmer just as promptly answered: "To the center!" "Very well," said the minister quickly, "There is a man down in China whose land joins yours at the center of the earth; he is therefore your neighbor and needs your help." This was a new thought to the slow-going church member. He learned his lesson and we need to learn the same. Only as we do so will we be able to broaden our lives into the fullness of the life of Jesus the Christ.

The application of the teaching of Jesus to business and society would produce a perpetual Christmas season; a time of peace and joy and happiness lasting throughout the year.

The giving of cheap presents or money, however, does not constitute Christmas; as well expect a bouquet of flowers (however lovely) to constitute summer! The Christmas spirit, rather than the Christmas show, honors Him whose birth, no less than His life, was the greatest Christmas gift the world has ever received. The Christmas spirit brings us into closer touch with Him whose very life was an exemplification of the precept: "It is more blessed to give than to receive."

As we celebrate the anniversary of the birth of Jesus let not the going down of the sun mark the decline of the Christmas spirit but, as the days come and go, and we enter the new year, let us each one reach out the loving had to the sick, the unfortunate and the outcast, remembering that Jesus the Christ said: "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto the least of one of these, my brethren, ye have done it unto Me!"

Change All Into Love

Christmas day shall change all griefs and quarrels into love.—Shakespeare.

A Load of Christmas

By Frank Herbert Sweet

(©, 1924, Western Newspaper Union.)

HOLCOMB did things in a peculiar way—a peculiarly nice way, though. It affected his Christmas gifts, his business, even his friendships. But then he was a bachelor of fifty. Then, too, everybody loved him, which is a very peculiar thing about a successful business man with competition, you'll admit.

This year Holcomb was very busy, and his Christmas gifts—general gifts, you know—hadn't even occurred to him until two days before the day.

He was passing through a new street between a restaurant and his office, when he saw a small shop with windows crammed with toys—nothing but toys. At this season, nearly the middle of the afternoon, a toy shop ought to be crowded with customers. This shop was closed. On the steps stood a small, anxious looking man, and a big one dangling a large key. It looked like a store key.

Seemed peculiar. So Holcomb went to the steps.

"Like to look at the toys," he began.

"Can't now," boomed the big man. "This chap can't pay a bill, so I've taken it. Auction day after tomorrow. I'm sheriff."

"Meaning," said Holcomb, "that if the bill is paid, the store belongs to this man again? How much?"

"Of course—and $200."

"What's it all worth?" to the little man.

"About $50 if sold at auction," dejectedly. "I picked a bum street. No business."

"What did you pay or agree to pay?"

"$500."

"What will you sell for?"

"Can't sell until—" nodding toward the sheriff.

Holcomb counted out $200, and passed it to the sheriff.

"Good-by," he said. "Now what do you ask?" to the small man.

"I'd rather like $300, but will be glad to accept half that."

Holcomb counted out the $300.

"Give me the key," to the sheriff. "Thank you. Now where can I find two men to move the toys?"

"I'll be one," beamed the man out of business. "I know about toys. And I can get another man from the next building."

"Do so, and I'll bring round my car from the next corner."

Inside of an hour the shop was emptied and the limousine filled. Then Holcomb took the most country of all the country roads, stopping at every house that showed signs of children.

"Hello-o," he would call to any small boy or girl he happened to see; "got some stuff for your house. Please take it in for me. I'm in a hurry. Give you a quarter."

He had provided a pocket heavy with loose quarters.

There were about three hours of daylight. When the daylight was gone the car was empty. He was glad of the darkness, for he had to go back by the same road.

Artaban, Fourth Wise Man of the East

By JOHN DICKINSON SHERMAN

(©, 1924, Western Newspaper Union.)

BALTHAZAR, Melchior, Kaspar, who followed that bright Christmas star—
You know the tale of the Wise Men, who came bearing gifts from afar.
Here is the tale of Artaban, the Fourth Wise Man of the East,
Who saw not the Babe in the manger, but not of the four was the least!
He stopped to succor one dying and lost his companions and way,
But ever he pressed his quest onward in hope, though alone and astray.
And ever he nursed the ailing and ever the hungry he fed,
And ever he clothed the naked wherever his wanderings led.
One after another vanished the gifts he had brought for the King—
To save a slave girl from torment he cast down his last precious ring.
At last a tile struck his temple; Artaban then knew he must die.
Lying there, stricken and helpless, his ears heard a Voice from on High Commending his deeds and service. "Not so, Lord!" he cried in amaze,
"Long have I sought Thee to serve Thee, but sought Thee in vain all my days.
When have I clothed Thee when naked? And when wert Thou hungered and fed?
When gave I drink to Thee thirsty? Or homeless, gave Thee a bed?"
The Voice replied to his mourning: "As thou hast done it unto one
Of the least of these, my brethren, so unto me it has been done."
This is the tale of Artaban, its lesson as strong now as then:
"To God ye do only service as ye may do service to men."

Christmas Time

By THOMAS A. CLARK
Dean of Men, University of Illinois

(©, 1924, Western Newspaper Union.)

OF ALL the illusions of childhood, I gave up with most reluctance those that clustered around Christmas.

The old saint who climbed down the chimney into the fireplace in our sitting room and filled our stockings on Christmas Eve was as real to me as Moses or George Washington or my grandfather or any other person of whom I had heard but whom I had never personally met. He is to me real today when I am in reminiscent moods, perhaps because I have always wanted him to be real. Long after I recognized all the subterfuges which were being practiced on me as a child at Christmas time, I never admitted them even to myself, for I was quite willing to submit to the deceptions; I was made happy by all the ceremonies and surprises.

I have never in all my life been away from home at Christmas time; I hope I never shall be. Christmas joys are for me the most delightful; Christmas memories, the most precious. Everything about our holiday preparations at home was of the simplest character, but the season was full of possibilities and surprises. The dinner lacked the conventional roast turkey. Instead there was a roast goose or a huge joint of roast beef (following the English custom with which my mother was familiar) with suet dumplings and gravy. There was always, too, a loaf of spiced bread and plum pudding with a delightful sauce of drawn butter, and there was mince pie followed with nuts and raisins and other goodies.

Just as "home" always suggests to me sugar cookies, hot from the oven, with mother warning me not to eat so many as to make myself sick, so Christmas invariably brings to my mind the thought of raisins. They were in the spiced bread which mother made, the plum pudding was congested with them. I found them always on Christmas morning in my stocking with other good things to eat, and there was regularly on Christmas day a dish of them on the table to be eaten after dinner. It was not altogether what we had to eat that gave Christmas such a high place in my regard, though that helped materially, no doubt. It was the mystery, the anticipation, the preparation and the surprise of it all; the gathering together of all the family, the games, the roaring fire in the fireplace, and the general hilarity and good will prevailing that made Christmas for me the best loved of all the holidays of the entire year.

"We are rather outgrowing Christmas," a friend said to me a few days ago. "I don't believe it is ever going to be for any one again just as it used to be."

I suppose not; though there are some events connected with the celebration of Christmas, there is the real Christmas which I am sure I shall never outgrow. If I should hang up my stocking by the fireplace now, I feel just as sure as I ever did that old Saint Nick would get in some way before morning and fill it as he used to do when I was a child. My faith in Christmas has never waned, and my need for it, I practice economy badly at any time, but with the greatest difficulty at Christmas time, and especially since the prices of my own particular varieties of frankincense and myrrh have been so affected by the economic conditions. It is what is in our hearts that makes Christmas real. The song of the angels is in the air if the Christmas spirit is in our hearts, Christmas is as great a reality as it ever was, if we will make it so, and for us all the angels are again proclaiming as they did that night in Palestine, centuries ago, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men."

I shall hang up my stocking at Christmas Eve, there will be raisins in it in the morning. I have faith that the old Christmas joys will be mine once more.

THE Christmas Party

By Eleanor King

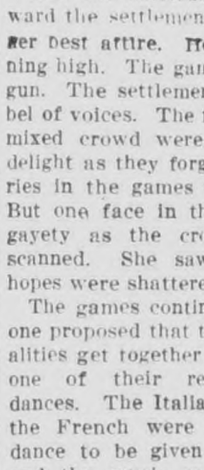
(©, 1924, Western Newspaper Union.)

THE odor of soup prevailed throughout the two rooms which constituted the home of Mrs Pourrez, and her three children namely Raoul, the eldest, Henrietta, the middle, and Louise the youngest.

"Tonight," mused Mrs. Pourrez, "is the anniversary of our coming to Amerique. Three years have passed, and we still have not found Andre. I have tried every way to locate him. The lady at the settlement house told me to be sure and come to the Christmas party because many people come to that who never come throughout the year. She said I might meet him."

"Oui, ma mere, do go," said Raoul, "I do wish we could find father. We would have the happiest Christmas we could imagine."

Mrs. Pourrez' work kept her quite late in the evening. Her tasks were heavy. She was endeavoring to send her three children to school and support their little home.



"Mere," said Raoul, "we shall put our candle in the window to welcome you when you return, and please may we sit up to see whether our father returns with you by chance?"

"Si vous voulez," said his mother, lapsing back into her native tongue.

"If we wish? Of course we do," chorused the children.

Mrs. Pourrez's husband, Andre, had left his wife and family to come to America to try and better himself. He left with a promise to find a cozy home and to save money for their passage. Three and a half years ago word had come that, by saving and good, hard work, the house had been secured and awaited their arrival. But no Mr. Pourrez was there to meet them, as planned, on their arrival into this country. The poor mother, broken-hearted, had had to start out and earn a living to keep her family. And so each Christmas, the anniversary of their arrival, she looked to meet her husband.

Now she hurriedly made her way toward the settlement house, arrayed in her best attire. Her hopes were running high. The games had already begun. The settlement house was a babel of voices. The faces in that rather mixed crowd were all beaming with delight as they forgot their many worries in the games they were playing. But one face in that picture lost its gayety as the crowd was carefully scanned. She saw no Andre. Her hopes were shattered.

The games continued. Finally some one proposed that the different nationalities get together in groups and give one of their respective country's dances. The Italians started the fun, the French were to be next. The dance to be given was decided upon and the music commenced. A door opened at the back of the hall. A man appeared. A settlement house worker ushered him in, saying:

"You are just in time to join the French dance, Mr. —"

A woman came bounding forth "Andre!" she cried, and she was lost in the two huge arms which encircled her.

"Where have you been?" was all the poor woman could gasp in her joy.

Christmas morning found the Pourrez family reunited in their new home. Around the table the family was gathered, gazing at Andre Pourrez. He was telling how illness had kept him lying delirious in a hospital for months and at the time when their boat was due in America. Every year he had gone to every settlement house Christmas party in the hope of finding them That was why he had been so late in arriving last evening. It was the last party on his list to visit. And now how happy they all were.

The Star Over the Barn

By CHRISTOPHER G. HAZARD

(©, 1924, Western Newspaper Union.)

IT HAD been a strange Christmas Eve. The falling snow had changed to sleet and the sleet had turned to rain. The disappointed children had hung their stockings by the chimney with fears that the reindeer and the sleigh of Santa Claus would not be able to bring him over the muddy roads. Their dreams were disturbed by visions of wreckage and bundles scattered about. At the church party there had been a Santa Claus, but when his mask slipped down and he put up his hand to fix it they knew that he was not the real one. There had been three wise men, following a star, too, but their white whiskers and pointed sticks had frightened the girls who were the angels so that they could not sing. And now it seemed as though the real Christmas would be a failure, too.

It looked that way to others on that dreary evening. It seemed to two travelers who were making their way towards the farm house that they could not keep their closely wrapped bundle dry much longer and that the night was very dark indeed. They were very glad to pass the sleeping house and find a refuge in the old barn and a bed on the fragrant hay. Their long and weary journey was forgotten in the dreams that came to comfort them with pictured hopes, and they were all unconscious of the peace and brightness that had succeeded the storm.

In the house, however, unconsciousness had been suspended. 'Ears strained in vain for sleigh bells, but a gentle voice had fallen upon them with a happy Christmas greeting from Mrs. Rosebud (for so they called her) and she had called them to the joy of a beautiful Christmas morning. In the colder air there lay a light snow over all the bareness of the day before and it was all ready to sparkle back the merry glances of the coming sun. But first there gleamed in the pale blue sky and gathering dawn the light of the morning star, and as the children looked out of the window of their room they saw that the star was resting just over their barn.

Perhaps there never was a merrier Christmas morning than the three wise children enjoyed that day. It wasn't merely because the stockings had grown big and bumpy through the night. It wasn't only because they could even smell the Christmas tree through the crack in the parlor door. It wasn't the new hair ribbons, the Dutch apron, the small pair of scissors tied with blue ribbon and the small pair tied with red ribbon, the angel cake, the box of "Creole" candy, the new skates, the extra doll "Fancy." It wasn't all these or the play house, or the pencil sharpener, or even the writing case that made one of the ecstatic youngsters say, "Next Christmas, when old Sant' comes down the chimney, I'm going to make him kneel down, then I'll whisper in his ear: 'You old Santy Fatcake!'" And it wasn't every blessing of the day that made them thankful enough, for, pulling an orange out of her stocking, one of them was heard to say, "Santa, you're giving me too much fruit." But it was something sweeter, greater and more beautiful, something that was in the under thought of all their hearts and that was presently to be in their experience, for, as they ran down to the barn, carrying their new treasures along to play with them on the barn floor, they heard a movement and a strange cry behind the barn door. And, when they opened the door, there upon the hay were the travelers, the old man with the kindly look, the lovely one who seemed to be his daughter, and the unbundled baby, smiling so deeply and so sweetly. It was the baby that was the best of all. It was the baby that sat by the table in the high chair, with little gifts before him. It was the baby that made the feast so greatly good for them all and caused them to give thanks for the star that, despite the storm and cloud, had led them to their barn. It was the baby that inspired the prayer of one of the children that Christmas night, when she said, "We know you sent your little baby Jesus for us to love. So merry Christmas, God!"

WHY BANKS?

LESSON XII

By J. H. PUELICHER, Chairman
Public Education Commission, American Bankers Association

What is a Trust Company? Technically defined it is a bank that specializes in investment and fiduciary services in addition to general banking services. Humanly speaking, it is what its name implies—a place of trust.

J. H. Puelicher

INVESTMENT—lending money for income or profit to business and governments to "carry on." Such lending is often done through the purchase by investors of bonds selected by a bank or a trust company as safe and desirable.

FIDUCIARY—held in trust and confidence. For example, a trustee holds a man's estate for the benefit of his widow or children, cares for it faithfully, invests it prudently and uses it for their welfare in accordance with his wishes.

TRUST COMPANIES are able to fulfill these functions because of their experience in investments, because of their trained officers, and because of their continuous existence while an individual often knows nothing of investments, usually lacks experience and training, and may die during the life of the trust.

BACK TO NORMAL

In no period since the war has greater progress in the return to normal business conditions been made by industry, commerce and finance than during the past year. This reestablishment of normal conditions has been brought about by the working of purely economic influences. These influences and this result completely refute the arguments and pretensions of opportunist politicians and radical demagogues who have sought to bring about readjustment by political measures. These measures were aimed to give gratuitous advantages to the special interests and classes which the proposers assumed to represent, to the detriment of the general good.

The virtual disappearance, by natural economic processes, of the abnormalities that have persisted, as the long drawn out aftermath of the war, has removed whatever justification their presence seemed to give for governmental paternalism and for special measures of relief for particularly distressed classes. At best these measures were merely sedatives for psychological conditions and not real remedies for economic conditions. To that extent they served a purpose, but there is no further public good that they can serve. With normal conditions once more established it should be the resolute determination of all business men to resist any further effort at political interference with economic processes.

The time is at hand for a thoroughgoing return to a free play of private enterprise and private initiative under unhampered competitive conditions. Government influence and political interference in respect to business should be reduced to an absolute minimum. We as bankers ask no special privileges for ourselves. Equally we are opposed to special privileges for other groups at the expense of the general welfare. The experience of the past few years has been one of the greatest demonstrations in history of the validity of the view that the community interests of a people are best served by the maximum degree of private enterprise and private initiative with the minimum of government regulation.—Declaration of the American Bankers Association.

WORK OF ORGANIZED BANKING TO PROMOTE BETTER FARMING

By D. H. OTIS
Agricultural Director American Bankers Association.

The Agricultural Commission of the American Bankers Association has adopted and encourages the following general projects in its national program:

D. H. Otis

1. Boys and girls club work.
2. Diversified farming.
3. Increased appropriations for agricultural research.

With the state bankers' associations, the agricultural colleges and hosts of farmers' organizations uniting in all parts of the country, the Commission has held conferences in forty-seven states. The different individual projects approved number 195. Plans are now under way for follow-up work in making these programs effective.

These banker-farmer conferences have resulted not only in definite programs, but they have been the means of greatly increasing interest on the part of bankers. At the beginning there were a number of states that had no agricultural committees. Others were inactive. We now have agricultural committees for each state with the exception of two, and these have promised to appoint committees soon.

Banker Influence

The attitude of the bankers is not that of attempting to tell the farmers how to farm, but rather to aid in bringing about conditions that will help the farmer to help himself. The farmer who produces, the agricultural college that is attempting to improve the quality of farm products, and the banker who furnishes the capital are endeavoring to put their heads together and perform team work. A representative of one of the colleges of agriculture recently made the statement that the bankers could do more than the colleges for the advancement of agriculture. The banker is in position to influence the type of agriculture practiced by the farmer patrons. A county agent comes in contact with only 15 to 20 per cent of the farmers of his county, while the bankers come in contact with at least 75 per cent.

In some localities farmers seem to be prejudiced against bankers, due largely to misunderstanding. There is no better way for relieving this strained relationship than by getting the banker and farmer pulling together for their mutual interests and for the community.

If agriculture is to develop it is necessary to maintain on the soil men and women who will put as much intelligence into their business as is put into other lines of business. It is hard to change the attitude of mind of an old farmer. The great hope is in developing boys and girls into men and women who will be interested in improving the conditions on our farms. Out of forty-seven programs adopted at the banker-farmer conferences, thirty-six included boys' and girls' club work as one of their leading projects.

Farm Accounting

A large number of bankers are recognizing the importance of income tories, financial statements and farm accounts and are encouraging the keeping of records among their farmer patrons. Not a few insist on a financial statement from the farmer before making a loan, just as is required of other business men. Such a statement not only acquaints the banker with the financial status of the farmer but also brings the farmer face to face with conditions on his farm and calls attention to opportunities for improvement.

In many states county bankers' associations are being organized with agricultural committees. In New Jersey every county is thus organized. Ohio has a representative of the agricultural committee in every county in the state. Wisconsin has added thirteen agricultural committees to its county organizations. In Arkansas educational trains have been run in cooperation with the railroads, the College of Agriculture, and others for stimulating interests in better farming methods. In Oregon the Bankers Association employs a field secretary to devote his entire time to carrying on educational and agricultural programs. In Kentucky special plans have been developed for coordinating the various organizations interested in agricultural development. Key men, bankers, have been appointed in sixty-five counties. An annual income of $6,000 is provided and field secretary employed.

It will be seen that the efforts of the Agricultural Commission and the committees of the various states, in cooperation with the colleges of agriculture, have been to formulate workable programs. The field for work appears unlimited. The spirit of the bankers and the colleges is superb and effective results will be accomplished.

$300,000,000 IS VOTED U. S. NAVY

House Passes Big Supply Bill—Britten Asks More Ships.

Washington.—Congress turned its attention to naval defenses and accomplished these results:

The house passed the supply bill carrying $300,000,000 for activities already authorized.

The house received a bill which was introduced by Fred Britten (Rep., Ill.), member of the naval committee, which provides $101,400,000 for additional construction.

In the senate the naval committee shelved a resolution by Senator King (Dem., Utah) proposing an inquiry into the status of the navy, but will seek data from the Navy department to learn whether the United States is maintaining its 5-5-3 basis.

At the White House it was said that the State department had received a note from Great Britain setting forth that government's views on gun elevation.

The bill offered by Britten increases the cost of the airplane carriers Lexington and Saratoga, now under construction, from $23,000,000 to $33,000,000 each and authorizes the construction of four scout cruisers costing $11,100,000 each, one additional aircraft carrier to cost $23,000,000, and one floating dry dock to cost $7,500,000.

The bill also authorizes the expenditure of $6,500,000 for elevating the guns on the battleships Florida, Utah, Arkansas, Wyoming, Pennsylvania, Arizona, Oklahoma, Nevada, New York, Texas, Mississippi, Idaho and New Mexico.

"Unless another conference is called for the limitation of all naval craft," Mr. Britten said, "it will be necessary for us to maintain our navy at its very highest efficiency, and the quicker we do this the better.

"If England and Japan supersede us in fast cruisers, submarines, aircraft carriers, and in naval aviation, congress should immediately take such steps as are necessary to make our navy equal to any other, to make the nation safe in time of an emergency.

"I personally cannot see a threatening speck on our peaceful horizon, but that is no reason why we should go unprepared."

Coolidge Picks Board to Save U. S. Oil Supply

Washington. — President Coolidge created an oil conservatism board to study the government's responsibilities in the matter of oil conservation and to recommend safeguards against shortage of production in the face of the ever-increasing demands of industry and the national defense for fuel oil.

The secretaries of war, navy, interior and commerce were designated by the President to constitute the board and to co-operate with the commission appointed last spring to look into the oil needs of the navy and with the oil industry in making their survey of existing supplies and possible future supplies. The naval oil commission named by President Coolidge following the oil lease disclosures is composed of Admiral Hilary P. Jones, George Otis Smith of the geological survey and R. D. Bush of the California bureau of mines.

$762,000,000 Supply Bill for Treasury, Post Office

Washington. — The largest peace time supply bill ever presented to congress—a measure carrying more than three-quarters of a billion dollars for Treasury and Post Office department activities during the coming fiscal year—was reported by the house appropriations committee.

The total is $762,180,522, or $11,890,614 more than for the current year, but approximately $12,000,000 less than budget estimates.

Of the combined total $125,911,107 would go to the Treasury and $636,269,415 to the Post Office department.

The bill carries $526,373 for mail transmission by pneumatic tubes—the amount available this year—and $89,250,000 for rural delivery service, the latter a decrease of $600,000.

Murderer Who Killed 26 Is Sentenced to Death

Hanover, Germany.—Fritz Haarmann, the "wholesale murderer" whose trial for the slaying of 26 persons has stirred all Germany, was sentenced to death. The extreme penalty was also ordered in the case of his accomplice, Hans Marans. Marans was condemned for inciting to murder in one case. Fritz Haarmann, a Hanover butcher, was shown at his trial to be a criminal degenerate who lured men and boys to his lodgings and there killed them by tearing their throats with his teeth and sucking their blood.

Senate Votes Plague Fund

Washington.—The senate adopted a joint resolution authorizing appropriation of $100,000 for control and eradication of the European fowl disease and other contagious diseases among poultry.

HUGHES HAILS NEW ENVOY FROM JAPAN

Sees Cordial Relations With Coming of Matsudaira.

Washington. — Although agitation over the relations between Japan and America has puzzled Washington officials a great deal of late, occasion was taken to bespeak formally "an era of most cordial relations between the two countries."

Secretary Hughes departed from precedent and issued a statement taking notice of the appointment of Tsuneo Matsudaira as the new ambassador to Washington, welcoming him to America as a step toward a further cementing of friendship between Tokyo and Washington.

The statement of the secretary said:

"Not only is Mr. Matsudaira a diplomat of most distinguished service, but Japan has paid us a signal honor in selecting as her ambassador to this post a man who, through himself and his wife, represent two of the most important and historically famous families of the empire.

"I am convinced that we can look forward now to the most cordial relations with Japan and that these relations will be greatly facilitated by the mission of Mr. Matsudaira."

The secretary's action was considered particularly impressive in view of the well-known conviction of the administration that agitation has fostered a popular feeling that diplomatic relations of the two countries are not on the best footing. Officials here are of the opinion that there is absolutely no ground for such a fear and that in fact there are no troublesome issues now pending with the Tokyo government.

Congressman Julius Kahn of California Is Dead

San Francisco.—Julius Kahn, for 24 years representative in congress from the Fourth California district, and chairman of the house military affairs committee, died here after an extended illness. He was sixty-three years old.

Washington.—The vacancy in the chairmanship of the military committee of the house caused by the death of Representative Kahn probably will be filled by Representative Morin (Rep.) of Pennsylvania.

Governor-Elect Bingham Elected U. S. Senator

New Haven, Conn.—Col. Hiram Bingham, lieutenant governor of Connecticut and governor-elect, was elected United States senator to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Senator Frank B. Brandegee.

The election of Mr. Bingham as a United States senator while yet to be sworn in as governor of the state is unprecedented in the state's history.

LANDIS REMAINS BASEBALL CHIEF

Ban Johnson Rebuked for Attack on Commissioner—League Crisis Over.

Chicago.—Kenesaw Mountain Landis, former United States judge, will remain high commissioner of baseball.

After a hectic and epochal day in the history of our national game, the gray-haired boss of the sport decided to remain when seven of the American league club owners adopted a resolution and presented it to him at the joint meeting of the two major leagues on Wednesday, assuring him that hereafter Ban B. Johnson, their president, who has a contract which runs for another half dozen years, has been thoroughly bound and gagged.

Ban Johnson still is president of the American league, though all except Phil Ball, owner of the St. Louis Browns, rebuked him and voted against him in the adoption of the resolution.

An amendment to the major league agreement will give such league the power to elect its representative on the advisory board, which previously had consisted of the commissioner and the presidents of the two major leagues.

The American league cast its president aside and elected Frank J. Navin, their vice president and owner of the Detroit club, as its representative to act with Commissioner Landis and President Heydler of the National league.

It was a victory for Commissioner Landis, who has maintained absolute silence ever since Mr. Johnson gave out an interview during the world's series in which he proposed to begin a general cleanup of the game, with the idea of driving Landis out of the game, of driving the owners of the New York Giants out of the game and attempting to put the sport under federal control. It was in that interview that he referred to Landis as a wild-eyed, crazy nut.

Landis never replied to that story, but there were strong indications that he would quit baseball rather than continue if it was necessary for him to stand for such unwarranted attacks.

Mrs. Osborne Wood to Start Suit for Divorce

New York.—Osborne Wood, son of Gen. Leonard Wood, is about to face a suit for divorce.

Confirmation of the divorce plans came from Mrs. Wood at Wilmington, Del.

"I have been separated from him for several months," Mrs. Wood said. "He has lost practically all that he has made. I shall start suit for divorce, and I do not care to discuss the grounds."

Mrs. Wood scouted reports that her husband, who is now in France, has scored another long-distance market killing. He was credited with having cleaned up $2,000,000 in Wall street within the last few weeks. When he was a lieutenant in the army under General Wood in the Philippines he was credited with having made $800,000 in Wall street speculations.

William Green Elected President of A. F. of L.

New York.—William Green of the miners was elected president of the American Federation of Labor by the executive council. He will serve until next convention ten months hence.

James H. Noonan, president of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, was named eighth vice president to fill the vacancy on the council caused by Green's promotion.

Upon Green's election James Duncan, the first vice president, resigned. A close associate of the late Samuel Gompers for forty years, Duncan told his colleagues he felt entitled to the office because of seniority and long service.

YOUNGEST MAN TO HEAD DEPARTMENT

For L. Hugo Keller of Wisconsin his friends claim the distinction of being the youngest department commander in the American Legion. Keller is just thirty years old.

Born in Appleton, Wis., Keller spent two years at the high school there and then put in four years at Campion college in preparation for a law course at Marquette university, Milwaukee. He received the degree of Bachelor of Laws in June, 1917, and was admitted to the bar two months later.

One month before his graduation, Keller volunteered his services for his country. In November, 1917, he was called to Fort Sheridan and commissioned a second lieutenant. He was at once sent overseas and was assigned to the One Hundred and Fiftieth machine gun battalion in February, 1918. He served with that outfit throughout the war and also in the army of occupation. In May, 1919, he returned home with the Rainbow division and was discharged.

Ever since the organization of the American Legion, Commander Keller has been active in its work. He was for four years adjutant of the post at Appleton. He was then successively executive committeeman for the Ninth district, post commander and director of membership in the department organization. He held the latter position during the past year and was largely instrumental in bringing about a decided increase in the membership of the Wisconsin department, which now ranks seventh in membership among the departments. He is very effective as a speaker on Legion subjects.

MODERN CRUSADERS

REV. E. J. EVANS, addressing American Legionnaires at Beloit, Wis., recently declared: "American Legionnaires are the modern crusaders for the right. It is wicked for a Christian nation to be neutral between right and wrong. Do these prattlers of 'peace-at-any-price' know or have they forgotten that the Christian religion itself would have been exterminated by the Mohammedans who invaded Europe had it not been for the military genius of Charles Martel and the sword of Sobieski? Your national commander, James A. Drain, advocates a principle of preparedness which is sound, sensible and just. He urges the enactment of a universal draft law which would place on all citizens an equal obligation in time of war—man power to fight, man power to work, factory power to produce and money power to finance. This is the best peace measure and the most practical preparedness measure ever suggested, and every loyal American will continue to advocate it until congress adopts it. I for one rejoice that Legionnaires know how to defend liberty and how to use it."

Must Use Married Name When Signing Pay Roll

Rehabilitation officers of the American Legion who have assisted the wives of disabled veterans to obtain positions in the United States veterans' bureau, Washington, state that such women will be compelled to use their married names when they sign the pay roll, or give up their jobs. Many married women of the thousands employed by the bureau have been carried on the pay roll under their maiden names. In making the ruling, Director Frank T. Hines of the veterans' bureau pointed out that the law presumes that the name of a woman is changed, on contracting the marriage relation, to that of her husband, which thereafter becomes her only legal name.

Urged to Join Legion

Members of Washington labor organizations who saw service in the World war were recently urged to join the American Legion in a letter sent to the secretary of each union by William Short, president of the Washington State Federation of Labor. The letter from Mr. Short followed announcement of plans for a membership drive to be conducted by Rainier Noble post of the Legion, the largest organization of veterans in the state.

Vaccination reports to the state department of health for the month show that 16,030 Iowans have been vaccinated since Dec. 1st. Addition to the Iowa National guard organization of nine new units, including an air service observation squadron, and enlargement of the personnel by 600 men, form part of the program for the coming year outlined recently by Adj. With the rural producer issuing from the depression, and every indication favoring good and stable farm and farm products prices the attitude of the state of Iowa generally to a road building program should change rapidly. Certainly the state legislature will make no mistake in initiating the plan worked out by the good roads association. It will then be up to the people of Iowa to approve or reject the proposition.

Governor Kendall expects to devote a considerable part of his annual message to the state legislature to the interests of agriculture. The governor also stated that he looked with approval upon the work of the Iowa Child Welfare commission, and intimated that he may request the legislature to give the commission's proposals every consideration. It was stated that the commission has eight interlocking bills designed to perfect the condition of dependent and neglected children and the adoption laws of this state.

The value of Iowa's farm products this year is estimated at $570,816,000, which is an increase of 11 per cent or about $56,0000,000 compared to the value of the 1923 crops, according to Charles D. Reed, director of the Iowa Weather and Crop bureau, who discussed the agricultural situation before the state agricultural convention at Des Moines. The value of this year's crops was approximately $85,000,000 or 18 per cent greater than in 1922. The final estimate on the corn crop, Mr. Reed said, is 304,752,000 bushels. This is 132,000,000 less than last year. The highest prevailing price, however, makes the short crop this year worth $13,000,000 more to Iowa farmers than they received for the larger crop of 1923.

The total number of cows tested for November in Wright county was 232, yhich produced 138,831 pounds of milk and 5,900 pounds of butterfat making an average of 598 pounds of milk and 25.4 pounds of butterfat a head.

"Iowa's contribution of more than half a billion dollars to the nation's wealth through its 1924 crops," Director Charles D. Reed says, "exceeded last year's contributions by over 11 per cent and that of 1922 by 18 per cent. Never before has Iowa raised so many acres of corn as in 1924. Corn acreage, 10,884,000

Hello!— Anybody Home?

A Christmas Greeting

By W. E. GILROY
in The Congregationalist

THERE'S not a memory of home, or friend,
Be they so far remote, however lowly;
No place where new affections richly blend
That does not grow more beautiful, more holy,
At Christmas.

There is no laughter of a little child,
No fiery passion of Youth's rosy morning,
No treasure-house of Age, benign and mild,
That is not sweeter for the Christ's adorning
At Christmas.

There is no depth of love, no pang of sorrow,
No mighty moving in the human heart,
No comfort for today, hope for tomorrow,
In which the Christ has not a larger part
At Christmas.

So, as we send our greeting of affection,
We share the memory of Him who came;
In fellowship, in happy recollection,
Each fervent wish is hallowed in His name
At Christmas.

For Mother's Christmas

By ETHEL COOK ELIOT

(©, 1924, Western Newspaper Union.)

GOING home for Christmas?"

"Yes. All of us always go. Great fun seeing each other again and exchanging news! We go back to the farm."

"Yours must be quite a family now, with all the children. But I suppose your mother gets in extra help, and you all help, too."

It was not impertinent, because it was my best friend speaking. She is just frank and sincere. She had dropped into my office after hours, not to buy insurance from me (yes, I am a female insurance agent and not a failure at it either!) but to say "good-by" before herself leaving the city for the holidays.

"No, there's no extra help to be gotten these days in the country any more than here. Not any that's worth while. So mother does it all herself. But she likes it. Christmas only comes once a year."

We said no more about that, but after my friend had gone I remembered her clear, frank eyes and the way they had received my reply. They had been slightly skeptical. I couldn't get that skepticism out of my mind.

The result was that, after much thought, I suddenly closed office a whole week before Christmas, practically kidnaped my youngest sister away from her home in a nearby city—that comfortable home with its full nursery, cook and nurse girl—and whisked her away to the country to give mother a little surprise.

At first I thought the surprise was to turn out an unpleasant one. We arrived in the early afternoon without warning. There was mother in a huge apron, her hair tied up in a towel, the front hall full of brooms and mops, housecleaning. She could not conceal her chagrin from us, we had so suddenly appeared. It certainly was different from our customary homecoming. Then, she met us at the front door, her arm linked in father's, dressed in her best silk, her white hair freshly curled, behind them the house shining in spotlessness. And then the pantry filled with pies, cakes, roast ham with its cloves, and mother's wonderful jelly farts! Such an inviting, homelike, hospitable house! Such a sparklingly clean pantry full of good things!

How different today, six days before we were expected! Father had banished himself to the barn, and we found him disconsolately smoking by old Jim's stall. The house was chaos. All the rugs seemed to be up and the furniture out of place. Mother was cleaning!

"Oh, dear!" she greeted us. "I didn't expect you till Christmas Eve! Nothing's ready! I've just this hour started to fix for you."

We put down our suitcases in wonderment at this unheard-of welcome from mother, our mother!

"That's just it, mother, dear," I said. "We didn't want you to do all this 'fixing' alone. We've come to fix for ourselves, and the horde that follows on Christmas Eve."

Well, at first mother simply wouldn't hear of it. We were to be company and just wait till she got the rooms we were to occupy aired and made up. Since we were all there, well we must stay. But we shouldn't drudge. She guessed we worked hard enough, each at our own particular kind of work, all the year, not to have to work when we came home.

We wouldn't listen. We had come for one thing. We laughingly overbore her in all her objections.

More than that, we called father in from the barn and got him to bundle mother up and take her off for a sleigh ride. "A sleigh ride! Who ever heard of a sleigh ride and all the parlor furniture in the hall waiting for the parlor to be cleaned!" Well, mother heard of a sleigh ride, and under just those conditions now. She heard of it from her two strong-minded daughters, her youngest and her oldest. Father caught our spirit at once and bustled her away. How merrily the bells jingled as they whirled away through the snow!

Now for it! Marge and I tucked up our skirts, draped ourselves in big aprons and wound towels about our heads, and fell to. It was hard work, but what a lark we made of it. And we had a good supper waiting for mother and father when they got back.

And every day that week we did the same. Father whisked mother off in the sleigh to visit old friends in nearby towns, or just for the ride. And while they were gone we—hustled.

By Christmas Eve the house was as shining and tidy as it would have been had mother been left to herself with it. And Marge had proved herself a marvelous cook, too. There were pies and cakes, and even tarts, and the ham with cloves. The turkey was dressed, too, and the stuffing made. And mother had not so much as put her nose into the pantry door.

Then the family arrived. Three daughters, with their three husbands and several children apiece, and two brothers with their wives and offspring. And mother and father met them at the door, mother's arm tucked in father's, her hair freshly curled, her black silk rustling.

Father Whisked Mother Off in the Sleigh to Visit Friends.

"My," cried Brother-in-law Jim, Nell's husband, "but you've lost ten years, mother! Such bright eyes and pink cheeks I've never seen."

Marge and I, in the darker background, nudged each other and giggled.

All the others cried the same thing. It was true enough, too. This was a different mother from the rather weary old woman we were accustomed to meeting at holidays here in the open door.

Father spoke up: "You're dead right, children," he said. "Your mother looks like this all the year except at holiday time. Then she just slaves getting ready for you and sort of gets worn out. This year was different. This year she went honeymooning with me instead."

Marge and I came forth from hiding. "Yes, and hereafter is always to be different," we promised.

And how it paid! We'd gotten into the way of thinking mother was an old woman. Now we saw her as her neighbors and father saw her—hearty, bright-eyed, carefree.

"My, it seems good to be eating other's cooking," escaped her that night, over Marge's apple tarts. "But you are naughty children just the same. Marge and you shouldn't boss me so! Right in my own house, too!" The reproach in her eyes, though mild indeed, was for an instant real. Marge caught it, and quicker than I, got up and ran around to mother at her place. There she leaned above her and gave her one of her old, impulsive, childish hugs. "Yes, mother dear, it's your own house. But you're our own mother. So 'twas fair!"

And everybody agreed that Marge had justified our highhandedness. However that may be, from Christmas to Christmas mother seems to be growing younger.

Well, another Christmas is here, and this insurance agent must get out her aprons. The other girls have offered to take their turns, of course, but I am too selfish to let them. I look forward to the annual cleaning spree with my jolly little sister, Marge, as to a jollification. And the best part of it all is the sound of those jingling sleighbells as mother and father go whisking out of the yard.

Heigh ho! Merry Christmas!

THE Christmas Reprimand

By Eleanor E. King

(©, 1924, Western Newspaper Union.)

IF SO many years had not already swept over his head—sorrow, great worries and time whitening his hair—one would have declared him too good to live. His kindly deeds had made his kindly face. His every act, thought or deed, was for someone else. Yet, "this man of God" sat with his head on his hand, deep in thought. In these last few moments he had lived over ten years or more; had seen twelve little girls grow to womanhood.

Mr. Baxter had taken a class from the beginners' department. Every Sunday these twelve little girls had been a delight as they sat listening with eager, attentive faces to the wonderfully interesting things they were told. All too soon came graduation from grammar school. The lessons had to go a little deeper for the high school students. The teacher was fully equal to the task. Finally college took its toll, until only three of his flock remained, and those few left in the fall to start their college career.

Mrs. Baxter came in, interrupting his reverie. "Ellen," he began, "I often think I had such joy in teaching those girls; I wonder if I did right in keeping them under one teacher so long. I suggested that I turn them over to some woman to teach; I thought she might understand their needs better but somehow I couldn't get up much enthusiasm about it."

"Why B. B., This Is No Time to Worry About That."

"Why, B. B.," protested his wife, "this is no time to worry about that."

"I feel rather responsible for the girls, and the attitude they may take. I hope they haven't been influenced too strongly by me."

"B. B., you are in a bad frame of mind tonight," interposed Mrs. Baxter, sitting down on the arm of his chair, patting his head. "Don't you know that most people are too busy tonight getting ready for the Christmas festivities to be mooning over past history? You know we have to get the box ready—"

"Oh, yes," broke in "B. B." "That two pounds of pecans I promised to take down the street, Ellen; I will go right away."

The doorbell rang vigorously, three times. "B. B." hastened to the door.

"If it isn't my first lieutenant"—a pet name he had for a member of his class. "Won't you come up."

"No, thank you, Mr. Baxter, I can't right now. The girls are planning a class reunion while they are home for the Christmas holidays. They want to know if they can't count on their teacher for one of those humdinger lessons—like they used to have before we were scattered to the four winds."

"B. B." surprised, dazed and happy all in the same breath, just chuckled the way he always did when something pleased him unusually. "You surely can count on me," was all he could say.

"Here Is Something to Sneak Upstairs With You."

His "first lieutenant" came closer, pretending to whisper, "Now, don't let your wife know about this," and she slipped a box into his hand—"here is something to sneak upstairs with you. Merry Christmas!"

"B. B." stood dumfounded, alternately shaking, turning, rattling, smelling and fondling the box; he took it upstairs. He dropped into a chair. This was the first time any of his girls had remembered him on Christmas, beyond a card, through all these years. He had always made it a point to tend to all graduations and Christmases. The girls had appreciated it. This was the first time, but, he hastened to tell himself, it was quite all right—he had never expected it to be otherwise.

Unwrapping the tissue paper, the box disclosed a leather bill-fold with a hand-tooled design. "Ellen," he shouted in his happiness. "See what my 'first lieutenant' made with her own hands for me. The card on it says:

"'Just an attempt to show a wee part of my great appreciation for the wonderful work you have done in teaching our class.

'YOUR FIRST LIEUTENANT.'"

CHRISTMAS

CHRIST was born at Bethlehem that he might die at Calvary. This is the message and meaning of Christmas. Socrates supposed and Plato philosophized and the world's great ones dreamed that mental process could save humanity. But Jesus came to save us from the evil that dwells in us, and in the unexplored field of redemption his mission was new and solitary. The sublimity of Christ's career is measured by the volume and depth of human guilt.—Herald and Presbyter.

Saint Is Placed on Retired List

For over three centuries a certain Brazilian regiment has been under the patronage of Saint Anthony, who was appointed its honorary colonel to commemorate an action in which the regiment distinguished itself. The salary attached to the rank was paid to the Little Sisters of the Poor, as related London Answers.

The present minister of war, however, does not consider that Saint Anthony is worth his salary, and has come to the conclusion that it is time that the appointment and the salary should cease. But the economy had to be effected decently and in order, so the following communique was issued and has been causing much amusement in Brazil:

"Col. Saint Anthony of Padua of the —— regiment, having completed three centuries of service, is now gazetted general and placed on the retired list."

Fox Was "On His Own"

Mrs. Solomon Barnhart of Connoquenessing township, Pennsylvania, saw a strange animal in her yard with one of her chickens in his mouth. She killed it with a shotgun. The animal proved to be a large fox, which was identified as one that had escaped from a neighbor 18 years ago. A worn leather collar and a piece of broken chain were proof of the identity of the former pet, which had been suspected for several years of raiding chicken yards in the community.

Toe Dancing

Toe dancers become accustomed to the hard-toed shoes and the standing and walking on the toes by long practice and exercise of the muscles. The students of toe dancing help to support themselves on bars when they first stand on their toes, after weeks of fancy dancing and exercise of the muscles of the ankles and legs. Lamb's wool is kept in the toe of the slipper to keep the toes from callousing, and the student takes alcohol foot baths and massage to relax the toes.

Education and Earning

In three representative areas in Indiana, Illinois and Iowa, tenant farmers with a high school education receive an average annual labor income of $526 a year more than the men with only a common school education. A college education adds to this average $453 a year, making the income of college graduates $979 more a year than the labor earnings of men with a common school training.

CHANGES IN IOWA AUTO LAW

Esterville Democrat:—Iowa's new automobile law is now in effect. Occordjng to W. E. Deming special agent motor vehicle department. a very important change in the law, from the standpoint of his office is the transfer of the itle clause. The new law provides a penaly of a $5 fine if transfer of tilte is not registered within ten days after the tranaction. The treasurer also is ordered to refuse to grant a certificate of registration unless penalty is paid According to Mr. Deming many people buying cars do not register the transfer until they apply for their license the following year. Those who follow this practice thjs year will bef orced to pay $5 extra to be getthe transfer registered. The law provides for a refund of one-half the motor license fee paid if during the first half of the year the car is stolen and not recovered by the owner or if it is destroyed by fire or accident. It is a violation of the new for any dealer or other person to sell an automobile with lights or licenses not approved by state highway commjssion. The county treasurers aref urnished with lists of approved lights. Garage records, provided by then ew law, also are an important feature. A garage owner must keep for public inspection a record of all license numbers, engine and factory serial umbers, of all motor vehicles which jt takes in for rental. livery, storage or repair. The proprietor is ordered when he finds a motor with the number altered or obliterated to notify a peace officer and to hold the car for twenty four hours for investjgatin. All motor vehicles brought ito the state by resident owne rs must be registered in Iowa in the same month in which they arrive.)If a farmer from aother state moves onto an owa farm next March hes hould buy an Iowa license for his auto j that month. The ownership of a used car cannot be transfered, except to a dealer, until after thec ar has been licenesd in Iowa.

HANCOCK COUNTY ERECTS SNOW FENCING

Along the primary roads and some of the county roads of Hancock county, snow fences, have been erected This has been done in many counties over thes tate ad the experiece of counties thathave used this sort of snow break is that it is successful. All fences have been placed to block blowing snow from the north and west. It would be a sad state of affairs if our snow blockades of the coming winter would come from some other direction.

The Worth county board of supervisors has purchased 7,000 feet of slat fencing, to be placed along various spaces on the Jefferson highway, and along No. 9 runing east from Manly, as protection against sow drifts in the roadway. Steel posts have already been set on which the fencing will be strung.

Tama county supervisors have asked for bids for 10,000 feet of snow fencing. This fence will be used along some of the spots on the principal highways of the county that have caused inconvenience to traffic of large snow drifts in the past. This plan has been tried with excellent success in other counties of the state.

DOWN WHERE THE VEST BEGINS

Down where the belt clasps a little stronger,
Down where the pants should be a little longer.
That's where the vest begins.
Down, where you wish you were a little slighter,
Where the shirt that shows is a litlte whiter,
Where each day the buttons grow a little tighter—
That's where the vest begins.

Down where he pains are in the making,
And each heavy meal will soon start it aching.
That's where the vest begins.
Where each added pound is cause of sighing.
When you know in your heart that the scales aren't lying,
And you have to guess your shoes need tying—
That's where the vest begins.

A Real Mystery Story

The Blue Circle

By Elizabeth Jordan
Author of "The Girl in the Mirror"

How would you feel if, after you had gone to bed and extinguished the light, a blue circle began to dance about the room and you could find no explanation for its appearance? Suppose there were added to this, ghostly noises and the sound of a heavy body being dragged along the hall, while an apish arm holding a dagger appeared above your transom. It would test your nerve, wouldn't it? It tested the nerve of Renshaw, but he continued to occupy the room, although the weird visitations occurred every night, until he had solved the mystery.

One of Elizabeth Jordan's most fascinating tales.
